THE OLD YEAR.

Toll out, oh, bells! for the year just dead,
With its hopes, its joys, its sorrows now fled,
The tree with its flowers and leaves all shed.
Toll out, oh, bells!

Peal out, oh, bells! o'er the winter's night,
Peal out a melody clear and bright,
A pean of joy and hearts to delight.
Peal out, oh, bells!

Chime out, oh, bells! chime out and raise
Right to the heavens your notes of praise,
A prelude of brighter and happier days.
Chime out, oh, bells!

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 25.—At a regular weekly meeting of the Methodist preachers, to consider the Bishop Haven matter, only set of resolutions were offered declining to express an opinion on the third-term and deploring Haven's course.

Another set, expressing amazement at the alarm over such a small matter, denying Haven's right to speak for the whole church, and utterly opposing any connection of Church and State, were also presented. A lively discussion followed, when finally the whole matter was laid on the table, which is probably the end of the affair here.

NEW YORK, Dec. 29.—Rev. Henry Bohm, better known as Father Bohm, the oldest preacher of the Methodist Church in this country, and probably the oldest clergyman in the world, died yesterday at the house of his granddaughter, near Richmond, Staten Island. On the eighth of last June the one hundredth anniversary of his birth was celebrated at Jersey City by the Newark Conference, when Father Bohm submitted an outline of his own life and labors in the Methodist Church, and addresses were made by other clergymen.

The excitement of the occasion prostrated him, and though he rallied he was again seized with illness on the twelfth of this month, while attempting to preach in the village church at Richmond, Staten Island. He was born in Lancaster county, Pa. He joined the Methodist Church in 1797. He served in the ministry in Pennsylvania, Delaware and Maryland, and was the traveling companion of Bishop Asbury. For more than thirty years Father Bohm has been in the New Jersey Conference, and as early as 1812 was on the list of supernumerary preachers. He will be buried on Friday.

A special from Vienna to the Herald says the Secretary of state of the United States has transmitted to every European government a circular dated in Washington, asking an expression of the views of each foreign executive regarding the question of American intervention in Cuba.

The object of the American cabinet minister is the obtaining of data to be used in the preparation of President Grant's supplementary message to Congress. All the foreign governments have replied satisfactorily. England is ready to indorse the intervention movement at the present moment. The other nations express their willingness to support the intervention, but hesitate to take the initiative.

NASHVILLE, Dec. 30.—A terrific tornado passed twelve miles east of Pekman on Sunday evening, sweeping down whole forests in its pathway.

The force of the wind was so great that persons can now walk over the tops of trees where before was dense woods.

Twelve dwelling-houses and barns were blown down, and some shattered into fragments, the inmates barely escaping with their lives. Fences were all lifted and blown away.

At Mayfield two persons were crushed to death under the ruins of their houses. A negro was killed outright. At another point a man named Chicks and a Miss Searcy were killed, her sister was badly crippled.

The hotel at Reelfoot Lake was blown down, the guests barely escaping. Some were badly bruised by the flying timber.

Death and destruction left their trace along the entire track of the tornado, which made a noise heard for miles.

NASHVILLE, Jan. 1.—The new Fisk University, named in honor of Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, was formally dedicated to-day, in the presence of a large assemblage of people, white and black. Gen. Fisk presided and made the opening address, which was followed an earnest and eloquent plea for cordial relations between the races, for the education and elevation of the colored people, and for the cultivation of a liberal, patriotic feeling everywhere. Gov. Porter, Bishop McTyeire, Ex-Commissioner Smith, president of the Howard University, and others also made addresses. The building cost $120,000. The institute partakes somewhat of the nature of a normal college, as since its establishment ten years ago it has graduated about one hundred teachers and candidates for the ministry, all colored.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1.—The afternoon was clear and beautiful. The receptions at the White House and elsewhere were unusually brilliant. The centennial was ushered in throughout the country generally by the ringing of bells, blowing of steam, battles, firing of salutes and processions. No accidents reported so far.

NORWICH, N. Y., Jan. 1.—A salute of one hundred guns was fired here at twelve o'clock last night in honor of the centennial year.

NEW YORK, Jan. 1.—The United States frigate Trenton was successfully launched from the Brooklyn navy-yard to-day about noon. The launching was witnessed by thousands of people.

The resignation of the Rev. Hugh Miller Thompson, rector of Christ church, was accepted by the vestry on Thursday. Mr. Thompson will go to New Orleans to take charge of Trinity parish.

NEW YORK, Jan. 2.—A Berlin special dispatch says the Emperor and Empress, on New Year day, received the generals of the army, Prince Bismarck, with the cabinet ministers and the diplomatic corps. The Emperor, in reply to congratulations of Field Marshal Arnangel, referred in terms of thanks to God for the restoration of his health from the recent attack of illness. He praised the efficiency of the army, and assured the marshal, and through him the soldiers, of the durability of the peace which the fatherland now enjoyed.

Lord Odo Russell, embassador of Great Britain, congratulated the Emperor on behalf of the diplomatic corps. The Emperor in reply expressed the heartiest satisfaction at the good relations which exist between the German empire and foreign countries. The neighboring States were determined, he said, on the maintenance of peace. His majesty accorded a most gracious reception to the French embassador. Prince Bismarck appeared to be in excellent health, and was enthusiastically cheered by the people.

FOREIGN.

MADRID, Dec. 25.—A dreadful hurricane took place in the Philippine Islands on the thirtieth of November. Two hundred and fifty lives were lost, thirty-eight hundred dwellings destroyed, many cattle perished, and the crops are ruined.

PARIS, Jan. 1.—Bishop Dupanloup has gone to Rome to urge the canonizing of Joan of Arc.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 1.—Numerous bands of Khokand insurgents are preparing to resume hostilities. Fresh troops will be dispatched to the scene of operations this month.

MADRID, Jan. 1.—Gen. Jovellar, the new Captain General of Cuba, sailed from Cadiz yesterday for Havana.

BERLIN, Jan. 2.—The note drawn up by Count Andrassy, the Austrian premier, relative to reforms in Turkey has received the approval of Russia, and is understood to have been dispatched to the guaranteeing powers.

The note proposes equality of all religious denominations, and introduction of provincial and communal self-government, and that the first results of these changes in the insurgents provinces shall be the imposition of taxation by provinces themselves, and the abolition of serfdom.

Annual Message.

The New Orleans Times condenses Gov. Kellogg's message, sent to the Louisiana Legislature on Monday, January 3, as follows:

THE PUBLIC DEBT.

The executive first shows the condition of the debt at the commencement of his administration, January 1, 1873. The actual bonded debt of the State was then $24,000,000. There were also contingent liabilities amounting to $20,000,000. No bonds had been issued or liabilities created under these contingent acts, but they were on the statute-book and a constant source of danger. This all passed out of existence by the adoption of the funding bill and constitutional amendments, and by them the State was expressly prohibited from creating of extending contracts heretofore made for State aid.

By the retiring of bonds and warrants, and by the funding of bonds and warrants, the debt has been reduced $5,150,000. He shows that the Legislature of 1865 and 1868 issued $13,000,000 in excess of revenues. The expenditures during the three years of Warmoth's administration amounted to $20,000,000, while the total for the present administration is $9,700,000. There are between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000 in bonds whose validity is questioned in the courts, they being issued to the New Orleans and Chattanooga railroad.

The principal and interest of the new consolidated bonds are guaranteed by the new constitution; debt limited to $15,000,000, and taxation to 11 mills, and constitutional amendments provide that moneys each year shall be applied only to defray expenses of that year.

THE LEVEE QUESTION.

Upon the levee question he hopes for national aid, but recommends that the State work convicts on levees till aid is obtained. He regrets that the lower house of Congress seems indisposed to grant national aid to the Southern Pacific railroad.

He thinks it unfortunate that at this juncture there should be so little prospect of receiving that assistance which has heretofore been given with lavish hand to enterprises of this nature, and which this and other States have a right to ask both for railroads and levees.

He refers to the passage of the original Texas Pacific bill which he introduced when in the Senate, and to the land grant given to connect with the Pacific.

Thinks that, while Congress may not be disposed to grant any new money subsidies, it would not turn a deaf ear to a properly presented request to transfer to a company that would give sufficient guarantee to build a road the grant of land originally made for this purpose, which has not been utilized, and which will pay the cost of construction of the branch.

TAXES ON CHURCH PROPERTY.

He shows that the amount of church property not used for church purposes in the State amounts to $15,000,000—nearly all in the city. He recommends that this property be taxed, as it is now exempt. Out of the assessed value of $124,000,000 in the city, nearly $10,000,000 is exempt, it being church property, but used for other purposes.

He recommends a State Board of Equalization of Assessments—never yet known in the State—and shows that the results of proper equalization, and adding to the assessment rolls property that should be taxed, but used for church, will add $40,000,000 in value to the assessment rolls of the State.

THE RETURNING BOARD.

On the Returning Board question and the subject of elections he recommends a law that will protect the rights of all. He will approve any law passed upon that question. Such a law should be passed, he says, and recommends the subject to their attention.

SPECIAL FEES.

He recommends an appropriation for centennial purposes, and an amendment to the constitution limiting expenses of the General Assembly, reducing per diem from ten to five cents. He commends a constitutional amendment reducing salaries of all constitutional officers, on the ground that, as they are to be paid in money, officers of the State will receive more, even if salaries are reduced one-third, than they have heretofore.

He also recommends the reduction of fees of all State and parish officials, showing that by this a net saving of $400,000 or $500,000 per annum may be effected.

He shows that the cost of city schools is less than when the Democrats controlled the schools. Then it was $23 per capita; now it is $20. Then there were 11,000 pupils; now 14,000.

He shows that the cost of police is less than any previous year when the city controlled the police, and states that $400,000 is the sum for this year, which is $101,000 less than last year, and nearly $300,000 less than under previous administrations.

CITY AFFAIRS.

He shows the city debt to be $24,000,000, and recommends an amendment to the city charter abolishing the bureau system, and providing for the election of mayor, and aldermen—one from each ward, to serve without compensation.

Western Texas.

MR. EDITOR: Having been requested by so many persons to write them, and give them information of Texas, also supposing others would like to read and hear something of this grand country, I take the liberty of addressing a letter through the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

I left New Orleans with my little family on the twentieth of October, with the expectation of reaching San Antonio by the night of the twenty-second, so as to meet the Western Texas Conference, which began its session on the twentieth instant, but the steamship Harlan ran aground in Berwick's Bay, and thereby delayed us fifteen or eighteen hours. However, we reached the Conference-room at San Antonio in time enough to see the preachers, and met with a hearty reception from the Bishop down. We made notes of things all along the line, with the expectation of writing this letter.

For the present, traveling in Texas is rather rough, even from New Orleans to San Antonio. The lines are disconnected up through transportation. Every one must see to his baggage; however, there are transfer companies, but they are only responsible to certain points. The railroad from Galveston to Harrisburg runs through prairies the greater part of the way; but from Harrisburg to Kingsbury, the terminus of the San Antonio and Houston railroad, the country is grand and picturesque, increasing in beauty of scenery till the ancient city of San Antonio merges into view. This is one of the oldest cities in the Southwest, having data back for over a century and a half. It was here that the great and rustic patriot, Davy Crocket, and the brave and daring Jim Bowie lost their lives in the Alamo, from whence but one escaped to tell the horrible tale of the massacre. The walls of the famous old building are yet standing, and many other rock, moss-covered, ancient buildings, such as cathedrals, are still standing and in use. My memory retrospected the past while strolling around the old city with its narrow streets, narrow banquettes, and mixed inhabitants. The Alamo plaza represents Tivoli Circle, New Orleans. The city is said to number twenty thousand inhabitants. Its attractions are few, but the chief feature of its beauty consists in its irrigation. The San Antonio river gushes out in a large volume from the hills and rocks not far from the city, and has but few tributaries for some distance. The San Pedro springs supply it near its source. This river is a wonderfully beautiful stream, clear and rapid, and from its bed a long, green, flowing grass puts up and floats on the top of the water. The river meanders through the city, and affords water for many aqueducts, by which nearly the whole city is irrigated.

Conference adjourned on Monday, and I left for my new field of labor—the Cibolo circuit—"pronounced Cebolo," willow, and means buffalo—with which I am, so far, very much pleased. The soil of this country is very much like the alluvial lands of the Mississippi bottom, being black loam, black sandy and black waxy, but all fertile and rich. Produces corn, from 25 to 50 bushels per acre; cotton, from 1,000 to 2,000 pounds of seed cotton to the acre; wheat, from 12 to 30 bushels, and it is astonishing to say that as well as wheat produces here, the farmers do not cultivate it, a small patch. The sweetest potato I have ever eaten was made at home here. Potatoes produce from 100 to 150 bushels. Melons the finest in the world. Pears free of the spear, and there are thousands of pounds of the nut, according to seasons. Live oak, post oak, and several other kinds produce abundance of mast, from which the swine get fat. Cotton, oats, potatoes, rye, sugar-cane, and tobacco produce finely.

Fruit has been strangely neglected. By proper cultivation we can have a plenty of good fruit, such as peaches, pears, apples, plums, grapes, etc. This country is not only destined to be good for farming, but the greatest State in the Union. They have very good gardening generally, not better according to seasons.

In this part of southwest Texas, the inhabitants are mostly white, but there are negro colonies, Polanders, Germans and Mexicans. The white people are generally intelligent and religious. Plenty of churches and schools in each part.

Horses are very cheap and plentiful; worth from $20 to $75. A horse that is worth $75 or $100 here, in hard money, would be worth in Louisiana or Mississippi $150 or $200 in greenbacks. Cattle, sheep, hogs and goats worth in proportion to horses. Beef, 4 and 5 cents per pound. Poultry does remarkably well. The Brahmah and Shanghai chickens are scattered over the country, are very large, and good breeders. Turkeys, large and thrifty, and quite numerous. I will expect good turkey Christmas dinners. Ducks and geese will not do so well for account of scarcity of water.

Things are generally as cheap, and some cheaper than in New Orleans, including dry goods, groceries, hardware and furniture. Some things are remarkably cheap. Lands are worth from $1 to $20 for wild; and improved, from $5 upward, according to improvements.

The scenery of this delectable country surpasses any I have ever beheld. I have traveled over a small portion of its territory, but have not been idle in investigating its marvelous resources, and would be pleased to inform my friends and others of what I have learned in my limited peregrinations, if they desire it.

The lands resemble the grand undulations of great waters, and occasionally you are wonderfully struck with the rifle appearance of the surface, where it seems that the receding waters of the flood have left their eternal sign. In places the hills are mountainous, and a traveler may ascend by gradual gradation to such an altitude that he may be enabled to see miles and miles over the adjacent hills and valleys, covered with a most exquisitely beautiful growth of live oak, post oak and mesquite brush. We have no towering trees and dense foliage to screen the beauty of our landscapes, but just enough to lend to their excellence. There are barren spots or prairies, running streams, dry hollows, high hills, low valleys, many birds of various plumage to greet the traveler's weary eye. The atmosphere is sweet, light and dry. Climate warm the greater part of the year. Healthfulness unexcelled. The peculiar features of nature render it a home for many of the great denizens of the wilds, as well as smaller game and the birds of the air.

There are wild horses, deer, antelope, rabbits with ears six inches long, leopard cats, catamounts, wild cats, civic cats and others, squirrels, foxes, Lobo wolves, Kioga wolves, raccoons, wild hogs. All these are tolerably numerous. Then in some parts bears, cougars and leopards can be found, but are getting scarce.

Among the birds are geese, ducks, partridges, swans, brant, doves, pigeons, prairie hens, chaparral birds, Mexican eagles, hawks, all species paroquets, mocking birds, and a great many others. These all sing in their seasons.

Among the insects are grasshoppers, which make their appearance in the fall, every few years, at the first of October and eat the first planting; but the farmers generally make very good crops even after they destroy the first planting. There is a large red ants that damage the trees by cutting off the leaves to make their beds when their nests are near an orchard; but they can be destroyed. Some species of ant we have here build great mounds and little hills. Some form colonies, but are harmless.

Cotton worms eat the crop short some years. The boll worm is seldom seen. The cut worms damage the vegetables some years. These are all I can learn of all over the South, but from what I can learn do not damage the country here as in other States and some parts of this State.

The centipede is a small reptile, more on the worm order, and resembles what is commonly known as the "thousand legged." It has a sting, or rather pincher, like lyes, with which it bites, and wherever it crawls over the skin every place its feet touch the flesh sloughs away. The bite is almost death. There are but few of these terrible reptiles. I have seen but one. The terrantula is a large species of the spider. I have seen but few snakes here, yet am told that there are a good many; however, surely not half so numerous as in Louisiana. This is truly a new land, and hence architecture has not reached perfection. Even in the city of San Antonio or the towns, except the rich, the houses are not to be compared to the country farm-house of Mississippi or Louisiana. The great impediment and one of the drawbacks of this part of western Texas is the scarcity of lumber.

The three prominent questions in this section are:

1. Lumber is scarce. No timber out of which to make it except small oaks; but few mills to saw it, and consequently must be hauled from some railroad depot or depot on the Guadalupe, at a cost of from $15 to $25 per thousand, and the hauling extra. Though a very good house, compared with the houses in the country, can be put up at a cost of from $200 to $1,000.

2. Water must be hauled through the summer, or wells or cisterns dug, for man and beast, for there is no dependence on the creeks, though the rivers, or the most of them, afford water. In summer water is scarce, in the winter, for about four months, all the streams and hollows are pouring out into rivers when there are freshets from the mountains a hundred miles northwest, and the hills in the surroundings. Sometimes the flat lands are inundated for only a few weeks at a time. When we first came the water was nauseous to the taste, being limestone, but we are getting used to it. Wells may be found, and some springs, where the water is free stone. Getting used to the water is a test with most emigrants. The cost of building wells or cisterns may be about the same, or a little more than in Mississippi, according to situation. They use rock to wall them. Timber being scarce, rock is used for building dwellings, which makes good and durable houses. Lime can be burned on or near the premises. Stone masons reside about in the country. No pine, but the wood is very combustible and plentiful. Perhaps I should mention that we have several streams in this part of the west, viz.: San Antonio, Leona, Subinal, Nueces, Guadalupe, Cibolo (Cewillow,) Salado Salonghe, Madina and Hondo rivers; also San Pedro springs, and Santa Clara, Geronomo, Martinis, Rasco and San Sabo creeks. None of these streams are navigable.

Fencing, to my mind, is the only serious objection, and I am persuaded that not long in the future we will have the country fenced with [illegible] the cheaper and [illegible] fence especially [illegible] many [illegible] be [illegible]

I differ right from a little heard on some of the brethren, for he absolutely refused to hear a lecture on something before an open Conference. I have heard before years that Bishop McTyeire was a very deliberate man in pushing forward Conference work. I thought he was correct judgment until Monday morning. He seemed then to get into a most deliberate hurry. It was appalling to see him with his right hand upon a tall brother's throat and his left hand upon a small brother's throat, choking both down at once and putting the question before either could recover. It reminded one of Samson among the Philistines. He was in such a hurry to pass over the college question that he forgot all the other colleges, and they will have to go one year without Conference visitors.

On the way home there were twelve of us, labeled "half-card rates," but we got through safe and sound, in time to spend Christmas at home.

And now, Mr. Editor, to your great relief I bring these "Field Notes" to a final close. May your increase more and more in usefulness, bringing glory to God in doing good to men.

A CHANGE. Note from Bishop Marvin, D. D., Editor: Charles Reed is removed from Sharon circuit, and placed as junior preacher on Fayette circuit. Please announce this in the ADVOCATE. E. M. MARVIN.

OLD BARON BORUSCHILLO gave a louis to a charity fund, and the person receiving it said: "Ah, Monsieur le Baron, you give only a louis, and your son gave five!" "And reasonably enough," said the baron; "his father is a millionaire, and I am only a poor orphan."

A RUSSIAN PAPER states that a belief in the approaching end of the world has seized on the Cossacks of the Don. Many are giving up worldly affairs, wearing a shroud, and ordering their coffins, while numbers of men are repairing to Moscow to be consecrated priests.

CONSOLATION IN CHRIST.

[DR. H. F. HILLDRETH.]

If any consolation be
In Christ, the world-sick [illegible] prove
To weary hearts in misery,
Holding their griefs and care aloof
From that dear Helper—bowed by
Beneath the heavy weight of [illegible]
Yet seeking not the [illegible]
Of [illegible] which he [illegible]

If there is [illegible] on [illegible]
In Christ, or comfort in his love
Ah! where for sorrow [illegible]
Too heavy must our [illegible] prove
If we must bear its weight alone?
Feebly and [illegible]
Beneath this long suspense and fear
What if there were no comfort near

Alone, and all forsaken by
The hearts that we have served in need,
While keen reproaches multiply,
And gaping wounds afresh be bleed,
If in the Spirit we can see
No fellowship of sympathy,
No tender pity for our good
Then are we [illegible]

Comfort the hearts that ache and bleed,
O blessed Jesus! Soothe the woe
Of trembling lips that vainly plead
How rough these earthly paths and [illegible]
Thy pierced, wounded feet attest
Love [illegible] heavy-laden rest.
Draw all the weary souls to thee,
[illegible] thy consolation see.

Rev. Thomas Clinton.

The subjoined letter was written by Rev. Thomas Clinton to the widow of Rev. B. M. Drake shortly after the death of that minister. But before giving the extract I cannot forbear relating two anecdotes of that period, which I have heard from my father, and which forcibly illustrate a distinctive trait of his character—a natural or acquired composure of mind, an imperturbable equanimity of temper that could not be ruffled or hurried in any contingency. 'Twas his "to act calm on tumult's wheel," and to control excitement in the most trying circumstances. The motto of William the Silent, Tranquillus quassus undis, might well have been engraven upon his escutcheon. After the adjournment of the Chickasawha Conference the preachers, as usual, were all mounting in hot haste to start for their several appointments. These two Clinton and Drake had to travel together on horseback from the heart of Alabama to the western frontier of Louisiana, through an entirely unknown wilderness. Several of the brethren, acqualuted with the route, were going in their direction two or three hundred miles. Father was mounted and ready to start with the rest; but Bro. Clinton, finding that his horse had wallowed in the mud, was deliberately and leisurely grooming him. His colleague, nervously afraid of being left, was urging him to desist. "Do, Bro. Clinton, come on. The brethren will all leave us, and we don't know a step of the road." But no amount of urging could hurry him, or induce him to desist, until his task was thoroughly accomplished. The other incident occurred on this same trip. They came to the Mississippi river at Gibson's landing—found it very high and full of drift. Four of them Clinton, DeVinne, Drake and Alexander crossed with their horses in a small flat. In the middle of the river the boat became entangled in the drift, and was in great danger of upsetting. Two of the party DeVinne and Drake sprang to the oars and exerted all their strength to assist the ferryman: Alexander, frightened out of his wits, sat in a corner, crying and bewailing his untimely fate; while Clinton, holding the horses, contemplated the scene with undisturbed composure, and just at the most perilous juncture inquired of the ferryman what disposition he made of his pigs and chickens when the water got all over the country."

St. Bibles's Parish, 1840.

"The first Conference where I met my dear Bro. Drake was held December 5, 1822, at Bro. McRay's camp ground, on the Chickasawha river. Bro. Winans presided over some fourteen preachers. But few persons attended, as the weather was severe. At the close of the session our dear Bro. Winans remarked that there was one field of labor the western side of the Mississippi river—which would be found peculiarly oppressive—the dread of the Conference; and those young men sent there might rest assured he had selected them as having a faithfulness of purpose and a nobleness of soul cheerfully to do and suffer. 'Go, then, my dear young men, and prove yourselves worthy of the confidence reposed in you as men of God.' The most dreaded part of that field—the Attakapas and Rapides circuit—was assigned to Bro. Drake and myself. The rest of the country—the Ouachita circuit—was put in charge of Bro. William Alexander. Bro. Ebenezer Hearn was our elder.

"The feelings with which we received this appointment cannot be easily imagined. The country was vast, much of it very unhealthy; the facilities for travel very few, and we in feeble health. I was accustomed to toil and privations; but to my delicate co-laborer these things were new, and the prospect must have been startling to him. It was indeed a trying time; but the worst feature in the discouragement was that in all this vast field there were only forty-nine white and ninety colored members, though the country had been occupied as early as 1806 by Elijah W. Bowmith. But the commission was his, and that promise: 'Lo! I am with you.'

"At the request of Bro. Winans Bro. Hearn took charge of the work of Bro. Daniel DeVinne, who had preceded us, while he Bro. DeVinne accompanied us and introduced us to our field of labor. This was cheering. The four set out together. The night before crossing the river we enjoyed the rich hospitality of Sister Claiborne, near Natchez. Endeavors were made to dissuade us from crossing the river at that time, as the swamp was under water. But in the morning Sister Claiborne gave us $10 and her blessing, telling us not to fear. That evening, at sunset we crossed the river near Pine Ridge. The flat was designed for but two horses. The river being very full and much drift running, the ferryman protested against taking more. But it was too late to make two trips; so we all ventured in, and with hard toiling reached the opposite shore in safety. Our host of that night, having seen Bro. DeVinne before, proposed to call in the neighbors for worship. The congregation, besides ourselves, consisted of eight whites and about ten blacks. The service consisted of preaching, exhortation and prayer for mourners. The $10 contributed by Sister Claiborne covered our expenses thus far. After offering a servant to show us the way, our host handed back $5. After making a second start he called to us and handed $2 more, saying that half the ferry belonged to his son. A third time he called to us and handed back the remaining $2, saying: 'If I give $5 he might give $4.' We found much difficulty in crossing Tiger bayou and the Tensas swamp, but at length reached the highlands, found a resting-place, and the next day parted with Bro. Alexander. That was a hard day's ride, but at night, being denied a shelter, we rode on. At eleven o'clock we crossed a swollen stream, where poor, dear Bro. Nolly lost his life. The kind black man, who was carrying a torch for us, pointed out his grave near the road. We stopped, sighed and dropped a tear.

"After midnight we found a kind lady, who gave us a good supper and bed; and before sunrise next morning we had started for Alexandria, where we arrived the following night (Saturday), were cared for by Bro. P. H. Hunter, a good man, who had wealth and influence, and secured us an opportunity to preach three times the next day. We held meeting in the ball-room, and at the very hour appointed for the giddy dance. Bro. Hunter was formerly of Natchez, and his experience encouraged us much. When he moved to this wicked place he commenced business on a borrowed capital of $500, with a family to care for. So great was the disregard for the Sabbath that it seemed impossible to succeed in business without desecrating that holy day. But in the midst of temptations and persecutions he had been sustained and prospered, so that when we met him he was able to retire from business, while his cotemporaries who had desecrated the day had all failed.

"Bro. DeVinne made one trip with us round the circuit, and left us encouraged. We found our field of labor extending from some twenty miles above Alexandria to Ricco Island, in Berwick's Bay. The work was heavy, and many were the privations; but there were encouragements too. Bro. Thomas H. Lewis, steward of the circuit, was interrogated by one us to the motives of the strange man, named Drake, who, driven by rain, had asked shelter at his house; said his servants said the man was a Methodist priest; and they wanted him to pray with them. This gave Bro. Drake access to the family, to whom he preached, to the joy of the servants. The gentleman was surprised at his offering to pay for the entertainment. When Bro. Lewis explained our economy to him, and stated that it was the love of Jesus and desire for the salvation of men that constrained us, he replied: 'They go by as regularly as the mail, and always leave some good book with my servant for me.' Then, drawing the contrast with his own priest, he said: 'Ah! yes; all the world will yet become Methodists.' Once we fell in with a New Englander, who had for his companion a Mexican, who was said to be a man of intelligence and influence among his people. We gave him a Spanish Testament and a number of tracts, made him promise to study the book and keep it, to read the tracts and give them to his friends. He seemed delighted with his Testament, and said no man should take it from him. Eternity will tell the history of that book and those tracts. At the close of the year we held probably the first camp meeting on that district, at Bro. John Dunwoody's, who did much for its support. Bros. Hearn, Lane and Menefee were with us. It was painfully pleasing to see the anguish of soul in Bro. Drake's countenance. After each effort at the stand he would look at his brethren and at the small congregation until his very soul would seem to die within him. But a time of rejoicing came at the close of the sacramental feast on Sunday evening, when we felt that the recording angel had written: 'These were born there.'

"Our circuit had to bear all the expenses of the district, the other having failed. The dividend declared was $96 to the presiding elder and family, and $48 each to the preachers, clear of traveling expenses. This we thought was doing well! But, oh! we were well paid. Health restored, the consciousness that we had tried to do all to the glory of God, good had been done, and that we had souls as stars in our crown of rejoicing—this was abundant pay.

"We reached the Conference, at Natchez, December 25, in health. Though different fields of labor have been allotted us since that year, our eyes have been on each other, and I at least have ever reverted with pleasure to our association on the Attakapas and Rapides circuit. God has seen fit, in his wisdom, to call my dear brother first to his reward. But it cannot be long ere I am called hence, that fruit we may meet on the sunny banks of deliverance.

The Relation of Our Children to the Church.

IV.

But did Christ recognize infants as Christians?

In Matthew xviii, 1-5 it is said: "The disciples came unto Jesus, saying, Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven? And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them, and said, Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Whosoever, therefore, shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven. And whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me." There are three points in this text to which we desire to call attention.

1. The apostles wanted to know who was greatest in the kingdom of heaven. Now if we were asked who was the greatest man in the Mississippi Conference we would not feel at liberty to go into the Louisiana or Alabama Conference and select the greatest man in the Mississippi Conference. We should feel bound to make a selection out of the Conference designated, for that alone would answer the question propounded. Now Christ was not asked who was the greatest in the world or out of the kingdom of heaven, but who was the greatest in the kingdom of heaven.

Now if he had not recognized the child as being in the kingdom, and therefore "born of the Spirit," it would have been an inappropriate illustration. If the child was not in the kingdom Christ practiced the greatest deception, and the apostles showed unparalleled stupidity for allowing their question to remain thus clouded after Christ had attempted an answer. They should have said: "We did not ask thee who was greatest out of the kingdom, but who is greatest in the kingdom of heaven; and thou hast gone out of the kingdom and selected one to illustrate by." If such deception was practiced, my brethren, let us close the Bible and fear to follow its teachings. But God is true; Christ is God, and therefore the child was converted.

2. Are little children humble, and are they converted? If not, our becoming humble and converted would make us unlike little children. But Christ says our conversion will make us like them. If, then, our becoming humble and converted makes us like the child, it must also be humble and converted, else there could be no similarity between us.

3. Christ affirms that whosoever receiveth one such little child in his name receiveth him. Is it possible to receive Christ in the person of a sinner? Certainly not. Then, as Christ is to be received in the person of little children, and as he cannot be received in the person of a sinner, it follows that little children are not sinners.

4. Then the only remaining question to be settled is: Were these really little children? If so, the controversy is forever at an end. It is said he called a little child unto him. The term little is used five times in the six verses that comprise this narrative. And if this is not sufficiently strong, the language of Mark x, 14-16 is explicit enough for the most incredulous: "But when Jesus saw it he was much displeased, and said unto them, Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God; and he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them."

In John iii, 5 our Savior affirmed that "except a man be born of water, and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." And then in the above text he said that these "little children were of the kingdom of God." And that they were little children is evident from the fact that Jesus took them up in his arms, put his hand on their heads and blessed them. There is no evading the fact that these were small children, and that Christ designed to teach us that they were in the kingdom of God, and therefore in the church.

V.

If children are not converted, then there are duties imposed on both parents and children in the Scriptures that are impossible to be performed.

1. In Proverbs xxii, 6 parents are commanded to "train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Then in Ephesians vi, 4 the apostle commands parents to bring their children "up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." In Genesis xviii, 19 the ultimatum of this training is declared to be this: "To keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment."

Now how can an unregenerated person be thus trained? If this can be done, then is the doctrine of depravity false; for as well may an Ethiopian mother try to clothe her child with a white complexion as for a Christian parent to try to train a child to be a Christian if it has never been regenerated.

2. In Ephesians vi, 1-3 children are commanded to obey their parents "in the Lord," and are told that to such is the first commandment with promise, and are then told what the promise is. Now do we not all know that they cannot perform this obedience if they are in a state of nature? Then why make a promise on conditions that cannot be complied with? So we conclude that, for parents and children to be able to comply with the Scripture demands upon them, the children must be converted in infancy.

VI.

Finally we will devote a few moments to the objections that may be urged against the doctrine of infant regeneration.

1. It is alleged that the doctrine cannot be true because men have to be converted in adult age. This is very easily accounted for. Their relation to the church is not recognized by a great many professing Christians, and a great many who do so far comply with the Scripture injunction as to have their children baptized have the poorest conception of the relation of their children to the atonement. They do not know, and therefore do not teach their children that they are the children of God, in his church, and that they should walk humbly before God.

On the contrary, we hear nothing from the pulpit and the pews but that they are sinners, and if they do not repent and believe they will be lost. Every parent believes that if his child dies before it reaches the age of accountability it will be saved, and if it dies the pastor preaches its funeral, and says it is saved, because Christ died for it and it never committed any sin. Yet beyond this they do not care to know anything about the condition of its salvation. When all these influences are brought to bear upon their young minds, is it any surprising thing that their hearts are filled with unbelief, and that they have to "repent and do their first work over again?"

Let parents and the churches wake up to the truth of their religious status, and train them accordingly, and we will see a very different state of facts.

2. We are glad that serious inquiry is now going on in the minds of the people on this subject, and that opposition to infant baptism is rapidly dying away. And as the people advance in this direction, and preach and practice this doctrine, will the kingdoms of this world merge into the kingdom of God! But just so long as children are treated as only fit subjects for hell, by some churches and parents, may we expect to see the cause of Christ in the background.

OBITUARIES.

IN MEMORIAM.

Exegi Monumentum Aere Perennius.

In tones feeble with age, but grand with truth and eloquent with feeling, the patriarch preacher, a few days past, outlined the life and character of one of Claiborne's noblest sons. Where the Queen City of the West rests upon the bosom of the Father of Waters, Col. J. C. HUMPHREYS, after a brief illness, breathed his last, and long will that mighty river, "gulfward roll its sea-like flood" ere its waters shall chant a requiem for as clear a head, as pure a soul, as true a heart, as noble a gentleman. An honored name, and a memory at once tenderly cherished and lovingly reverenced, is the noblest monument that man can ask for himself, the richest heritage he can leave behind to those who loved him most. Such a monument, symmetrical in all its fair proportions, and grand in its finished perfection, did Col. J. C. Humphreys rear to himself by his life, full of honor, full of duties well and truly performed, full of tenderest care and love for all who looked to him for guidance, and full of all-embracing charity for humanity, under whatever garb or guise it plead for sympathy.

In a community prolific of grand types of mental and moral excellence, the character and capacity of John C. Humphreys won for him a singular pre-eminence in the love and respect of all who knew him, or were brought into association with him.

A ripe scholar and a life-time student, his exhaustless and varied wealth of intellectual attainment had been gathered from almost every source. He had enriched his mind with the gems of thought that brighten the page of ancient and modern classics, while the speculations, the sophistries and the eternal truths of philosophy had unfolded to him their hidden mysteries and their wondrous charms.

A graceful writer and a ready speaker, his facile tongue and pen wielded alike the weighty syllogisms of logic and the polished graces of the rhetorician. But most of all in conversation did he seem to command and control the garnered fullness of his intellectual resources. In conversation he pleased alike the child and the sage, he interested the young and the old, he riveted the attention of the idle and the student, and with a strange earnestness on ordinary topics, that became a noble enthusiasm on lofty themes, he roused languid indifference from its apathy of habit or ignorance, and vivified with his own vigorous vitality the pulseless mechanism of social Phariseism.

The rounded completeness of the life and character of Col. Humphreys precludes the minutiæ of detail. His manhood was but the realization of the fair promise of his youth; the evening of his life cloudless and beautiful, with but the softened effulgence of noon; a graduate with honor from the halls of college; a planter harmonizing the greatest success of the owner with the highest good and happiness of the slave; a soldier remembering not his own comfort or welfare, but enduring every hardship at the command of duty; a politician deliberate and wise in council, quick and weighty in action; a citizen pure in morals and upright in conduct; a neighbor free from jealousies or envyings, and prompt with kindly word and kinder deed; a friend who rejoiced with you in prosperity, and shared with you in adversity; a son, a brother, husband and father, blessed and blessing. Yet we may not intrude upon the privacy which circles those holy relations to describe with unequal pen their spotless beauty and rarest virtues.

Glenside, home of the loved and honored dead, synonym for open-handed plenty and Southern hospitality, lightly rest thy greenest sod upon him who made thee what thou wast and art! Spring's sweetest perfumes, trained by his hand to breathe their fragrance, shall linger lovingly there, and winter winds, sighing through thy forest-trees, shall come burdened with the offerings of many hearts to lay upon that grave, and time's ceaseless march shall still be ever bringing the incense of grateful hearts and loving memories to halo the spot where rests that grand Christian gentleman—John C. Humphreys.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

At a regular meeting of the Keachi Union Sunday school a committee, consisting of Misses Evelyn Fullilove, Nannie Hungerford and Elladie Graves, was appointed by the superintendent to prepare a suitable tribute of respect to the memory of our deceased friend and co-laborer in the Sabbath school, Miss EVIE A. LEE, who departed this life November 15, 1875. The committee submitted the following resolutions:

Whereas, An overruling Providence, too wise to err and too good to be unkind, has taken from us our dear friend, Miss Evie A. Lee, in the midst of her usefulness and early womanhood; therefore,

Resolved, That in this sad bereavement we recognize the hand, and humbly bow with submission to the decree of our heavenly Father.

Resolved, That we will ever cherish the memory and strive to imitate the virtues which adorned her Christian life.

Resolved, That we will miss, and never cease to regret and deplore, the loss of our sweet friend from our side, but will be consoled in the thought that her gentle spirit is now at rest with the angels; and though a dark gloom overshadows her home and the hearts of her friends, let us remember that our loss is her eternal gain, and not mourn as those who have no hope.

Resolved, That we tender to her family our heartfelt sympathies in this their deep distress and overwhelming affliction.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her family, and also to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

EVELYN FULLILOVE,
NANNIE HUNGERFORD,
ELLADIE GRAVES,
Committee.

W. C. THARIN was born in Marengo county, Ala., September 1, 1857, and died at Marion, Miss., August 30, 1875, aged seventeen years eleven months and fifteen days.

He was a grandson of the Rev. J. Crawford, formerly of the Alabama Conference; was left an orphan, and was raised by his grandmother, Mrs. Crawford. He was kind-hearted and moral from a child and gave promise to be useful in society; but, alas! the flower has withered, and we are left to mourn but not as those who have no hope.

He was attacked last June with a cancerous tumor of the face, from which he never recovered. He professed religion soon after the attack and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South about three weeks before his death. He bore his affliction with remarkable fortitude, often expressing a willingness to die and be at rest. He was a regular Sunday school scholar. He was also conductor of Marion Council, No. 58, of T. The following resolutions were adopted by said council, September 11, 1875:

Whereas, It has pleased an all-wise God, in his providence, to remove from our order our beloved friend and brother, W. C. Tharin, therefore, be it

Resolved, That in his death the council has lost a zealous and influential member, and an acceptable and efficient officer.

Resolved, That we tender our kindest sympathy to the bereaved family, and especially to his aged grandmother, and that this affliction may be sanctified to the good of all his family and friends.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the council, and that a copy be furnished the Temperance Banner for publication.

Respectfully,
W. T. HOLLAND, Chairman.

Prest. Marion Council, No. 58.

DIED, November 12, 1875, Bro. WILLIAM H. MCLIN, aged seventy-five years, seven months and fifteen days. He was born in Tennessee in the year 1800; moved to West Feliciana parish, La., where he married Miss Sarah Richardson in 1824. He and his wife joined the Methodist Episcopal Church shortly after their marriage, and both have been consistent members ever since. He moved to Livingston parish in 1850 (near Caney Branch), where he held the office of class-leader until he lost his sight. Having known him and his family since 1858, I can say of a truth that he was a man of faith. I was at his bedside ten days in succession previous to his death. The Sabbath before he died, having an appointment at Red Oak church, four miles from his house, I asked him if he had a message to send to the congregation, to which he replied: "Yes; tell them I am dying, but feel that I die fully reconciled to my God. I shall never meet them again in this world, but I want all of them to meet me in heaven." From that time he gave testimony every day until his death that he was saved, and the name of Jesus was precious to him. Peace was the pillow for his head. He leaves a widow and seven children behind him, all members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

H. G. WUNSCH, P. C.

DIED, on Friday night, October 1, 1875, at his home in Franklin county, Miss., after an illness of six months' duration, which he bore with Christian patience and endurance, Bro. ELLIAH SEAL, in the fifty-first year of his age. Bro. Seal was reared by Primitive Baptist parents, his father being a minister, and lived under the influence of the preaching and teaching of that church, but never united with them. In the month of September, 1874, at a meeting held at Salem church, Amite county, he united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Shortly after uniting with the church he sought and found peace in believing in Jesus. Bro. Seal had his faults, as well as other men, yet he was a friend to and loved the church of his choice; he was a friend to the preachers, and was always glad when they came. In losing him they, as well as the church at Homochitto chapel, have lost a friend. He leaves a devoted wife and many fond children and friends to mourn his loss.

THE VIPER AND THE LEECH.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

"Strange!" said a Viper to a Leech,
"How differently by men we're rated;
Tell me, my neighbor, I beseech,
Why you are sought and I am hated?"

"You," said the Leech, in prompt reply,
"If Fame be not a fickle detractor,
Men deem their enemy; while I Am cherished as their benefactor."

"What mighty difference they see,
That you should be the more inviting,"
The Viper answered, "puzzles me,
Since both alike are fond of biting!"

"We both are biters, to be sure,"
The Leech replied; "but let me mention
You bite to kill, and I to cure;
The difference lies in the intention."

MORAL.

To those who path us with intent
To do us good we should be grateful;
While those on spite and mischief bent
We well may shun as base and hateful.

The Mediterranean of Japan.

In the far East, lying between the islands which compose the empire of Japan—that ancient and mysterious realm but recently explored and introduced into the circle of nations by the greed or enterprise of Western commerce—there ebbs and flows and sparkles, with a gorgeous beauty truly oriental, a fair Mediterranean, known as the Seto Uchi, or Inland sea. Though smaller by far than its namesake of the West, it has many physical characteristics much more striking. It abounds in harbors, bays, snug anchorages, deep channels and sheltering islands. It basks in a climate almost perfect in its serenity and freedom from extremes. The mariner, fresh from the chilly spring-time and ungenerous summer of our own Islands, navigates its waters in June with a cloudless sky, unprotected by awnings, and fearless of the sun, which at the same season off the Spanish or Italian coasts bents down on those who sail beneath it with an insupportable and even deadly fierceness. Here are no tideless waters, a strong ebb and flow, running to and fro between fairy islets, and round verdant capes, with almost headlong fury, purifies and freshens every inlet with an influx from the wide Pacific ocean without. Remarkably free from storms and rain, the frailest fishing boat is pushed fearlessly out to the mid-waters of its widest parts. No storm blows across it to render life scarcely worth having throughout the length of many an autumn day. In fine weather the bosom of the sea does not undulate sufficiently to rock even the smallest bark; yet there is no lack of breeze. It should be the very paradise of pleasure-seekers.

The scenery is truly lovely—a Devon foreground set in a background of the Alps. Lofty mountains bound the landscape. In summer, light-fleecy clouds hover about the higher slopes; while through dips in the stately range of heights glimpses are caught of still higher peaks beyond, bathed in a violent haze, or dissolving into the misty distance. Fronting the water are pine-clad hills, with the varied and fantastic outline natural to a once volcanic region. Their sides are seamed with valleys, in which nestle pleasant villages, half hid in the variegated foliage of shady trees. The temperate zone meets the tropics in groves and copses of pine, and fir and camphor-wood, and graceful bamboo. Above, the blue waves in chisteps, while underneath the steeps are all aglow with azaleas in crimson masses. The quaint gables and high-peaked roofs of temples peer out from leafy groves, traversed by glades of brilliant green; streams gushing from the rocks trace silvery lines upon the abrupt hillsides. Rocky promontories, festooned with creepers, and crowned with clumps of firs, jut out into the sea, and divide white sandy beaches, or form placid little coves and bays. Here a huge mass of gray granite stands out as a monument of some ancient convulsion of the soil; there a succession of grassy knolls and hanging woods, undulating, backward from the shore, introduce a park-like feature into the panorama. Art completes the picture. The slopes of the mainland, and of innumerable islands, are clothed with fields of waving corn, of a really golden hue in the dazzling June sunlight. The style of cultivation is high. The fields are arranged in terraces, which climb in a long series of steps the sides of hill and ravine to a goodly height above the lower ground. Here and there the fields are dotted with the brilliant emerald of tiny patches of the young rice plant. Blue wreaths of smoke rise from bonfires of brushwood, lighted to lessen the sharp-bowed craft hauled up on the beach below. The sea is studded with the boats of fishermen, and flecked with the white sails of scores of native trading vessels.

That like to rich and various gems inlay
The unadorned bosom of the deep,

The Seto Uchi cannot, of course, compare in historic interest with the great inland sea of the West, which washes the classic shores of Italy, of Greece, of Syria and of Egypt. Yet when its story becomes known to us it will probably reveal a series of events almost as deeply interesting as any in the history of the Eastern world. Till yesterday it divided the domains of the great peers of a feudal monarchy. It runs by the seaport of the long-secluded capital of a line of fainéant sovereigns, whose mayors of the palace ruled by consent of a proud aristocracy of great feudatories—in a vast city further east, the millions of inhabitants of a populous empire. Its shores are studded with busy cities, with laro-mid castles of daimios, who, still living, but a few years ago wielded an almost independent sovereignty over the rich and thickly populated provinces that inclose it; and with scenes memorable in the first period of the intercourse with intrusive strangers from the West. Its islands are as rich in legends as the castle-crowned crags of the Rhine, or the sea-girt rocks of the Tyrrhenian sea. The greater part of it is never, or but rarely, traversed by an European keel. In these days of extended travel it offers to the visitor the combined attractions of a pleasant climate, an orderly state and untrodden grounds.—Fortnightly Review.

Twins.

Francis Galton, writing on twins, in Fraser, states that he had received about eighty returns of cases of close similarity, in many of which were curious and instructive details:

The manner and address of the thirty-five pairs of twins is usually described as being very similar, though there often exists a difference of expression familiar to near relatives, but unperceived by strangers. The intonation of the voice when speaking is commonly the same, but it frequently happens that the twins sing in different keys. Most singularly, that one point in which similarity is rare is the handwriting. I cannot account for this, considering how strongly handwriting runs in families, but I am sure of the fact.

One of my inquiries was for anecdotes as regards the mistakes made by near relatives between the twins. They are numerous, but not very varied in character. When the twins are children they have commonly to be distinguished by ribbons tied round their wrist or neck; nevertheless, the one is sometimes fed, physicked and whipped by mistake for the other, and the description of these little domestic catastrophes is usually given to me by the mother in a phraseology that is somewhat touching, by reason of its seriousness. I have one case in which a doubt remains whether the children were not changed in their bath, and the presumed A. is not really B., and vice versa. In another case an artist was engaged on the portraits of twins who were between three and four years of age; he had to lay aside his work for three weeks, and, on resuming it, could not tell to which child the respective likenesses he had in hand belonged. The mistakes are less numerous on the part of the mother during the boyhood and girlhood of the twins, but almost as frequent on the part of strangers. I have many instances of tutors being unable to distinguish their twin pupils.

No less than nine anecdotes have reached me of a twin seeing his or her reflection in a looking-glass, and addressing it in the belief it was the other twin in person. I have many anecdotes of mistakes when the twins were nearly grown up. Thus: "Amusing scenes occurred at college when one twin came to visit the other; the porter on one occasion refusing to let the visitor out of the college gates, for, though they stood side by side, he professed ignorance as to which he ought to allow to depart."

I have four or five instances of doubt during an engagement of marriage. Thus: "A. married first but both twins met the lady together for the first time, and fell in love with her there and then. A. managed to see her home and to gain her affections, though B. went sometimes courting in his place, and neither the lady nor her parents could tell which was which." I have also a German letter, written in quaint terms, about twin brothers who married sisters, but could not easily be distinguished by them.

I have a few anecdotes of strange mistakes made between twins in adult life. Thus, an officer writes: "On one occasion, when I returned from foreign service, my father turned to me and said, 'I thought you were in London,' thinking I was my brother—yet he had not seen me for nearly four years, our resemblance was so great."

The next and last anecdote I shall give is perhaps the most remarkable of those that I have. It was sent me by the brother of the twins, who were in the middle of life at the time of its occurrence. "A. was again coming home from India on leave; the ship did not arrive for some days after it was due; the twin brother B. had come up from his quarters to receive A.; and their old mother was very nervous. One morning A. rushed in, saying: 'O mother, how are you?' Her answer was: 'No, B., it's a bad joke; you know how anxious I am;' and it was a little time before A. could persuade her that he was the real man."—Appleton's Journal.

WINTER AMUSEMENTS.—It is an easy thing to establish, either in country or city neighborhoods, the reading club. Twenty-five young men and women of congenial tastes, habits and social belongings can easily meet in one another's house, once during every week through five or six months of the year. With a small fund they can buy good books, and over these, read aloud by one and another of their number, they can spend an hour and a half most pleasantly and profitably. They will find in these books topics of conversation for the remainder of the time they spend together. If they can illuminate the evening with music, all the better. Whatever accomplishments may be in the possession of different members of the club may be drawn upon to give variety to the interest of the occasion. This is entirely practicable everywhere. It is more profitable than amateur theatricals, and less exhaustive of time and energy. It can be united with almost any literary object. The "Shakespeare Club" is nothing but a reading club, devoted to the study of a single author; and Shakespeare may well engage a club for a single winter. Such a club would cultivate the art of good reading, which is one of the best and most useful of all accomplishments. It would cultivate thought, imagination, taste. In brief, the whole tendency of the reading club is toward culture—the one thing, notwithstanding all our educational advantages, the most deplorably lacking in the average American man and woman.—Scribner's Magazine.

A TAKING PAPER.—The sheriff's warrant.

THE TESTIMONY OF PHYSICIANS. A few months since a memorandum appeared in the public journals signed by two hundred and sixty-six distinguished physicians and surgeons engaged in hospital practice in Great Britain, in which an earnest appeal was made to the medical profession at large to be careful, when using alcohol as a remedial agent, so to employ it as not to give ground that can afterward be construed into a sanction for its excessive or even for its habitual dietetic use. In this memorandum there appeared an altogether unqualified expression of the opinion that the value of alcohol as an article of diet is immensely exaggerated, and that medical practitioners are bound, in the face of the grievous evil that results from its indiscriminate and injudicious use, to inculcate very strenuously habits of the utmost moderation. Shortly afterward a letter was printed, also in the public journals, addressed to the Archbishop of Canterbury, by Sir Henry Thompson, the well-known surgeon of University College Hospital, in which he states his own assured conviction that there is no greater cause of moral and physical evil in this country than the habitual use of alcoholic beverages, even when restricted to an amount which falls far short of the quantity required to produce drunkenness, and that is conventionally held to be quite within the limits of strict moderation. Sir Henry further adds that such habitual use injures the body and diminishes the mental power to an extent that few people are aware of; and that it is, in reality, the determining cause of a very large proportion of the most dangerous and painful maladies that come under the care of the surgeon, and also of much of the deterioration of the qualities of the race that capacitate men for endurance in the competition which must exist in the nature of things, and in which the prize of superiority falls to the best and the strongest.—Edinburg Review.

SUICIDE AMONG SCORPIONS.—In a recent number of Nature Mr. C. Bidie records the following fact with regard to the common black scorpion of southern India:

"One morning a servant brought to me a very large specimen of the scorpion, which, having stayed out too long in its nocturnal rambles, had apparently got bewildered at daybreak, and been unable to find its way home. To keep it safe the creature was at once put into a glazed entomological case. Having a few leisure moments in the course of the afternoon, I thought I would see how my prisoner was getting on, and to have a better view of it the case was placed on a window, in the rays of a hot sun. The light and heat seemed to irritate it very much, and this recalled to my mind a story which I had read somewhere that a scorpion, on being surrounded with fire, had committed suicide. I hesitated about subjecting my pet to such a terrible ordeal, but, taking a common botanical lens, I focused the rays of the sun on its back. The moment this was done it began to run hurriedly about the case, hissing and spitting in a very fierce way. This experiment was repeated some four or five times with like results, but on trying it once again the scorpion turned up its tail and plunged the sting, quick as lightning, into its back. The infliction of the wound was followed by a sudden escape of fluid, and a friend, standing by me called out: 'See, it has stung itself—it is dead!' and sure enough, in less than half a minute life was quite extinct. I have written this brief notice to show that animals may commit suicide, and that the poison of certain animals may be destructive to themselves."

IF NEVER DRIES UP.—I was staying at a poor village near the sea coast, where the people had to bring all their water from a well. At all hours of the day little feet and great might be seen passing along a narrow lane, with every kind of pitcher, kettle and can, to the well.

"Is this well ever dry?" I inquired.

"Dry? Yes, ma'am; very often in hot weather."

"And if it dries up?"

"Why, then we go to the spring higher up—the best water of all."

"But if the spring higher up fails?"

"Why, ma'am, that spring never dries up—never. It is always the same, summer and winter."

I went to see this precious fountain which "never dries up." The water was clear and sparkling, running down the high hill, with the steady flow and soft murmur of fullness and freedom. It flowed down to the wayside, and was within reach of every child's little pitcher. The thirsty beasts of burden knew the way to the spring that "never dries up."

It reminded me of the water of life and salvation flowing from the "Rock of Ages," and brought within reach of all men by the gospel of Jesus Christ. Every other brook will grow dry in the days of drouth and adversity, but this heavenly spring never fails.

THE way in which church edifices are built nowadays really necessitates a new formula of dedication. How would this read: "We dedicate this edifice to thee, our Lord and Master; we give it to thee and thy cause and kingdom, subject to a mortgage of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($150,000?) We bequeath it to our children and children's children as the greatest boon we can confer on them (subject to the mortgage aforesaid), and we trust that we will have the grace and the money to pay the interest and lift the mortgage. Preserve it from fire and foreclosure, we pray thee, and make it abundantly useful to thyself—subject, of course, to the aforesaid mortgage.

WE have social strengths. Our affection toward others creates a sort of vantage or purchase which nothing will supply. I can do that by myself which I cannot do alone. I can say to you what I cannot first say to myself. Other men are lenses through which we read our own mind.—Emerson.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Methodist Episcopal Church has over 140 Christian women engaged daily in spreading gospel truth in India.

—In England there are 1,938 Baptist churches, with 185,780 members. Of these churches 1,194 have less than 100 members.

—Yang-Hok-Ching-to-Mi is the title of a Chinese Young Men's Christian Association in San Francisco, with a membership of 250.

—The Universalist clergymen of Boston and vicinity have organized an association similar to those of the Baptist and Methodist clergy. It is to be known as the "Ballou Ministerial Association."

—The missionaries of the American Board who for some time labored at Innsbruck, in the Tyrol, have transferred their station to Gratz, in Styria, about eighty miles southwest of Vienna. A native evangelist will occupy the post at Innsbruck. The chief success has been in the sale of a large number of copies of the Holy Scriptures.

—The venerable Bishop Smith, president of the Protestant Episcopal House of Bishops, has written a letter expressing a hope of an ultimate organic union of the orthodox churches. Among the greatest obstacles at present to such union, he recognizes the Episcopal doctrine of the divine right of the episcopacy, and the Baptist doctrine of adult immersion.

SHOULD FEEBLE CHURCHES CONTRIBUTE TO THE SUPPORT OF FOREIGN MISSIONS?—The last Foreign Missionary has an able article on the "reasons why our feeble churches as well as the larger should contribute to the cause of foreign missions?" It says: "The hundreds of our feeble churches have themselves received mission funds, some of which were given by very poor people. The widow's mite, and the gifts of poor, struggling needle-women have helped to give the gospel to farmers who have comfortable homes, and some of whom have large farms. With what emphasis, then, should our Savior's words, 'Freely have ye received, freely give,' resound in the ears of every congregation that has received the help of the church. The Sandwich Island churches, though they still receive help from the American Board, are, out of their deep poverty—such poverty as never appears among us—sustaining a vigorous foreign work in the regions beyond."

—There are "churches connected with the Marash station of the American Board in central Turkey. Four of these are in the city of Marash, and are entirely self-supporting. Two of the others, in villages, are half and two others one-third self-supporting. The First Church at Marash has 405 members, and to this number 56 were added by profession in 1874. The average winter congregation is 800, and the benevolent contributions for 1874 amounted to $1,344. During the past year this congregation has erected a large school building. The young men's prayer meetings have been a marked feature in all the churches, and have been the means of a revival, through which 20 new converts were gathered in. Outside of the city the prospect is also mainly cheering. A young station, like Hadjin and Sis, a very considerable portion of the community has become Protestant. We take these detailed statements from the Missionary Herald, in order to show how really American Christianity has been transplanted, is thriving in the ancient and wasted gardens of the primitive church.

—The aborigines of Australia, numbering at present 30,000 or 40,000, are perhaps the most degraded race on the face of the earth. No religion exists among them, further than a vague notion of the existence of a good and of an evil spirit. They have no worship and no sacrifices. Their language contains no equivalent terms for love, faith, forgiveness and truth. Marriage exists only in name. Infanticide, conjoined with cannibalism, prevails. Through the advent of white settlers into the country their vices have been deepened down to the verge of idiocy. In 1849 Moravian missionaries settled among them, being supported by a committee from the colonial churches. In 1850 the first convert, Nathaniel Pepper, was baptized. The event created so great a sensation that a public meeting was called at Melbourne, with the colonial governor in the chair, in order to express the joy of the Christian community. Since that time the work of conversion has gone on. A great many of the "blacks" have settled at the two industrial stations, Ebenezer and Ramahyuck. The change in their habits has been remarkable. When the first church was built it was doubted whether the aborigines would remain about the place long enough to use it. Now almost every seat is regularly occupied. In the official report given by the governor, after a visit to Ramahyuck, it is stated: "Their healthy and cheerful appearance, their cleanliness, and the condition of the station as a whole, which, with its pretty flower and fruit gardens, is an oasis in the otherwise unoccupied district, made a favorable impression on all the visitors." The school at this station, which is under government inspection, has for a series of years stood highest on the list in the whole colony, receiving 100 per cent. The preparation of arrowroot by the natives was awarded a medal at the Vienna Exposition. In liberal offerings and observance of the Sabbath, as well as in general improvement in their habits, under close discipline by the missionaries, they vindicate their right to be considered Christians. On many dying-beds their confession of faith has been as clear as that of believers among more favored races. While the Australian Papuans are in their heathen state rapidly dying out, the decline of population has been arrested at the mission stations, and after twenty-six years of toil it is safe to expect an abiding triumph of the gospel in the Australian mission-field.—Independent.

Our Young People.

THIS BABY OF OURS.

There's not a millesom of beautiful May,
Silver of daisy or daffodil gay,
Nor the rosy bloom of apple-tree flowers,
Fair as the face of this baby of ours.

You could never find, on a bright June day,
A bit of fair sky so cheery and gay,
Nor the haze on the hills in noonday hours,
Blue as the eyes of this baby of ours.

There's not a murmur of waking bird,
The clearest, sweetest that ever was heard
In the tender lesh of the dawn's still hours,
Soft as the laugh of this baby of ours.

There's no gossamer silk of dewsped corn,
No slightest thread of the shy wood-fern,
Not even the cobweb spread over the flowers,
Fine as the hair of this baby of ours.

There's no fairy shell by the sounding sea,
No wild rose that buds on the windy lea,
No blush of the sun through April's soft showers,
Pink as the palms of this baby of ours.

May the dear Lord spare her to us, we pray,
For many a long and sunshiny day,
Ere he takes to bloom in paradise bowers
This sweet bit darling—this baby of ours.

In God's Care.

FROM THE FRENCH.

One night when Mr. Hansen, a rich Swedish merchant, was visiting Pomerania with his son, he took lodgings at a neat-looking inn, where many years before he had passed three days. It had been pleasant weather then, but now the wind raged fiercely, and the sea lashed itself into fury. The hardiest men had abandoned the coast, and, shivering with the cold, had returned to their homes. Edmund, the son of the merchant Hansen, went out to look about him, wrapped in a great woolen cloak, but soon came in and said to the white-haired landlady:

"What a fearful weather, Mother Martens! No one in his senses would venture on the sea just now."

"That is true enough, young man; no good would come of it," replied the old woman.

"You could very easily weather such a storm," said Edmund, smiling. "Such a voyage as you once made is not taken very often. My father has told me about it. You are shielded from wind and wave."

"Hush!" said the old woman; "we are everywhere under the eye of God. Those whom he keeps are well kept."

"That is true, Mother Martens," observed the merchant. "You have had proof of the divine power and goodness. The storm is still raging; let us close the shutters, and hear the story from the beginning to the end. Edmund will be pleased to know all about it."

"I do not like to speak of myself," said the old woman; "one should leave that to others. However, you are right, sir; this narration may be useful to the young gentleman, and, as there is nothing more to be done outside, I will tell you how God gave me a proof of his watchful care."

At these words the good old woman closed the shutters, put the kettle on the fire, and when the water was hot, and the tea served, she began:

"You see, sir, I am an old woman, I have lived many long years in this strange country; but the day I left my own land is as distinct in my memory as if it were yesterday. The cabin of my parents was situated on the sea-coast, in the southern part of Sweden. I have never possessed riches. Our greatest treasure was a cow, spotted black and white. We had raised her, and she was very precious to us. It was my business to lead her every day to pasture. In summer it was very pleasant, but not so in winter. My father was a fisherman, and when the snow covered the country, and the sea was frozen over, we suffered much. Once we might have died of hunger if it had not been for the cow. The poor creature was the object of all my care.

"One time the winter was more severe than usual, the snow was piled up in heaps all around our cottage, and I, scarcely sixteen years old, longed for the spring as a bird for the sun. At last, one cold, foggy, misty day, the sun drew me to the door, and I led our cow along the shore, where here and there, at the foot of the 'dunes' banks of sand, were some tufts of grass. The cow bounded with joy, and I was truly happy. Suddenly she ran toward the sea, which was covered with thick ice, that cracked and broke as she moved over it. She reached a large cake of ice, and, standing on it, attempted to drink. I had gone with her. I kept close to her side, and saw in the distance great blocks of ice carried away by the tide. Immediately I felt the ice under us move. I called to the cow and tried to drive her to the shore, but she had not drank enough, and would not stir. I cried aloud; I seized the cow and drew her with all my strength; and, I shudder to think of it, the ice on which we were separated from the shore began to drift out toward the open sea.

"To right and left, before and behind, the ice was carried away. I looked around. I was going farther and farther from the land. I was numb with fear. The ice collected in heaps as it moved slowly or heavily along; and that on which we were floated as a small boat. The cow shook with cold. The swift tide pressed on us and drove us ahead. Darkness came on. The sun had set long ago, and now it was black night. The waves broke on our ice cake. I fell on my knees—I prayed. The cow had lain down. I stretched myself close to her; this warmed me. Then I thought of my father, my mother, who would look for me so anxiously. I was filled with grief, and I slept, exhausted from fatigue.

"In the middle of the night I awoke shivering and my teeth chattering. O what a spectacle was before me! On all sides where my eye rested nothing but the water, nothing but the dreadful sea. The stories about water elves or fairies that I had heard told by sailors came to my mind. I seemed to see monsters and phantoms come from the bottom of the abyss. I fancied I saw strange figures floating like clouds toward me. Then I shut my eyes and prayed again. When I opened them I saw a bright star ahead. I looked again. It was a light, and it surely moved. A boat with men in it was coming toward us. 'O Nannette!' I cried, 'stand up.' It seemed to me she ought to shout for joy; but the poor shivering creature did not move. My fingers were numb and stiff, but I tore off my apron and waved it in the air; then—then—"

"Then," interrupted Edmund with glowing eagerness, "they reached you and took you home—you and Nannette?"

"I do not know how it was," said the old woman, whose eyes were filled with tears. "I remember only voices, and then finding myself on a big ship, and then being home again in the dear cottage, and father thanking the blessed God and rubbing Nannette; and then the happiest moment when father said: 'Oh! my daughter, I felt sure you would pray, and God would hear you.' My young friend, with God to help me, I was as safe on that open sea as I am now by this bright, warm fire."

"Aye, aye!" said the merchant quietly; and the son, looking intently at the dancing blaze, said: "I thank you, Madam Martens. You have taught me a lesson that I shall remember for many a day."—Early Days.

From Our Little Friends.

LONGWOOD, LA., Dec. 1, '75.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I see that other little boys and girls write to you, so I thought I would write also. I am a little boy, but am going to school, and like my books very much, especially my geography. We have a nice church now, and it will be much better when it is finished. We have preaching three times a month. The Presbyterian minister preaches twice, and the Methodist only once. If the people are able they want to get a station preacher next year for our church and Mooringsport. We have no Sabbath school yet, but mamma teaches me at home, which is a great advantage. I could tell you a heap more, but will close for this time. Yours truly,

HOW BAMBOO CAME TO JAPAN.—Every nation owes something of its prosperity to the birds, and every nation with a written language has some acknowledgment of the obligation in its literature. The following translated for the Boston Commonwealth is a beautiful legend of the "sunrise land:"

"Nearly one thousand years ago a little female bird flew into the Mikado's garden, holding in her bill a very small seed, which she tried to bury in the ground. The Mikado wished to know what kind of seed it was, so he ordered a girl to get it from the ground, but every time she approached it the bird suddenly flew down and took the seed in her bill and carried it away. As soon, however, as the girl disappeared, the bird returned and again buried the seed. The Mikado gave very strict orders that no one should touch it.

"Just one month after the day on which the bird first visited the Mikado's garden he found, on the spot where the seed had been buried a plant having a pair of small green leaves, different from any he had ever seen before. The bird now came to the plant, and sang joyfully, and plucked out her feathers and placed them around it to protect it; and, no matter what the weather was, she daily visited the plant.

"About this time a great many curious and useful things were imported from China, such as books, pens, bows and arrows, junks, etc. The Mikado thought it very probable that the bird came from China, as when he first saw her flying she was coming from the west.

"By the Mikado's order the new plant was carefully tended and watched, because he thought it might some time become very useful to the Japanese. When it had grown about twenty inches high a single Chinese letter was discovered on the stem, and two letters were also found on the same stem to the right of it. These letters spelled the word "Ta-ke," which the Mikado decided was the name of the plant. "Ta-ke" is the word that is translated into English as bamboo.

A DEAD HAWK AND A LIVE ONE. "What a commotion you are making!" said a sparrow to a flock of small birds chattering and twittering round the body of a hawk that lay still and cold on the ground.

"He's dead, he's dead!" they cried; "we are safe from him now; he will never frighten us again."

"Frighten us!" cried the sparrow, hopping up to the dead enemy and giving him a contemptuous little peck. "Speak for yourselves, my friends; as for me, I never saw so much to be frightened about in the fellow. After all, as you may see, he is but a bird; he has wings and a head, and legs and claws, and so have we. A close view shows one the absurdity of needless alarm; for my part, I intend in future to show the whole tribe—. Why, where are you all going?" he exclaimed, stopping in his harangue, as the small birds suddenly took wing.

"Off as fast as we can," they said; "the hawk's mate is hovering above, and, as we haven't received your new light, we prefer going out of her way. You can stay and tell her your mind."

"Hawk's mate? You don't say so!" screamed the sparrow. "Here; let me pass, pray!" and he brushed through the throng, and never rested till he had gained his hiding-place.

THE parishioners of a clergyman in Scotland, in expressing to him their aversion to the use of manuscript sermons, urged: "What gars ye take up your bit papers to the pulpit?" He replied that it was best, for really he could not remember a sermon, and must have his paper. "Weel, weel, minister, if ye canna remember the sermon, then dinna expect that we can."

Our Advocate.

With this issue begins another volume—volume 2. The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE was started in 1851. A specimen number was issued June 30, 1850, and the regular publication began February 5, 1851. Rev. H. N. McTyeire (now Bishop) was the first editor. Rev. T. C. Gillespie succeeded to the tripod in June, 1858, and served until the war compelled the suspension of the paper in 1862. Publication was resumed in 1866, Dr. Keener as editor, until he was elected Bishop in May, 1870.

Up to January, 1871, the paper was published by an executive committee appointed by the joint publishing committee of the three patronizing Conferences. In January, 1871, the publishing committee entered into a contract with R. J. Harp, who engaged to publish the paper, assuming all risks and expenses, and to account for the property turned over to him at the date of the contract. By the terms of the contract the appointment of the editor and the general control remain in the hands of the publishing committee of the Conferences, the right of dissolving the contract being reserved to either party on giving twelve months' notice. Under this arrangement the Conferences incur no risk, and they are furnished with a weekly paper for which no financial obligations are assumed.

Thus far the publisher has given them a paper inferior to none in the connection, in the quality of paper, typography and general finish. Up to the present the publisher has made nothing. The times have been trying in the extreme, and it has been impossible to make close and prompt collections for subscriptions and advertising. The publisher has reduced the subscription, from January 1, 1879, to the old figure of $2. This seemed to be the judgment of the brethren of the patronizing Conferences, so far as we could gather from personal intercourse with them, and in deference to them, as well as with regard to the reduction of several other denominational papers, this measure has been adopted. A heavy loss will be the result unless the subscription list can be largely increased at once. This increase has been counted upon, and we trust that it may be realized. Our main dependence is, of course, upon the preachers. We would urge them to bring the ADVOCATE before their congregations frequently, and to solicit subscriptions on all suitable occasions. Subscribers who wish to do good, and feel an interest in the paper, can do much by showing the ADVOCATE to their neighbors, and by inducing them to subscribe. We appeal to all, to every friend of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE—to preachers, presiding elders, pastors, laymen, to our Methodist ladies, and to our little friends of the Child's Corner. Will they not all lend a helping hand, and send in the new subscribers, by hundreds, during every week of the new year?

So far as size, material and mechanical execution are concerned, the paper is very good as it is, but the publisher will improve upon it if means are secured for the purpose. In the editorial department we have by no means reached our ideal. With more space, more time, the means of employing assistance, we imagine a much better paper could be gotten up. We are aiming to make the very best paper that circumstances permit, and we hope it will grow better every year.

As nearly as may be, it will be a paper for the family, and sufficient in itself to meet the wants of the general reader who takes no other paper. The secular news, foreign and domestic, will be served up fresh from the daily telegraph; the price current will be complete and revised weekly up to the latest hour before going to press, and, besides our stated column of religious intelligence, there will be found what we can glean from our own immediate fields of religious work. As heretofore, we shall give as much space as possible to literature, science and agriculture, and give the children their two columns or more.

Our columns during past years have been enriched by original articles from many gifted pens, and we hope that the present volume will be graced with some of the best things from our contributors. This is to be a year of events. The Centennial, the presidential election, the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the great financial question of this country, besides important international affairs abroad, are at hand. And the church throughout the world is allying and pushing the battle for Christ against paganism, popery and corruption. For these reasons the ADVOCATE should be taken and read by every member of the church.

The faith once for all delivered unto the saints must be contended for, so Jude exhorts, and, as the commentaries explain, to contend is to fight, standing upon a thing which is assaulted and which the adversary desires to take away, and it is to fight so as to defend it and to retain it. With this warrant, what wonder that the Christian church is full of controversy, and that opposing views are held and battled for with unyielding persistence?

The bounds of contention, however, may be limited to a comparatively narrow compass. All that we have to contend for is the faith once for all delivered. No new revelation is to be looked for, and whatever was not clearly delivered by divine authority is not matter of dispute. Then it is the faith that is to engage our attention—the doctrines, experience, practice enjoined by the word of God. Anything outside is not committed to us, and, of what we find in the Bible, it is the faith that is of vital concern, the things objectively to be received and believed, and those things especially that are essential to salvation.

It is evident, with these explanations before us, that the greater amount of religious controversy is about something else than the faith delivered. This everlasting wrangle concerning the mode of baptism, forms of church government and ritualistic observances, is certainly about the merest shadows rather than the substance of Christianity. It is humiliating to human nature to see grown men—learned and devout men—at variance on the question of altar-cloths, burning of candles, and the exact postures and costumes of those who minister in the church. Children may be excused for some degree of seriousness in contending for their dolls and toys, but for rational Christian men to quarrel over the veriest nothings is truly absurd. There are those who depend more upon the writings of the fathers for their faith than upon Scripture. The bruit of controversy with them is concerning what these early writers believed and taught, and they seek for their faith and vindicate it through the dubious, dull and often contradictory pages of these uninspired men.

Then there are the traditions and the authority of the church superadded to the written revelation, and the infallible interpretations of councils and popes. As the errors and blasphemies of popery cannot be defended from Scripture, there is this easy way of confounding heretics. What the church holds, what the vicar of Jesus Christ affirms, is the faith. Besides these aspects of trifling with truth there are the ravings and hallucinations of the spiritists. Dupes and deceivers for the most part, and instruments of the devil to lead men away from the word of God, they have something better than the teachings of the gospel. To allude to the elements of modern doubt, to materialism and to the skeptical drift of many students of science, is sufficient. The influence of all error finds its ultimate exhibition in the vices and crimes of society. The faith delivered is in opposition to the carnal mind, and the flood of ungodliness would, if possible, sweep the gospel from the face of the earth.

How are Christian people to fight for the faith? The exhortation is directed not particularly to men of learning, to ministers and scholars, but to them that are sanctified, preserved, called. It is a battle that every believer has to fight for the maintenance of the faith in himself—to guard his own soul from the effects of error and from the religious delusions which surround him. He is in danger of being led away from the truth by the subtleties of a false science, by the pretensions of prelacy, by the bewitching snares of spiritism, and by the seductions of appetite and worldly pleasures. By diligent study of the word of God, by investigation of the evidences of Christianity, by prayer, and by daily communion with God, he must fortify himself against the wily enemies of his salvation. In this respect the conflict is within—a struggle that passes in the soul of the temple. It is an earnest contending for our own faith, for our own deliverance from the snares of satan, for purity of conscience, and the hopes and consolations of religion. As this battle relates to the Christian's own steadfastness and peace, the admonition is a note of warning. Happy is he who, amidst the myriad foes of his faith, "takes unto him the whole armor of God, that he may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all to stand."

In fighting for the faith against those who oppose or corrupt the doctrines of the gospel the Christian has his own testimony to deliver. Whatever men of learning and science may undertake, it is not for the average believer to attempt to meet science with science, or philosophy with philosophy. In this way he can be no match for those who have made these subjects the study of their lives. But he can be mighty in the Scriptures, and deal in the positive truths of revelation, leaving the divine word declare to take care of itself. He is a witness in regard to the experimental verities of the gospel. He has felt the power, has the witness in himself, and he can tell what the Lord has done for his soul. And more potent than all in overthrowing infidelity is the power of a holy life. If the doctrine professed, and the experience related, are backed by a life of purity and love, the gainsayers will be confounded. This is the most convincing proof of his religion that the believer can offer. If he were versed in all the sciences, and most richly endowed intellectually, and qualified to cope with the giants of error, he could deliver no stronger blows against sin and unbelief. Christ's life alone is sufficient to overthrow all who assail the gospel, and the life of the devoted disciple establishes the faith he professes. He fights most earnestly for the faith who lives it, whose example is untarnished, and who in all the social relations exhibits the Christ-like spirit.

In the intent of the inspired injunction the obligation rests upon all believers. From the least to the greatest they are to take their stand upon this precious faith once for all delivered to them, and see that neither themselves nor the world is robbed of the priceless treasure.

Endowment for Centenary College.

Resolved, That the members of our church in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference be, and they are hereby most earnestly appealed to to contribute during the year 1876, the first centennial of our national existence, each the sum or average of $1 for the permanent endowment of Centenary College.

Resolved, That we, the pastors and presiding elders of the Conference, will read the above to all our congregations, and urge upon our people the reasonableness and importance of a prompt compliance therewith.

Resolved, That we respectfully request the ladies of our church to organize associations in each and every charge to secure this sum by such means as they may deem most efficient, and thereby establish for all coming time our college upon a most permanent basis.

W. H. LEITH.
C. K. MARSHALL.

CROSS ROADS, Dec. 20, 1875.

MR. EDITOR: The above was passed at the late session of the Mississippi Conference. I had no agency whatever in getting it up; indeed knew nothing of its existence until a few moments before it was proposed to be adopted by Conference. I am obliged, however, to Bros. Leith and Marshall for proposing it, and to the Conference for adopting it. I believe good will result from it. If the members of the Conference will carry it out faithfully it will advertise the college extensively at every preaching-place, and it will also secure the proposed endowment of, say, in round numbers, $20,000.

I desire, therefore, sir, through our organ—your paper—to make a direct and personal appeal to each one of my brethren, the preachers in charge of the Mississippi Conference, to carry out in good faith the purport of these resolutions. Please take this paper to each one of your appointments, and after service read this article to your congregations, and ask that a committee of public-spirited ladies be appointed to carry out the plan. Please also do not be content with simply having the committee appointed, but, if need be, encourage them, exhort them and cooperate with them until the result be accomplished. Let each member on the church register be asked for $1 as the minimum, and let the more well-to-do be encouraged to give more—$5, $10, $50 or $100. When you have succeeded in raising the average of $1 of each member, or as much more as you can, send the amount to me by sight draft on New Orleans, by postoffice order on Clinton, La., or by registered letter. I will acknowledge the receipt through the ADVOCATE, and will, with the advice of the president of the board of trustees, Bishop Keener, proceed at once to invest it for the benefit of the college.

I ask the presiding elders also, as the resolutions suggest, to aid in this work, and encourage the ministers on their districts to attend to the matter promptly and efficiently.

I humbly and earnestly invoke the blessing of the great Patron of all learning upon the effort.

C. G. ANDREWS.

Dedication Services.

The new church on St. Charles avenue was opened on last Sunday, January 2, Dr. Munsey, the pastor, preaching morning and night to a full house. The sermons were surpassingly eloquent, delivered with unction, and filled with the marrow of gospel truth. The dedicatory service was conducted by Bishop Keener after the night sermon, and the spacious and beautiful house was impressively and devoutly set apart for the worship of God and, for the preaching of his word. In the afternoon the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered to a large company. The cost of the church, including furniture and organ, is $55,924. The ground, one hundred feet front by two hundred in depth, is estimated at $7,753. Total cost, including fence, ground and furniture, $33,677. On the day of dedication subscriptions were received to the amount of $2,427.56. Previously subscribed, $15,030.31. Total amount of subscriptions, $17,457.87. All bills and payments on the contract have been met by R. W. Rayne as they have fallen due; so that the work has been done at cash prices, and at wonderfully low rates. There was in the pulpit a very pleasing reminder of Bishop McTyeire in the shape of a very fine Bible and hymn-book which the Bishop presented to the church. It was a matter of regret that Bro. Rayne was not well enough to be present at any of the services on Sunday. For more than a year his health has been infirm, and during the past three months he has become nearly blind. Amidst much bodily weakness and suffering he has gone forward with this enterprise, but in the completion he has not been permitted to see the imposing and beautiful structure. Prayer was offered up for him. God grant that his health may be restored and that his life may be long spared. In a panel over the front entrance from the open tower into the vestibule is a marble tablet with this inscription:

"To him who hath redeemed me and kept me all my life!

"And in memory of my son William, who was fatally wounded at Chancellorsville."

DEATH OF COL. JAMES O. FUJUA. We learn with great sorrow that our loved and long-esteemed friend, Col. Fujua, died at his residence in Baton Rouge, on Thursday, December 30. He had been ill for several weeks, and the result was not altogether unexpected. We are informed that his last hours were peaceful and triumphant, and that he died in comfortable assurance of a blessed immortality. Col. Fujua was a member of the Methodist Church, and one of the noblest types of the Christian gentleman. He was an able lawyer, a finished and eloquent speaker, a public-spirited and useful citizen, and a man whose character was marked by every generous and magnanimous trait. He has been called away in the prime of his life. We trust that a more extended obituary will be furnished. To the bereaved wife and children we extend our sympathy in this great sorrow. May the God of mercy gather them under his wings, and may they abide under the shadow of the Almighty.

REV. JOSEPHUS ANDERSON, D. D., of the Florida Conference, has been transferred to the White River Conference, and stationed at Helena, Ark.

SORROW does not conquer the spirit; woes without and distress within cannot destroy when a rill from the living waters flows to the deepest root. Truly says the psalmist; and truthfully echo our hearts in all conditions of earthly being: "All my springs are in thee."—Advocate and Guardian.

WESTERN CAVALIERS. Embracing the history of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Kentucky from 1832 to 1854. By A. H. Redford, D. D. Nashville, Tenn.: Southern Methodist Publishing House, 1875.

There are twelve chapters in the volume, each chapter embracing the annals of the Kentucky Conference for one year. The Conference proceedings and statistics are given in detail, notice of the most important sermons and addresses, and everything pertaining to the state of the church throughout the several districts. It is, in fact, a detailed history of Methodism for the period of twelve years—in many respects the most eventful years in the history of our church in that State. To Kentucky Methodists, and especially to the preachers, it is a work of great interest, and to the church at large it is a contribution to our history of the utmost value. The materials which Dr. Redford has gathered are now in a shape to be preserved, and the connection owes the author a debt of gratitude for his timely and well-executed undertaking. The narrative is enlivened by stirring incidents and adventures, and is enriched by biographical sketches of the most eminent and remarkable preachers of the day. These graphic delineations of character and personal history of the heroes of Western and Southern Methodism give the work a popular interest, and to all classes of readers will prove most valuable and entertaining. It would be well if all of our older Conferences could have their histories written up after the method and style which Dr. Redford has adopted, and before the materials for such publications have been lost. We are indebted to the author for a copy of Western Cavaliers, and we have read it with interest and profit. It is a large 12mo of 515 pages, clear print, and handsomely bound. For sale at the Publishing House in Nashville and New Orleans.

DRAWN FROM LIFE. New York: E. J. Hale & Son, publishers, 1875.

This volume is composed of sketches of young ladies, young gentlemen and young couples, by Charles Dickens. They were originally published anonymously about the time that "Sketches by Boz," "Pickwick" and "Oliver Twist" appeared. This is the first American edition. Drawn from Life is not altogether in Dickens' best vein, but the work abounds in humor and satire, and is altogether a lively and piquant affair. It is, however, marred by more than mere traces of vulgarity and irreligion, and for this reason it is not a book to be commended.

ZELL'S POPULAR ENCYCLOPEDIA AND UNIVERSAL DICTIONARY. Edited by J. Clay Fulton, LL. D. New and improved edition. Philadelphia: Baker, Davis & Co.

The publishers are bringing out in numbers a new edition of this valuable and popular work. It will contain eighteen new maps, splendidly engraved and colored. Zell's Encyclopedia combines all works of reference in one compact and convenient form. It embraces history, biography, geography, science and art, language, natural history, botany, mineralogy, medicine, law, mechanics, architecture, manufacturing, agriculture, Bible history, church, history, etc. The work will embrace in all sixty-four numbers, and furnished at fifty cents a number. We have received the first four numbers.

NEARER, MY GOD, TO THEE. By Sarah Flower Adams. With designs by J. M. Humphreys. Best of Love & Shepard, publishers.

This is the well-known and popular devotional song, with beautifully executed illustrations. It is a gem of beauty in every way, and will be admired and prized by all lovers of art and sacred song. For sale by Eyrich, Canal street, New Orleans.

—The River of Dreams and Other Poems is the title of a little volume by G. E. O. Lee & Shepard, Boston, publishers. The River of Dreams is an extended poem running through seventy-three pages of the book. In addition there are a number of miscellaneous pieces. The versification is good, and the author exhibits much of the poetic genius. The book is handsomely bound and elegantly printed.

—Our Sunday school periodicals for January have been received. These have been brought out by the new editor, Dr. Cunnyngham, and they speak well for his qualifications for the responsible position to which he has been elected. In a brief salutatory—just a word—the editor says: "Our election to the position of Sunday school secretary and editor was as unexpected to us as it possibly could be to any one in the church. We accepted, after much hesitation and earnest prayer to God for direction. Its labors and responsibilities are now upon us, and we shall simply do the best we can. The present month's periodicals have been prepared amidst the pressure of pastoral duties and the confusion incident to a change of residence. We hope to improve as we advance. We ask the prayers and the active co-operation of all who love the good work in which we are engaged." The Magazine, Visitor and Our Little People are all in a new dress—very bright and comely, as we think—concerning which the editor says: "We are indebted to the good taste and artistic skill of our friends, Messrs. Spillers and Kirby, of the Publishing House, for the new and elegant dress in which we make our debut. They are gentlemen of superior skill in their departments. They have our thanks for the style in which all our Sunday school periodicals have been brought out the present month. We are sure our readers will be pleased with the mechanical execution, whatever they may think of the matter in our first numbers." Only the Scripture text of the International Series is adopted. Dr. Cunnyngham, we are glad to know, will give his own expositions. He says: "The exposition and discussion will be entirely our own, and will be strictly conformed to our Methodist standards of theology. We shall avail ourselves of all helps and aids which may come in the way, but our Sunday school literature will be, as heretofore, distinctively our own."

—We have received the catalogue of Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., for 1875-6.

The Business of Journalism.

We are indebted to the Central Christian Advocate for the following summary of a suggestive article: The Herald and Presbyter, of Cincinnati, one of the most successful newspapers published in the country, has been looking closely into the business side of journalism. There has been for several years an opinion afloat that the subscription price of our religious journals is too high, and that the publishers make great profits out of them. The religious weekly is compared with the secular weekly, published at half the price, and the people seem determined not to understand why there should be so great a difference. "A religious weekly paper is made up entirely of matter prepared for and used by it alone; the secular weekly is made up entirely of matter that has already been used and paid for by the sale of the daily issue. One sees then, at a glance that the secular weekly costs the publishers scarcely anything except the price of the paper and the press-work. But some one has suggested publishing a religious daily as part of a scheme for a cheap religious weekly. This would be well enough if there were not ninety-nine chances in a hundred that the religious daily would not pay its way, all efforts to establish a paper of that class in this country having hitherto failed.

The following statement of the cost of their paper and what it would cost to subscribers, according to their numbers, has been prepared by the Herald and Presbyter:

"The question, then, is: How does a paper published at $2.50 a year live at all without at least a list of 15,000 subscribers? The fact is, a good many that have been undertaken lived only a short time and then disappeared. One source of income is probably not included in the above calculations—that gained by advertising, which often aids to keep a paper afloat. But no paper with less than 10,000 subscribers can command a profitable advertising patronage. Nor can religious journals obtain prices for advertising that will compare with the secular; for they refuse the class of advertisements which offer the largest remuneration. If our readers will compare the price of religious journals in this country with literary and professional papers—with any and all weekly journals not made up from daily newspapers—it will be made clear that they are the cheapest papers in the market. As will be seen by the accompanying table, our church weeklies cannot be published much cheaper than they are without a greatly enlarged list of subscribers.

REV. W. E. MUNSEY, D. D.—From the Journal, published at Jonesboro, Tenn., we clip the following:

At the Church Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, on the twelfth day of December, 1875, among other things, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, Dr. W. E. Munsey has been a citizen of our town for several years, and he and his family contributed so much to our pleasure and profit, both religiously and socially; And whereas, We now learn that it is his purpose to remove with his family in a short time to New Orleans, where he has been called by the church to take pastoral charge of one of the city churches; therefore,

Resolved, That while we cannot question the wisdom that takes Dr. Munsey and his excellent family from us, we do regret most sincerely their loss to us as a church and a community at large.

Resolved, That we do most sincerely commend them to the Christian love and sympathy of those among whom they may be thrown, and congratulate the church and community which shall receive the ministry of Dr. Munsey, and the society of himself and family.

SUSPICION is the virtue of a coward.

A CANE PRESENTED.—In the Selma Times of December 28 we find a very interesting account of the presentation of an elegant cane to the Rev. M. S. Andrews, D. D., by a number of gentlemen outside of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, who took this method of expressing their high esteem for this able and faithful minister on the termination of his four years' pastorate in their midst. The presentation was made in the presence of a large company, by Rev. E. Capers, of the Episcopal Church, who accompanied the act with a pleasant address, to which Dr. Andrews responded in fitting terms. Dr. Andrews retires from Selma followed by the hearty good will of all classes, and with regrets at parting with him.

ON BOARD STEAMER SHANNON,
December 11, 1875.

At a meeting of the passengers, called this day, Rev. J. A. Miller was called to the chair, and R. D. Bridger was requested to act as secretary.

On motion the following preamble and resolutions were offered and unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The kindness of Capt. J. W. Blanks and the other officers of the steamer Shannon, extended to us since our embarkation, in the ordinary civilities so conducive to the happiness of travelers, and in the great reduction of fare of the members of the Louisiana Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and also to the members of the State Grange, has been of such a character as to increase our already great respect for and confidence in them; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we take great pleasure in recommending the Shannon and her officers to the entire traveling public.

Resolved, That we request the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, the Sun of the South, Ouachita Telegraph and Columbia Herald to publish the proceedings of this meeting.

Issued, in behalf of said meeting,
J. A. MILLER, Chairman.
R. D. BRIDGER, Secretary.

THE Catholic Church in California is struck "a big contract," as the Westerners say. In 1854 a fund was raised for evangelizing California in Santa Anna's time this money was taken by the Mexican government, which agreed to pay six per cent. interest for it, and use it for the purpose intended. When California was ceded to the United States this fund amounted to $1,500,000. The Catholics of California demanded their share of it. The Mexican government said that the fund was used in the support of missions, that these were political institutions, and the fund consequently public property. The subject was referred to the commission, of which the British minister at Washington, Sir Edward Thornton, is president, and he has decided it in favor of the California Catholics. They will get $900,000.

LOUISIANA NATIONAL BANK.—Louisiana National Bank is one of the most reliable institutions in our city. Its capital and resources are of vast advantage to our business community. To the sagacity and foresight of its president, J. H. Oglesby, Esq., our merchants and dealers have been repeatedly indebted for aid to effect pressing emergencies arising from fluctuations of trade and the movements of the staple. It has been kept safe for them as we have had one of the high officers of our largest moneyed institutions, on which so many depend for accommodation, who has had the ability to foresee and the firmness to hold on to the amounts necessary to meet the heavy demands that have been unforeseen by the average business mind. Associated with Mr. Oglesby as cashier is A. Lurla, Esq., an officer of great experience, close attention to business, and possessed in a high degree the qualifications requisite to shine in that office. And we take pleasure in saying that the numerous clerks and employés of the bank are polite and prompt attendants. The tellers and clerks and everybody else seem to understand that quick transactions of business will please. For facts relative to the condition of the bank we refer to the semi-annual statement, to be found in another column.

PIANOS.—Those needing pianos or other instruments of any description are referred to the advertisement of Philip Werlein on this page. Mr. Werlein is one of the largest dealers in the South, thoroughly reliable, and will give satisfaction to those who favor him with their orders.

DRUGGIST.—George Budding's store is located at 58 St. Charles street, between Felicity and Polymnia, and is very convenient for our friends in the upper portion of the city. Any one sending prescriptions filled would do well to give him a call. See advertisement.

SOUTHERN SALE STABLES.—Planters would do well to note the advertisement of Alford & Martin, proprietors of the above stables. They have constantly on hand a large stock of horses and mules, and offer to sell at the lowest market prices.

SOUTHERN BANK.—Our readers will notice the advertisement of this institution on the first page. The bank is well known, and in charge of competent gentlemen. We are pleased to see that Thomas Layton, Esq., has been elected president.

BOOTS AND SHOES.—We call attention to "Cheap John's" advertisement on this page. His establishment is at 207 Poydras street, where he offers bargains to purchasers. Give him a call and examine his goods.

PIANO TRADE, &c.

Now for Cheap to the Trade. Mason & Hamlin Boston manufacture an assortment of pianos for the season, which are offered by the New York Agency at prices that will command ready sale. They are of the usual high standard of excellence, and are confidently recommended to the trade as instruments of unusual merit. Their cabinet organs are also of the best quality, and are offered at prices that will insure a large sale. Mason & Hamlin Organ and Piano Company, 154 Tremont street, Boston.

Messrs. Chickering & Sons, with their usual enterprise, have secured a very desirable location for their new warerooms, on Fifth avenue, corner of Twenty-eighth street, and are constructing a building which, when completed, will be the handsomest and most commodious piano warerooms in the world. The present warerooms, on Fifth avenue, corner of Eighteenth street, have been occupied by Messrs. Chickering & Sons for twenty years, during which time they have become a household word throughout the civilized world, and are known as the representatives of the highest type of piano-forte manufacture. Their success has been unprecedented, and they richly deserve the handsome building which they are erecting, and which will be a fitting monument to their skill and enterprise. Their present warerooms, with their valuable contents, will be sold at auction on the 28th inst., by Messrs. Leavitt, Strong & Co., auctioneers, at the Astor House, corner of Vesey street and Broadway.

Messrs. Steinway & Sons, the well-known piano manufacturers, have removed their warerooms to their new building, corner of Fourteenth street and Fourth avenue, where they have ample room for the display of their large stock of pianos. Their factory, which is one of the largest in the country, is situated at Astoria, Long Island, and is reached by a ferry from the foot of East Twenty-sixth street. Their pianos are of the highest grade of excellence, and are deservedly popular.

Messrs. Steinway & Sons have also established warerooms in Boston, at 82 Boylston street, where they have a large stock of their pianos on hand.

Messrs. Wm. Knabe & Co. have removed their warerooms to the corner of Fifth avenue and Nineteenth street, where they have a large and handsome store, and where they will be pleased to see their friends and customers. Their pianos are of the highest grade of excellence, and are deservedly popular.

Messrs. Decker Brothers have also removed their warerooms to the corner of Fifth avenue and Nineteenth street, where they have a large and handsome store, and where they will be pleased to see their friends and customers. Their pianos are of the highest grade of excellence, and are deservedly popular.

Messrs. Weber & Co. have also removed their warerooms to the corner of Fifth avenue and Nineteenth street, where they have a large and handsome store, and where they will be pleased to see their friends and customers. Their pianos are of the highest grade of excellence, and are deservedly popular.

Messrs. Hallet, Davis & Co. have also removed their warerooms to the corner of Fifth avenue and Nineteenth street, where they have a large and handsome store, and where they will be pleased to see their friends and customers. Their pianos are of the highest grade of excellence, and are deservedly popular.

Messrs. Chickering & Sons have also established warerooms in Boston, at 82 Boylston street, where they have a large stock of their pianos on hand.

Messrs. Hallet, Davis & Co. have also established warerooms in Boston, at 82 Boylston street, where they have a large stock of their pianos on hand.

DITSON & CO., our constant advertisers, commence the new year with a large accession of valuable music. They have purchased the entire stock of Lee & Walker in Philadelphia, and will continue the business there under a new title. The stock thus purchased comprises a quarter of a million (500,000 pieces) of sheet music, 10,000 music book plates, belonging to 250 different books, 125 pianos and organs, etc. As the original stock of Oliver Ditson & Co. includes about 300,000 the quantity above named, it will be seen that they have literally "music for the million." See advertisement.

E. Y. TEAS & CO., the rose growers, Richmond, Ind., offer free to all applicants their handsome descriptive catalogue. For some years past their collection has been unsurpassed, and it is improved yearly. All kinds of plants mailed, and warranted to arrive in good order.

Care in Handling Bees.

There are few persons but would keep bees, study their nature, and make them pay a profit, if they could only be relieved of the fear of stings, which is the great and universal objection to bee culture. Some say to me that they would not have a hive of bees on their premises if I would give the bees to them—they could not go near them without being stung. Now I do not doubt that they will attack one person more than another, the exhalations of some persons seeming to be very offensive to them, though I apprehend there is not so much difference as some suppose. Some, on entering an apiary, are fearful of going near a hive, and if a bee should pass or come near to inspect matters they will think it is time to leave. They usually dodge a few moments and strike at them, and at last make their way to the house or barn, with the bees after them. Sometimes a hat is used to strike them down, and very likely they will receive more stings than if they had stood quietly on the spot. Nine times out of ten a bee will not sting an approaching person; so if one stands quiet and holds his head down, and avoids breathing on them which irritates them more than any one cause, there need be no fear of stings.

Keeping bees good-natured is the main point in bee-keeping, and also offers a pretty fair subject for ridicule, for it seems rather absurd to talk of teaching a bee anything; nevertheless, it is worth while to think of it a little. Most of us know that by injudicious training, horses, cattle and dogs may be rendered extremely vicious. If there is no perceptible analogy between them and bees, experience has proved that they too may be made ten times more irritable than they are naturally; therefore it should be the apiarian's aim to keep them good-natured, so that at any time he can go into the apiary without any fear of being molested, and open the hive for inspection with impunity. A thing very much neglected is the opening of the hive and knowing the condition of the bees by actual inspection. The hive should be so constructed that this duty may be performed without killing or disabling a bee.

I will now say a few words about going among and handling them. All quick motions near them, such as running, striking, etc., are noticed. When you go in a yard let your movements be slow, cautious and respectful. We can often pass unmolested, having manifested a becoming deportment. If a bee comes near, stand still; if it shows any intentions of an attack, put your head down and hold your breath; if they are rather irritable, die down and cover your face till they leave; or walk slowly, with head down, to some bush or tree. As they dart at objects horizontally, they have not much chance when the head is down. Avoid going in front of a hive as much as possible. If this is necessary—as for mowing the grass, which should always be kept short—do it in the morning, when they are not likely to interfere.

Perform all operations about a hive at or before the middle of the day, when there are few at home except young bees. Use smoke only when absolutely necessary. Care should be taken when hiving bees not to irritate them more than possible. The improved hives now used necessitate bringing the bees to them, which is done by cutting off the branch on which they hang, and carrying it to the hive, or jarring them into a swarm bag made for that special purpose. If the branch is cut off and carried to the hive you will want something to shake them out. I prefer a square tray of light one-inch square material, and as wide as the hive. Over this tack some cloth, drawn up tightly. After bees rest on the hive, the other rests on legs, so as to drive it under the board of the hive. George A. Blanch, N. Lawrence Co., N. Y., Country Gentleman.

A LESSON IN CABBAGE.—Every one knows that cabbages will not grow fast or head out well unless they are hoed often. Most have also learned that this engenders the best if hoed very early in the morning, while the dew is on the ground. Hoeing later in the day, when the dew has evaporated, will not have the same effect. The reasons appear to be these:

The dew, being covered with soil, is retained, and helps to keep the earth moist. It contains a large amount of oxygen, which it took from the air. These act to decompose the soil, and to hasten the growth of plants. It also absorbs a large quantity of ammonia, which is directly taken up by the plants. Now the same causes ought to produce the same effect on other plants, and it has been found by observing farmers that they do. Market gardeners prefer to have potatoes hoed either when the soil is wet with dew or after a slight rain.

Observations made by one of the best farmers in Wisconsin, extended through many years, convinced him that there was great advantage in plowing land while it was wet with dew. Especially was this the case when clover or grass was plowed under. It was found that the grass and sod rotted much sooner, and that the succeeding crops were larger and of better quality. Chicago Times.

RATS.—A granger, in one of our exchanges, gives the following simple method of getting rid of these pests: "To exterminate rats with little trouble and small cost, without poison or bad odor, take common lime and put it where they travel about your place, and if they burrow put the lime in the holes, either about your dwelling or corn cribs. Put water where they will get their feet in it and then in the lime, and depend on it they will not stay there."

GRAHAM MUFFINS.—Take three pints of lukewarm milk, half a cup of home-made hop yeast, three tablespoonfuls of sugar, one teaspoonful of salt; stir it into three pints of Graham flour and one pint of barrel flour. Set it in a warm place to rise over night, and, next morning pour it into "gem" pans or muffin rings, and bake in a very hot oven.

A LITTLE LIME dissolved in water, and applied to the soil, kills every species of worm without injury to the plant.

CHINA Grove, Rowan, N. C.

Send one bottle of the medicine of which Cannabis Indica, When Mr. J. W. Fisher brought his wife to me for examination I found her in the incipient stage of Tuberculous Consumption. Then it was I concluded to risk a fair trial of Indian Hemp, and now there is a general demand for those neighbors. The treatment exceeds everything of its kind I ever saw or tried.

E. A. SITFORD, M. D.

N. B.—This simply speaks for itself. One bottle will satisfy the most skeptical. There is not a single symptom of CONSUMPTION that it does not at once take hold of and dissipate and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours.

MEDICAL.

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP.

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound. Its well-established virtue and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Breast and Bowels is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at any length on its efficiency in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Diarrhœa or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most efficacious in preventing that most awful scourge whenever timely resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure, this truly extraordinary medicine has, over most compounds of the same nature, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children, and it requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, not only because the bottle contains more sirup than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this sirup will keep for years without fermenting, and it can be used in families whenever required by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Sirup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night may take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a good night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three to four hours. For sale by

Its Faculty consists of tried and experienced educators, some of them having been connected with the college from its earliest years.

Its Departments of Instruction are the regular collegiate, the Scientific and the Preparatory. The studies in part (elective) are Languages, Ancient and Modern, Mathematics, Sciences, Physical and Metaphysical, Elementary, Forensic, and the higher Belles-Lettres. Mode of instruction thorough and practical, by text-books and lectures combined.

Its Buildings are commodious, affording to each student dormitories, Philosophical and Chemical Apparatus, Museum and Libraries ample; Literary Societies of superior educational value.

Its Location, 2,000 feet above sea level, in a refined and beautiful valley, amid mountains abounding in mineral springs, with a climate invigorating in summer, not rigorous in winter, has never been invaded by malaria or pestilential disease.

Its Charges are exceedingly moderate for the advantages offered. For $100 a student can obtain board (only table-board), tuition, fuel, furniture, washing and contingent fee for an entire session of twenty weeks.

Fall Session begins second Thursday in September.

Spring Session begins twenty weeks thereafter. Present year, January 27.

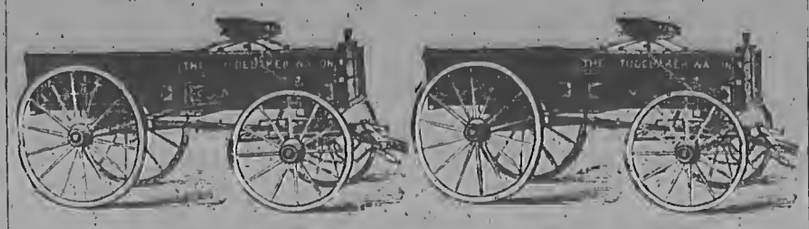
I HAVE RECENTLY ACCEPTED THE AGENCY OF THE CELEBRATED



STUDEBAKER WAGON.

FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds properly slated, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of selected iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other factory, making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLOPE-SHOULDER SPOKE is used; being the best wood, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted, while the Studebaker Brothers are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally, hence the superiority of their work over all others.

We hope all will follow the example of our friend. We have just made another visit to the Shoe Manufactory of our esteemed and enterprising fellow citizen, Mr. JOHN HANSEN, 43 and 45 Canal street, and notwithstanding the hard times we find he is employing one hundred hands, and there by supporting at least five hundred persons. His work is of the best quality and is sold at the LOWEST PRICES, even below what the same goods can be bought for at the North. We advise all country merchants to call and see Mr. Hansen's stock before they purchase elsewhere, and thereby keep their money at home.

Ladies and gentlemen who wish to make Christmas and New Year presents of Boots and Shoes should call on Mr. Hansen before purchasing elsewhere, as they can have the goods at wholesale prices and at the same time sustain home manufactured articles.

Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitors and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

The Christian Advocate.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. 22. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JANUARY 13, 1876. NO. 2.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 31.—The Price Current's hog statistics show a falling off for the season, at interior points, of 570,000 hogs, with a possible falling off at leading cities enough to make the aggregate decrease 750,000 compared with last year.

Taking increased weight into consideration, the report calculates the crop will not vary much from 5,000,000, against 5,556,000 last year—a decrease of ten per cent.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Pending the negotiations with Spain our government declines to give any information beyond the fact that a circular has been addressed to all the European powers, including Spain, on the subject of Cuban affairs, thus leaving the facts in the case a matter of speculation until they shall be officially made known. Meantime there is a confusion of statements, both in this country and in Europe; but though our government conceals at present from our citizens what it communicates to European governments, it can be stated that the American circular does not propose as a solution of the Cuban question, according to the Manchester Guardian, that Cuba and Porto Rico form a confederation, with a Governor General appointed by Spain.

NEW YORK, Jan. 4.—A nolle prosequi has been entered in the case of Loader, indicted for perjury in the Beecher case.

The forthcoming mutual council of Congregational churches, to take into consideration the differences existing between Plymouth church and Mrs. Moulton, is to consist of five delegates from ten churches on each side. The names of these pastors, churches and lay delegates will not be announced. They have been invited to participate in the council, and have signified their willingness to do so.

PHILADELPHIA, January 5.—This evening Justice Strong, of the Supreme Court of the United States, delivered an eulogium on the life and character of Horace Binney, the great constitutional lawyer of this city, who died several months ago, aged ninety-six years. All the judges of the courts of this city and many prominent gentlemen from other cities were present, and also a brilliant audience of fifteen hundred persons. The eulogium occupied an hour and a half in its delivery. It will be printed and circulated by the law association.

MEMPHIS, TENN., Jan. 6.—The Appeal's Jackson (Miss.) special says: Fewell's resolutions on Ames' message were to-day modified and passed by the Senate. They charge that Ames, actuated by a spirit of enmity, engendered by the result of the late election and the defeat of his ambitious schemes, insinuates, if not directly charges, that new members were elected by intimidation and fraud, and appoints a committee to investigate the causes that led to the late Democratic triumph, and to obtain the data of alleged frauds.

In the House Featherstone introduced a resolution to appoint a committee of five to investigate the official conduct of Ames, and ascertain what grounds there are for charges against him of committing high crimes and misdemeanors, with instructions to report the evidence taken as soon as possible. Both houses adjourned early to give the committees time to work. The members, however, are too much excited over the senatorial contest to work much.

AUGUSTA, Jan. 6.—A. H. Stephens continues in a very feeble state from his long disease. Though he eats and sleeps well, he does not regain his strength. It is feared he will not be able to take his seat in Congress during the present session.

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 6.—Col. L. Q. C. Lamar was nominated by acclamation by the Democratic caucus for United States senator.

COLUMBUS, O., Jan. 6.—In the House this afternoon the resolution condemning the third term for President was adopted with but twenty negative votes.

GALVESTON, January 7.—At last night's session, at a late hour, the following nominations were made unanimous:

For Governor, Richard Coke; for Lieutenant Governor, R. B. Hubbard; for Presidential Electors, D. C. Giddings and B. H. Epperson; Attorney General, H. H. Boone; State Treasurer, A. J. Dorn; Comptroller, Stephen H. Darden; Commissioner of Land Office, J. J. Groos.

COLUMBUS, Jan. 7.—Among the bills introduced is one making forcible entry into corn cribs and poultry-yards burglary, and requesting Gen. Grant to dismiss his relations and appoint Union soldiers in their place.

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—A London dispatch, says an editorial in the Telegraph, says the unanimous resolution of the House of Representatives, declaring the manifest disposition of the men who fought in the late civil war to join hands as one people, is a most auspicious ushering in of the American New Year—one of the most cheering celebrations of the history of America.

The police in Berlin, being in possession of the private correspondence of Thomassen, of the Bremerhaven dynamite plot, seem to have come upon the track of some of his accomplices, who visited the boarding-houses patronized by English and American tourists. The police are searching for a Dr. Medworth, who, it would seem from information in their possession, was evidently an accomplice of Thomassen.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Mr. Hamilton, of Texas, introduced a bill to secure the speedy completion of the Texas Pacific railroad.

The President to-day sent to the Senate the following nomination: Edward C. Billings to be United States district judge for the district of Louisiana, vice Durell.

Joint resolutions were introduced urging neutrality between Spain and Cuba, and the adoption by the President of regulations similar to those with Spain in the recent conflict with the Southern States.

MEMPHIS, Jan. 10.—The Appeal's Jackson (Miss.) special says: "The House spent the day in discussing a resolution expunging from the record a resolution indorsing Phil. Sheridan, passed at the last session, which was finally adopted by 97 to 7.

"The Senate passed a bill practically abolishing the office of commissioner of immigration by cutting down the salary from $2,000 to $100, and withholding all appropriations; also bills abolishing the office of county attorneys, and repealing the act known as the Gatling gun militia bill; also prohibiting the payment to the official printer for publishing the daily proceedings and suspending all public work in his hands.

"Maj. Allyn, of the Sixteenth Infantry, who was charged before a court martial with intimidating at the late State election, by loaning a cannon to a club to fire salutes, has been acquitted and ordered to resume command of the post of Jackson."

GALVESTON, Jan. 10.—A special to the News, dated Matamoras, January 10, says: "The morning papers contain telegrams from the city of Mexico, stating that Gen. Cortina has been released from arrest. Private telegrams to his friends in this city confirm the statement. It is probable he has been released with the understanding that he will not return to this border. His partisans, however, claim that he will soon be back in command of the frontier, and are to-day publicly celebrating his release.

"Two hundred additional infantry have been ordered to this city, to strengthen the garrison in anticipation of trouble at the presidential election, which occurs in March."

NEW YORK, Jan. 10.—Dispatches state that within the last ten hours the mercury has fallen 48 degrees at Milwaukee, 46 at Chicago, 45 at Detroit and 30 at Buffalo. The cold wave is moving eastward rapidly.

FOREIGN.

POSEN, Dec. 31.—The Bishop of Gnesen and Posen, who was recently convicted of violation of the ecclesiastical laws, and condemned to six months' imprisonment, has been arrested and sent to prison to serve out the term of his sentence.

BERLIN, Dec. 31.—The North German Gazette says there is reason to believe that the government will shortly take steps to prevent the abuses arising from the sale in Germany of American medical diplomas, nearly all of which purport to come from Philadelphia.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 31.—Negotiations are pending with Austria with regard to the construction of a direct railway between Vienna and Constantinople.

LONDON, Jan. 4.—Sir Anthony Rothschild is dead.

The Pariser newspaper says that at the beginning of last week sixty-two tons of meat were sold at Smithfield market, in this city, which were shipped from New York to Liverpool and thence by rail to London. The market was closed on Christmas (Sunday and Monday), boxing day, and the meat consequently kept three days longer than ordinarily necessary; yet on Tuesday it was in excellent condition, and sold rapidly at an average of six-pence per pound.

LONDON, Jan. 5.—The Times this morning publishes a dispatch from Ragusa, containing the following: All information, from official and unofficial sources, confirms the opinion that not only is Austrian occupation of insurrectionary provinces determined upon, but that some foreign occupation is absolutely necessary as a precaution against the most probable massacre of Christians wherever they are unarmed and helpless.

HAVANA, Jan. 7.—Advices from the city of Mexico to January 1 have been received. The new German and Spanish embassadors to Mexico have arrived.

The President was on a visit to the Rio Grande region. Within a month, it is asserted, he will go on farther than Tampico.

The Revista says the Catholics continue to threaten the Protestant worshipers at St. Peter's church.

The great statue of Christopher Columbus, designed for the city of Mexico, arrived at Vera Cruz. Owing to the great size of the pedestal it will have to be hauled over the mountains by ox carts. It is too large to pass through the tunnel of the railroad between Vera Cruz and the city of Mexico.

The revolution in Michoacan continues.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 7.—The Austrian embassador to this court has semi-officially communicated to the Grand Vizier Count Andrassy's scheme for reform in the Turkish provinces.

The Grand Vizier, in reply, is represented to have rejected the idea of foreign mediation, and to have said that the Sublime Porte would give the people of the provinces all necessary guarantees for reform.

LONDON, Jan. 8.—A Vienna dispatch to the Daily News says it is reported that the Montenegrin minister of war intends to purchase rifles in Vienna.

Telegrams from Servia state that the manufactories of arms are very active.

The Roumanian government is hastening the completion of its armament by contracts with foreign firms.

The Cologne Gazette says Italy accepted Austria's Turkish note. England asks a week's consideration, which expires on the twelfth.

Physicians say Von Arnim is too ill to go to prison. The government regards this certificate as insufficient, and the count is ordered to prison.

VIENNA, Jan. 8.—Two thousand eight hundred insurgents tried to surprise Mostar, but were repulsed and almost entirely destroyed.

BERLIN, Jan. 8.—Count Andrassy's note in regard to proposed reforms in the Sultan's vassal provinces makes no definite proposal for controlling the execution of these reforms, but it is stated that he proposes a virtual control through the supervision of the consuls and reports of embassadors.

State Convention.

The Democratic and Conservative State Convention of Louisiana met in New Orleans last week, and adjourned on Thursday, January 6. A memorial to the President and Congress for relief from the present usurpation was adopted. The following delegates to the national convention were elected:

FROM THE STATE AT LARGE.

Ex-Gov. Wickliffe, T. C. Manning, R. H. Marr, E. E. Kidd.

Alternates.—B. F. Jonas, Albert Voorhies, A. DeClouet, Jas. Brewer.

FROM CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICTS.

First District.—Louis St. Martin, John Tobin, and James Cowsely and E. B. Bozonier, of Orleans, alternates.

Second District.—J. J. Mellon, J. McConnell, of Orleans, delegates, and F. F. Poche and James J. O'Darby, of Orleans, alternates.

Third District.—F. S. Goode, of Terrebonne, Joseph L. Brent, of Ascension, delegates, and John Avery, of Iberia, and J. G. Gates, of St. Mary, alternates.

Fourth District.—L. J. Jeffries, of Rapides, Hon. J. C. Monette, of Caddo, delegates, and Gen. P. A. Moore, of Natchitoches, Judge J. D. Watkins, of Webster, alternates.

Fifth District.—H. C. Mitchell, of Claiborne, James B. Cochran, of Madison, delegates, and N. Bartlett, of Jackson, and L. V. Reeder, of Tensas, alternates.

Sixth District.—W. H. Pipes, of East Feliciana, Henry L. Garland, of St. Landry, delegates, and F. P. Thorpe, of Avoyelles; and James H. Morse, of St. Helena, alternates.

The following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, The usurpation of the government of the State of Louisiana, through the perversion of functions of the general government, is an evil which weighs heavily on the people of this State, and while it is a constant menace to the perpetuity of representative institutions; and the Federal Congress, whose duty it is to guarantee to the several States a republican form of government, cannot ignore the present condition of despotism and anarchy, so detrimental to the material interests of Louisiana;

Whereas, The Wheeler adjustment had no reference whatever to the elections of November, 1872, nor did it ever extend to all the contested elections of November, 1874, but was expressly limited to the investigation of seventeen contested seats in the House of Representatives and two contested seats in the Senate among the newly elected senators;

Whereas, The said adjustment never pretended to ascertain or determine anything beyond the status of these contested seats of the General Assembly, and, inasmuch as the powers of the Legislature are strictly defined and limited by constitutional provisions, and it was not competent for them to submit to arbitration the conflicting claims of the rural State governments, and as those who supported said adjustment never intended or contemplated that, by any possibility, said adjustment should embrace any question beyond that of the contested seats in the Legislature;

Whereas, The Radical party of Louisiana, at whose promptings the said usurpation has been forced upon this State, has devised the most comprehensive system of measures, through iniquitous election and registration laws, arbitrary Returning Board, with unlimited prerogatives, and through fraudulent census returns—measures devised for the purpose of perpetuating the existence of this usurpation, with which it is thoroughly identified;

And whereas, The said usurpatory government has never been acknowledged by the people of Louisiana, and it does not maintain its precarious tenure of power with their consent or willing support:

Be it resolved, by the Democratic-Conservative party of the State of Louisiana, in convention assembled, That the memorial of the people of Louisiana, praying for relief at the hands of Congress, be again presented for their consideration by our representatives in Congress.

Resolved, That the primary test of membership of the Democratic-Conservative party of Louisiana is an unrelenting opposition to the usurpation, and, without regard to past political affiliations, all those who join in the crusade against the usurpation are in full fellowship in the party.

Resolved, That we advocate the abolition of useless offices, more especially that of tax collectors, which offices should be remitted to the sheriffs, and a reduction of salaries, fees and perquisites of office, and a vigorous retrenchment in the expenses of the various departments of the city and State governments.

Resolved, That we advocate a substantial reduction of taxation, State and municipal, and, while we are in favor of meeting punctually the payment of the legitimate debt of Louisiana, we are immovably opposed to the recognition of the dishonest and fraudulent obligations issued in the name of the State, and we pledge ourselves to make a searching investigation in the matter.

Resolved, That we advocate the reduction of the exorbitant appropriations for public printing and metropolitan police purposes, and demand that the whole system of police and public printing be remodeled.

Resolved, That we declare our hearty opposition to all monopolies whatever.

Resolved, That we recognize and reaffirm the Democratic doctrine that gold and silver be the legal currency, and favor a return to a specie basis as soon as it can be done without injury to the material interests of the country.

Endowment for Centenary College.

Resolved, That the members of our church in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference be and they are hereby most earnestly appealed to to contribute during the year 1876, the first centennial of our national existence, each the sum or average of $1 for the permanent endowment of Centenary College.

Resolved, That we, the pastors and presiding elders of the Conference, will read the above to all our congregations, and urge upon our people the reasonableness and importance of a prompt compliance therewith.

Resolved, That we respectfully request the ladies of our church to organize associations in each and every charge to secure this sum by such means as they may deem most efficient, and thereby establish for all coming time our college upon a most permanent basis.

W. H. LEITH.
C. K. MARSHALL.

CANTON, Miss., December 20, 1875.

MR. EDITOR: The above was passed at the late session of the Mississippi Conference. I had no agency whatever in getting it up; indeed knew nothing of its existence until a few moments before it was proposed to be adopted by Conference. I am obliged, however, to Bros. Leith and Marshall for proposing it, and to the Conference for adopting it. I believe good will result from it. If the members of the Conference will carry it out faithfully it will advertise the college extensively at every preaching-place, and it will also secure the proposed endowment of say, in round numbers, $20,000.

I desire, therefore, sir, through our organ—your paper—to make a direct and personal appeal to each one of my brethren, the preachers in charge of the Mississippi Conference, to carry out in good faith the purport of these resolutions. Please take this paper to each one of your appointments, and after service read this article to your congregations, and ask that a committee of public-spirited ladies be appointed to carry out the plan. Please also do not be content with simply having the committee appointed, but, if need be, encourage them, exhort them and co-operate with them until the result be accomplished. Let each member on the church register be asked for $1 as the minimum, and let the more well-to-do be encouraged to give more—$5, $10, $50 or $100. When you have succeeded in raising the average of $1 to each member, or as much more as you can, send the amount to me by sight-draft on New Orleans, by postoffice order on Clinton, La., or by registered letter. I will acknowledge the receipt through the ADVOCATE, and will, with the advice of the president of the board of trustees, Bishop Keener, proceed at once to invest it for the benefit of the college.

I ask the presiding elders also, as the resolutions suggest, to aid in this work, and encourage the ministers on their districts to attend to the matter promptly and efficiently.

I humbly and earnestly invoke the blessing of the great Patron of all learning upon the effort.

Dedication and Inauguration of the VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY, Nashville, Tenn., October 3, 1875. Nashville, Tenn.: Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. 1875.

This pamphlet of 112 pages contains the dedicatory and inauguration exercises of the university, and embraces the sermons and addresses in full, a discourse by Dr. Summers on the character and design of the Biblical department, and a history of the foundation and completion of the great enterprise. The preface opens with this statement:

"This volume is meant to be the beginning of a series, to be issued annually. Addresses on commencement and other special occasions, baccalaureate sermons and such scientific discourses and lectures as may be delivered in the course of instruction, and be thought proper for publication, will constitute the material for future volumes of the Vanderbilt University series, of uniform edition with the present one.

"It is proposed in this way to make a contribution to general literature that shall possess permanent value. Unlike the justly celebrated Bampton lectures, and other similar courses of lectures which generous founders have provided for, the subjects of this and following volumes will be found to be various—suited to the times in which they appear; but like them, it is to be hoped, in this—the best thoughts of the best minds on problems most worthy of public attention. A history of current thought, and a defense of truth against present existing objections, will therefore be a feature of these publications. The first volume will be accepted as a fair specimen of this style.

The following letter from Mr. Vanderbilt to Bishop McTyeire will be read with interest:

NO. 3 WEST FORTIETH ST., NEW YORK, December 2, 1875.

Bishop H. N. McTyeire, President Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn.

My Dear Sir: I have looked over, in a general way, the statement of expenditures made and to be made on account of the at first called "Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church South," which name was subsequently changed to "Vanderbilt University"—the compliment of which action, on the part of your board of trust, I fully appreciate.

Your statements show that the expenditures already made, with the additional ones necessary to be made to cover all the cost of grounds, buildings, books and apparatus, and all salaries and incidental expenses to the first day of December, 1875, so that the institution will, on that day, be entirely free from all debt and obligations, amount to $392,831.46. Of this amount you have already drawn on me for, and I have paid, $360,000. For the balance, $32,831.46, you may draw on me whenever, and as fast as, the items, to the payment of which it is applicable, can be paid off.

At this point I desire to say that I am fully satisfied as to the faithfulness and also the judiciousness with which the expenditures have been made, and with the clearness with which they have been classified and stated.

When I made my proposition, under date of March 17, 1873, to give not less than $500,000 to the institution, it was, as you will remember, expected that at least $300,000 of that amount could be preserved as an "endowment fund," which was to be kept "forever inviolate and safely invested, and the interest or revenue thereof only used in carrying on the university."

Under the representations made in your letter of March 17, 1874 just one year after my proposition was made, that the cost of completing the erections and their suitable appurtenances would, under the plans that had so far been worked upon, impair to some considerable extent the originally intended amount of the "endowment fund," I agreed, in my letter to you dated March 21, 1874, to "add $100,000 to the whole fund" making it $500,000 upon the condition that not over $300,000 (including what had already been paid) should be used for the grounds, buildings, etc., and that at least $300,000 should be preserved as an "endowment fund," to be kept inviolate, as provided in my original proposition.

When I saw you at Saratoga Springs last summer you stated that the completion of the work would impair the "endowment fund" even as fixed in my second offer; and I said that whatever obligations were incurred on account of the work must be paid off, so that the institution would be absolutely free from debt, even although it required (of the "endowment fund," my opinion being that no real fund of that nature could exist so long as any indebtedness was outstanding against the institution.

When the amounts you have herein authorized to draw for shall have been paid, so that the institution will be clear from all debt to the first day of December, 1875—making, as hereinbefore stated, an aggregate of $392,831.46—it will leave but a trifle over $200,000 for the "endowment fund," instead of $300,000, which last, from the outset and all through the progress of the work, was considered a matter of very great, if not of vital, necessity.

Upon a careful review of all the circumstances, and consideration of the objects sought to be accomplished by the institution, and feeling that its beneficial operations should not be restricted now that its material structures are so well adapted to success, I have decided to make an additional contribution, sufficient to bring the "endowment fund" up to the full amount of $300,000, as originally contemplated, thus making an aggregate contribution of $692,831.46.

Here follows a description of the sixty bonds of $5,000 each, sent as the invested endowment, seven per cent., payable semi-annually.

And now that I have fulfilled my undertakings in this matter, I beg, in closing these statements, to say that to you, my dear sir, who have labored so actively and so earnestly in carrying out the plans for the university—and have labored so efficiently, too, as its inauguration within thirty months shows—and who will, as the president of the board of trust, have the chief responsibility in respect of the accomplishment of the educational purposes for which it was undertaken, I tender my personal expressions of extreme regard, trusting that the healthful growth of the institution may be as great as I know it is your desire and determination to make it. And if it shall, through its influence, contribute, even in the smallest degree, to strengthening the ties which should exist between all geographical sections of our common country, I shall feel that it has accomplished one of the objects that led me to take an interest in it. Very truly yours,

C. VANDERBILT.

We are requested to state that single copies of the pamphlet will be sent, by mail, postpaid, our receipt of fifty cents. Address A. H. Redford, agent, Nashville, Tenn.

CONSTITUTION OF SUNDAY SCHOOL MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.—Quite a number of inquiries come to the secretaries in reference to a form of constitution for such societies.

We would recommend that the whole school be considered members of the society—the teachers a board of managers. Let the society elect, say, the pastor president, the superintendent vice president, one of the members secretary, another treasurer. Place one of our juvenile cards, or one ruled to suit the views of the board of managers, in the hands of a member of each class elected by the class. Let the collector so elected get a subscription from each member of the class, and any other friends not members of the church—collections to be made monthly. Say once a quarter hold a meeting of the society; let the collector from each class, as the class is called by the secretary, advance to the treasurer's table, hand in the card, with names attached. Let the money collected accompany the card—that from the infant class in a box, from the other classes in envelopes. Let the treasurer keep a record of the names and amounts in a well-bound book. After the cards and money have been handed in let there be singing and speeches from juvenile and adult members previously selected, followed, if the audience justifies, by a collection. This is simple, and, if earnestly worked, will be found effective.

GREAT REVIVAL IN HARRISBURG, PA.—The Harrisburg Telegraph says one of the most remarkable revivals ever known in that city is in progress. Daily meetings were begun by the Young Men's Christian Association, and continued a week. A sermon especially addressed to young men was preached from almost every pulpit. The following week services conducted by the pastors were held in various churches alternately every evening, the interest all the while continuing to increase, with an unusual seriousness pervading every assembly. At the close of the second week Rev. E. P. Hammond arrived, and began to hold meetings, which have continued with increasing interest. Members of all denominations unite in the services. Last Sunday Mr. Hammond was in six different churches, besides the opera-house at night. It is estimated that one thousand two hundred covenant cards were given out and signed. From eight hundred to one thousand stood up for prayers.

BISHOP PIERCE.—Last week, says the Galveston Christian Advocate of January 1, Bishop Pierce concluded his round of Conferences, which commenced with the Indian Mission Conference early in October, and closed with the Texas Conference, December 13. He left immediately for his home in Sparta, Ga. It was our privilege to meet the Bishop at four of the Texas Conferences, and feel ourself deeply indebted to him for the patient and earnest interest he manifested respecting the enterprise we were called to represent before each body. It was only an expression of the deep concern he displayed respecting all departments of Christian effort in this great Southwest. Our great educational interests found him a warm friend and wise counselor. Out of the Conference-room he continued in labors abundant. He preached his way through Texas. On leaving he bears with him the prayers of both preachers and people that he may be spared the church for as many years as number the days of his venerable sire.

PERFECT valor is to do unwitnessed what we should be capable of performing before the whole world.

HE that lives to no purpose lives to a bad purpose.

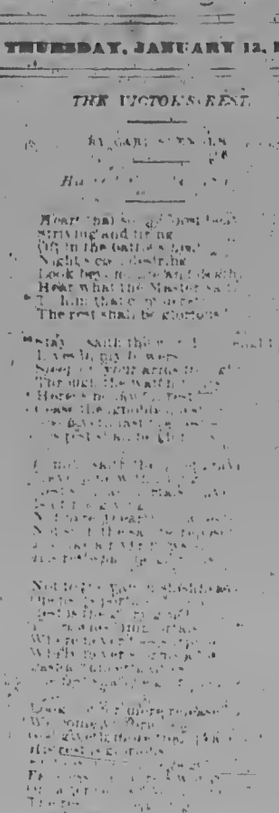
THE VICTOR'S REST.



Women Preachers. No. 2.

There are instructive lessons to be drawn from many other women of the Bible, who, if they did not preach, did something akin to preaching, and they had "standard" authority for it too. There was the "wise woman of Tekoa." She went boldly to the king, gained an audience, was listened to while she spoke in a parable and used the same style of metaphor as did Nathan, the prophet, and with pretty much the same effect. True, she had been instructed and sent by Joab, who was interested in Absalom's return; but he knew she was a wise woman, wiser than any man he knew, or he would not have employed her.

Then there was the woman of Abel. When Joab pursued Sheba to Abel, and was preparing to besiege the city, not a man had the courage or the wisdom to speak or fight; but a woman appeared on the wall and called aloud: "Hear! Hear! say, I pray thee, unto Joab, Come near hither, that I may speak with thee." When he came she said: "Hear the words of thy handmaid: and he said, I do hear. Then she spoke, saying, They were wont to speak in old time, saying, They shall ask counsel at Abel: and so they ended the matter." Concluding her address, she said: "Thou seekest to destroy a city and a mother in Israel: why wilt thou swallow up the inheritance of the Lord?" Another "mother in Israel," with more wisdom than all the men put together, publicly speaking to a great general, telling him what should be done if he would withdraw his forces and save the city. Then "she went to the people in her wisdom, and they cut off the head of Sheba, and cast it out to Joab." He parted with his army, and the city was saved by the wisdom of one woman. Why did she not stay at home? Those old prophets, and women, were very wayward, I fear, but none dared hinder and she stayed where she thought she ought to do, according to Mr. Dowling's theory.

When the good little eight-year-old King of Israel began to reign, he found things in a deplorable state, when he was eighteen he began to repair the "house of the Lord," when in some forgotten corner he found an old "Book of the Law." He sent for the prophetess at once. When he heard the law he rent his clothes in deep anguish at the terrible condition of the affairs of his kingdom. The queen was dead, and her priest and people so he called and sent his priest and other officers to "inquire of the Lord." "And Hilkiah, the priest, and Ahikam and Achbor and Shaphan and Asaiah, went unto Huldah, the prophetess, the wife of Shallum the son of the keeper of the wardrobe; now she dwelt in Jerusalem, in the college, and they communed with her." Here's a priest "inquiring of her sent by a king with a message for a woman to "inquire of the Lord." Why did he not go to some great wise man who knew all about "infallible standards" and "sacred positions?" Because there was no such man there that had the truths to understand what it was to "inquire of the Lord." They had become utterly corrupt and idolatrous that God took from them all wisdom and gave it to a woman and to "babes and sucklings."

Where did these loyal inquirers find Huldah? In the kitchen washing the dishes? No: "she dwelt in the college." They went to inquire of her concerning the law, so she was a lawyer also. The women lawyers have "infallible standard authority" for their calling. If the "women preachers" have not. Huldah was intellectually the equal if not the superior of the men in the college, for they went directly to her and made known their errand in a respectful manner. Why did they not go to the president and say: "We have come from the king with a message for Mrs. Shallum; is she at home?" No: her piety and learning were well known, and to her they went. They needed no introduction from man. Huldah waited for the sign of the Lord, which she knew so well. When it came she said: "Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Tell the man that sent you to me, Thus saith the Lord," etc. She did not bow low and say: "Please present my compliments to the king, and tell him that I am very sorry to be the medium by which he should receive bad news," etc. No; it was: "Tell the man that sent you to me." This was not through any want of respect for the messengers or the king, but because her station and office were equal to a man in the same station and office. And it proves that the women of those days were the equals of men in wisdom and intellect, or they would not have been chosen as judges and prophetesses. Mr. Dowling says: "The word prophetess does not convey the idea of modern preaching." Neither does the word prophet; neither was the priest of those days like a preacher of the present. He Mr. Dowling has "proved that the proper ideal meaning of the word (prophet) is to pray, entreat, make supplication," etc. We were simple enough to think the word meant a person inspired by God to announce or foretell future events. He says: "The prophetesses were never sent to any church, people or country." Deborah was "sent" with Barak on a mission to Judah's "people" to Mount Tabor, the "country" of Zebulon. She went first with Barak to Zebulon and Naphtali to collect the ten thousand men needed. To do this she must needs pass through Samaria, Manasseh and Issachar, which was considerable of a journey in those days for a woman. So we see she did "go about preaching." God chose her as an instrument to make known his will, and she would not have gone without divine authority; and no doubt she proclaimed, inculcated or preached to Barak and his ten thousand men every day, to remind them of their duty and to keep them in the proper spirit, for when all was ready she said: "Up! for this is the day in which the Lord hath delivered Sisera into thine hand."

How triumphantly she fulfilled her mission! And so we see that in Deborah, as in David, God disdained not to breathe his Spirit, "but made a woman his instrument to judge, to prophesy, to teach and to redeem."

So much for the women of the Old Testament. In the New Mr. Dowling gives Elizabeth and Mary their due meed of praise, in which all Christians concur. But when he says that the conduct of "Anna, the prophetess," "is a withering blast to the women preachers of this day and country," we differ again. The "learned Dr. Clark" says: "It does not appear that this person was a prophetess in the strict sense of the word, i. e., one who could foretell future events; but rather a holy woman, who, from her extensive knowledge in divine things, was capable of instructing others. So we find this lady widow proclaiming Jesus to all who looked for redemption in Jerusalem." She "departed not from the temple," attended constantly at the hours of prayer, which were nine in the morning and three in the afternoon, "with feelings probably not often more than twice a week." Spoke of him, "of the nature and design of his mission." In Jerusalem it is probable she visited from house to house. The marginal reading is Israel for Jerusalem. Were this reading to be received it would intimate that this excellent woman traveled over the land of Israel, proclaiming the advent of Christ. At all events it appears that this widow was one of the first publishers of the gospel of Christ, and it is likely that she travelled with a zeal unknown to house to house through the city of Jerusalem." So much for Dr. Clark. Dr. Whedon, on the same verse, says: "So long had been Anna's prophetess widowhood, so profound her piety, that, whether she orally uttered inspired predictions or not, she received the sacred epithet of prophetess."

Neither Zacharias, Joseph nor Anna are inspired to utter sacred song. But Anna gives thanks, and preaches Jesus to the Christians in heart and in anticipation, who doubtless, form her circle in life." And that is the way Anna "spread God and the church." Woman first preached the resurrection. St. Luke says: "It was Mary Magdalene and Joanna, and Mary, the mother of James, and other women that were with them, which told these things unto the apostles." St. John says: "Mary Magdalene came and told the disciples." Dr. Whedon says they "formed a band of female witnesses who testified only to be disbelieved."

When St. Paul went to instruct the youthful Timothy for the ministry he found him already well instructed and built up by the "unfeigned faith which dwelt first in his grandmother Lois and his mother Eunice." All he needed was "the putting on of my St. Paul's) hands." They had preached Christ to Timothy very effectively.

We have never heard or read of any of the many "women preachers" of the times of John Wesley and early Methodism being rebuked by him; and "the sum of all this" is that the Bible does authorize "women preachers."

LORETTA CRARY SADLER.

Greenville Collegiate Institute and Troy High School.

The Troy High School is located in Troy, about fifty miles south of Montgomery. Troy is one of the most prosperous towns in south Alabama. It has railroad communication with Columbus, and connects with all the roads in the State of Alabama. The school is ably managed by Prof. Walker and an able corps of assistants. The school is under the control of the Quarterly Conference, and is doing a good work for the churches and the cause of education.

The Greenville Collegiate Institute, located at Greenville, is under the control of the Quarterly Conference of the Greenville station. Prof. Dyer, an experienced educator, has the management of the institution, with a select faculty of experienced teachers. All the departments of the college are ably represented by the best of instructors. The past year this deservedly popular institution had in attendance about one hundred and sixty-eight pupils. Four young ladies graduated last session. The course of study is as thorough as in any female college in the South. Good board can be obtained in the best of private families for about $12 per month. Greenville is healthy, and for morality and high religious character her citizens are not surpassed by any city in the South. Nearly the entire better classes are in some branch of the church. There is no college south of Greenville to the coast. We ought to have and will have at least two hundred and fifty if the people can once more make a good crop. We hope by the close of the year to have our new buildings up.

We regard these schools as a move by the church in the right direction. We hope the time will come when every Methodist church will have her own school and educate her own children. Our former civilization has passed away, and we are now face to face with the new order of things. The church has done well in educating her ministry, and in some of the Conferences the preachers are too far in the advance of the people. The time has passed away when the means of the people will allow them to send their children from home. It is much cheaper to bring educational privileges to our homes than to go from home. Ten girls sent from home to any of our colleges will cost at least $3,000. That amount, properly invested in the employment of four first-class teachers, with $1,500 more added, which any town or respectable village can easily pay, will enable the community to organize and keep in operation as good if not better educational advantages than are often obtained abroad. This method gives the advantages to the masses. Thousands may by this method receive the higher education, where only a few have the means to obtain it under the old system. Brick and mortar have their influence, but the very highest educational advantages may be imparted in plain buildings. Where we now have ten colleges we ought to have a thousand. Why send your daughters abroad to graduate, when you may, by husbanding your resources, graduate her at home for one-third of the money?

It may be thought by some that this system will break down our colleges. It doubtless will break down all personal and individual enterprises that sacrifice the many to the few; but out of the thousand high schools some will, in the natural course of things, rise higher than others, and afford greater advantages; not arbitrarily so, but from meritorious reasons. The Methodist Church in the Alabama Conference ought to have ten thousand children in schools under the control and direction of the Conference. The church will wake up, before ten years, to her great interest in this direction. If the Catholic Church had pursued the same policy with regard to her children that the Methodist Church has, they would not have to-day one-third the power they have in America. Our church must retrograde under our present form of civilization, or we must educate the masses. One hundred educated men and women, as a power to carry forward the gospel in this age, are more powerful than a thousand illiterate ones; but where all are uneducated progress is impossible. We know that it will require manhood, and the full exercise of it, to attempt to establish Methodist schools in many of our towns and cities; but the few can give direction to the many by a proper example. The church has only to make the effort in a few prominent places to solve the problem, and then the most incredulous will fall into line. All thinking men see the utility of such a course, but many doubt the ability of the church to carry it out.

Very truly,

S. P. RICHARDSON.

Greensboro Female College, Ala.

The undersigned committee, appointed by the board of trustees to attend the examination of the classes of the Greensboro Female College, beg leave to report that the examination was entirely satisfactory, evidencing a clear and comprehensive knowledge on the part of the students, and an honest, conscientious, thorough training on the part of the teachers.

Without indulgence in the usual fulsome praise on like occasions, we are pleased to report that our highest expectations were fully realized. We heartily recommend the institution to the public as surpassed by none for thorough training of girls in every branch of education, and for that true discipline necessary to develop their characters.

OBITUARIES.

IN MEMORIAM.

The subject of this humble tribute, Mrs. NANCY BETTS, was born August 31, 1797; was married to Mr. Isaac Betts—her peer in excellence—May 13, 1813; October 27, 1875, aged seventy-eight years, one month and twenty-seven days, she exchanged the cross for the crown—

"Entered her Father's house;
Where the many mansions be,
To worship before the great white throne
Near by the Jasper sea."

She was converted in early life, and in connecting herself with the church of Christ she offered herself as a "whole-burnt offering" upon the altar of consecration, and during the course of a long life ever manifested an earnest, devout and conscientious Christian spirit. Her religion was not of a fitful, spasmodic character, but it formed a soft and genial principle in her whole life, and shone with an ever-increasing luster as she drew nearer the eternal shore. Religious reverence was her great characteristic. A face more sweet, more spiritual, more withdrawn at times from earthly objects, and more fully bathed in genuine devotion, I do not remember ever to have seen. How that image of piety and worship must abide with her children and large circle of friends! As the pebble cast upon the ocean's surface sets a ripple moving which widens until it reaches the other shore, so will her influence be felt even beyond the transitory scenes of this life. Truly her works do follow her. Her illness was of a very severe character indeed, having suffered excruciating pain for some months before her departure; but in it all she evinced a Christian patience and fortitude seldom if ever equaled. Often, while bowed down with intense pain, that was almost insufferable, upon hearing the names of Jesus and heaven she would instantly become animated and happy, and desire to fly away and be at rest; but would then remark that "it is far more glorious to suffer his will than to do his will."

The church was her delight. Well could she say, with David: "Oh, how love I thy sanctuary—the place where thine honor dwelleth!" When present at public worship, truly was the Lord in his holy temple, and, while she "kept silence" before him, her spirit, in truth, held sweet communion with her Lord and Savior. She loved the church as a type of her heavenly home. Even in her son's beautiful home a tinge of wistfulness and melancholy, which comes over the souls of those who stand on the calm, pure heights of life, like the purple hue that bathes at dawn and sunset the mountain's summit that is nearest heaven, came to her when in tender pathos she said: "Pray that I may have grace to wait my summons to go up higher."

She lived to see her surviving children united in Christ's visible kingdom, which was her earnest desire. When informed, two Sabbaths before her departure, that her last son had united with the church of God, with a triumphant smile she exclaimed: "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation."

She desired the church bell, which had not sounded a note on the evening breeze since it tolled the departure of her beloved consort, to be tolled at her funeral as a reminder to earth that she had joined the loved ones who had preceded her to the blissful shores of eternal bloom. She sleeps to-day by the side of her husband, near the church in which they were the moving spirits for many long years. Though she has passed from our midst, she still lives in the lives of many friends, pastor and loved ones.

JAMES S. RENCHER.

JANE ORLEAN DYKE, daughter of Andy and Drucilla Dyke, was born at Dyke's Mill, in Claiborne parish, La., February 14, 1861. She died at the residence of A. C. Harper, near Alabama church, Claiborne parish, La., on the sixth of September, 1875.

Orlie, as she was familiarly called, was warm-hearted and impulsive, full of life and song, loving and beloved by her associates. She was looking forward to the approaching camp meeting with much interest. Suddenly, however, the Master called her from us, and ere we were aware she was taking her leave of us, as we trust, for the better land. She had never made a profession of religion, but the last opportunity she had she presented herself at the mourners' bench as a seeker; and she told us, when stepping out into the unknown future, that she was going to heaven. After requesting us to tell her mother, brothers and sisters to meet her above, she became insensible, lived but a few hours, died without a groan or a struggle; and ere we could let her afflicted mother know of her sickness her unfettered spirit had gone to join her sainted father in the paradise above. Kind friends smoothed her dying pillow and attended to all her wants. We mourn her untimely death, yet not without hope, for our loss is her eternal gain.

A. C. HARPER.

Alabama Council, No. 102, United Friends of Temperance, Claiborne parish, La., adopted the following resolutions:

Whereas, Death, with his relentless hand, has invaded our council and taken from us our loved sister and lady regent, Orlie Dyke, so zealous and devoted in the cause of temperance, so loved and esteemed by all her associates; therefore,

Resolved, That while we meditate with sad hearts upon this dispensation of an all-wise Providence, right in all his ways and just in all his acts, and while we bow in meek submission and mourn our irreparable loss, yet do we rejoice in the hope that her spirit is now in glory.

Resolved, That in her the temperance cause has lost one of its brightest ornaments, having before her, as she did, a career of usefulness and untold blessings to her family and friends.

Resolved, That her mother has lost a promising daughter, her brothers and sisters an affectionate and devoted sister.

Resolved, That her memory shall live in our hearts, and that we tender our heartfelt sympathies and tenderest condolence to her bereaved family.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our council.

Resolved, That a copy be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and also a copy be tendered to her family.

DIED, at the residence of his son, in Marion county, Miss., September 25, 1875, after many days' sickness and infirmity of age, R. R. ARNEY, aged sixty-five years and twenty-eight days.

The deceased was born in Maury county, Tenn., August 28, 1810, and moved with his father to Warren county, Miss., in 1819. In July, 1830, he was married to Mary Ann Roberts; the next year, with his companion, he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, and went with the South at the division between the North and South. Soon after his connection with the church he was called on to be leader, and to perform various duties for the advancement of the cause of Christ, and for forty-five years he was a faithful worker in Christ's vineyard and a zealous member of the church. In 1836 he removed to Jasper county, Miss., where he resided until a few months before his death. During his long stay in Jasper he was often called to fill the most important and honored positions of the county, always performing his varied duties with general satisfaction to the people and honor to himself. In his death he leaves a companion and nine children—two daughters and seven sons to mourn the loss of husband and father.

H. C. ARNEY.

MRS. SALLIE A. COLLINS, wife of James Collins, departed this life, November 6, 1875, in Montgomery county, Miss., aged thirty-eight years and three months. She was born in Sumter county, Ala.; professed religion in Burke county, Ga., under the ministry of Rev. George Smith, in 1859, and endeavored to live a Christian ever therefter. She was truly a child of affliction, and bade adieu to earth and its sufferings without any fears of death, looking to heaven as her final resting-place: "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

J. C. LOWE.

AMELIA WARD COLLINS, daughter of James and Sallie A. Collins, died November 10, 1875, in Montgomery county, Miss., aged two years and three months. She was baptized by Rev. T. C. Parrish. When our little ones are taken and folded in the everlasting arms, it is cheering to our hearts, in the hour of affliction, to remember the Redeemer's own words: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

JAMES COLLINS.

DIED, in Magnolia, Miss., October 27, 1875, little HUBART OTTAMAR, son of B. F. and Louisa M. Winborne, who was born on the first day of June, 1871.

THE darkness of death is like the evening twilight—it makes all objects appear more lovely to the dying.—Richter.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 13, 1876.

A PERFECT DAY.

BY CARL SPENCER.

The earth is wrapped in a dream of bliss,
In a rest complete;
And the touch of the air is like a kiss,
Comforting and sweet.

And the tiny creatures are singing low
As a lullaby;
And the watching silence doth stir and glow
As the wind creeps by.

And there is the sun's own zodiac thing
On the chestnut-tops,
And yonder are tangled rainbows flung
With shimmering drops.

And over the things so soon to die
Is a gentler law,
A hush of peace, and a tenderer sky
Than the summer saw.

Open the windows wide to-day
Where a soul may dwell,
To the heart of a palace grand and gay,
Or a prison cell.

O look ye happy, till pleasure grows
To a nobler thing;
Till ye bring your joy, as the amber flows,
For an offering.

And look, ye weary, till grief and pain
Transfigured shine;
Rejoice for the crimson glory's gain,
The holiest sign.

O mourn ye never that hope is lost,
That rest delays;
They are after summer and after frost,
These sweetest days.

Often and often will skies be gray
And hearts be sad;
But the Lord doth make us a perfect day—
Let us be glad!

Martyrdom of Patrick Hamilton.

The following account of the trial and burning of Patrick Hamilton, the early martyr of the Reformation in Scotland, is taken from the latest volume of D'Aubigne's History, just published by Robert Carter & Bros.:

The proceedings began. The commissioners presented their report to the court, duly signed. Then Alexander Hamilton rose, for the archbishop had charged him to read the indictment, and the unfortunate man had not dared to refuse the horrible task. Hamilton was affected at seeing that man whom he took for his friend appear as his accuser. However, he listened with calmness to the address. His quietude, his noble simplicity, his frankness, his reliance in the Lord, impressed every one. "Truly," said Alesius, "no man ever more fully realized that saying: 'Trust in the Lord and do good.'" A contest began between the prior of the Dominicans and the young reformer. The latter, determined to defend his faith in the presence of that great assembly, pointed at the sophistry of his accusers, and established the truth by the testimony of the Holy Scriptures. Campbell replied; but Hamilton always armed with the word of God, rested, and his adversary was silent.

Campbell, unhappy and distressed, inwardly conferred of the doctrine professed by his old friend, and who no more. He approached the tribunal and asked for instructions. The bishops and the theologians having no mind to a public debate directed Campbell to commence a loud voice to attain errors which had not yet been reduced to articles, and to condemn Hamilton. This was putting the poor Dominican to fresh torture; but he stood on to the end. He turned before toward Hamilton and said to him: "Heretic! thou hast said that men have the right to read the word of God. Thou hast said that it is against the divine law to worship images. Thou hast said that it is vain to invoke the saints and the Virgin. Thou hast said that it is useless to celebrate masses, to save souls from purgatory." Here the unfortunate Campbell stopped. "Purgatory?" exclaimed Patrick; "nothing purifies souls but the blood of Jesus Christ." At these words Campbell turned to the archbishop and said: "My lords, you hear him; he despises the authority of our father, the Pope." Then, as if he meant to stifle by insults the voice of the noble and courageous Christian, "Heretic!" he cried, "rebel! detestable! execrable! impious!"

Hamilton, then turning toward him, said, in accents full of kindness: "My brother, thou dost not so, thy very heart believe what thou art saying." This was too much. The veil of tender reproof pierced like a dart into the soul of the unhappy Dominican. To find himself treated with so much gentleness by the man whose death he was urging, rent his heart, and an accusing cry was heard in the depths of his soul. Campbell was embarrassed and silenced. Hamilton's charity had heaped coals of fire on his head.

Then began the taking of votes. The members of the court having unanimously condemned the heresies of Martin Luther which had been already condemned by several councils, "We therefore declare the said Hamilton a heretic; and therefore him we deprive from all benefices, orders and honors, and we deliver him over to the secular arm to be punished."

These words spoken, the primate pushing the table the sentence which had just read, and the bishops, abbots and doctors present signed the document, one by one. The primate next, with the view of investing the act with more authority, invited such persons as held a certain rank in the university, set their hands likewise to it. Two boys, The Earl of Cassilis, for example, who was only thirteen years of age, brother, The priests assured them that they thereby did a good service, and this was very encouraging to such children. Then rose, and an escort of some thousands of armed men conducted Hamilton back to the castle.

This numerous escort showed the anxiety which the clergy entertained. Patrick's attempt had failed, but James Hamilton was still at the head of his soldiers, and many other persons in Scotland were interested about this young man. But nothing short of the death of their victim could pacify the priests. They decided that the sentence should be executed the same day. The primate was sure of the co-operation of the government. Angus offered no opposition to this iniquitous proceeding. Thus condemnation had hardly been pronounced when the executioner's servants were seen before the gate of St. Salvator's College, raising the pile on which Hamilton was to be burnt.

He arrived at the spot. All was ready—wood, coal, powder and other combustible material. Standing before the pile, he uncovered his head, and, lifting up his eyes to heaven, remained motionless for some moments in prayer. Then he turned to his friends and handed to one of them his copy of the gospels. Next, calling his servant, he took off his cloak, his coat and his cap, and with his arms stretched out presented them to him, and said: "Take these garments; they can do me no service in the fire, and they may still be of use to thee. It is the last gift thou wilt receive from me, except the example of my death, the remembrance of which I pray thee to bear in mind. Death is bitter for the flesh, * * * but it is the entrance into eternal life, which none can possess who deny Jesus Christ." The archbishop, wishing to ingratiate himself with the powerful family of the Hamiltons, had ordered some of his clergy to offer the young reformer his life on condition of his submitting to the absolute authority of the Pope. "No," replied Hamilton, "your fire will not make me recant the faith which I have professed. Better that my body should burn in your flames for having confessed the Savior than that my soul should burn in hell for having denied him. I appeal to God from the sentence pronounced against me, and I commit myself to his mercy."

The executioners came to fulfill their part. They passed an iron chain round the victim's body, and thus fastened him to the stake which rose above the pile. Conscious that acute pains might lead him to err, Hamilton prayed to God that the flames might not extort from him the least word which should grieve his divine Master. "In the name of Jesus," he added, "I give up my body to the fire, and commit my soul into the hands of the Father." Three times the pile was kindled, and three times the fire went out, because the wood was green. Suddenly the powder placed among the fagots exploded, and a piece of wood shot against Hamilton, slaying part of his body; but death was not yet come. Turning to the deathsman, he said mildly: "Have you no dry wood?" Several men hastened to get some at the castle. Alexander Campbell was present, struggling with his evil conscience, and in a state of violent agitation which rose with his distress and misery. The servants of the executioner brought some dry wood and quickened the fire. "Heretic," cried Campbell, "be converted! recant! call upon Our Lady; only say: Salve Regina." "If thou believest in the truth of what thou sayest," replied Patrick, "bear witness to it by putting the tip only of thy finger into the fire in which my whole body is burning." The unhappy Dominican took good care to do no such thing. He began to insult the martyr. "Thou Hamilton said to him: "Depart from me, messenger of satan." Campbell, enraged, stormed round the victim like a roaring lion. "Submit to the Pope," he cried; "there is no salvation but in union with him." Patrick was broken-hearted with grief at seeing to what a pitch of obduracy his old friend had come. "Thou wicked man," said he to him, "thou knowest the contrary well enough; thou hast told me so thyself." This noble victim, then, chained to the post and already half burnt, feeling himself to be superior to the wretched man who was vexing him, spoke as a judge, commanded as a king, and said to the Dominican: "I appeal thee before the tribunal seat of Jesus Christ." At these words Campbell, ceasing his outcries, remained mute, and, leaving the place, fled affrighted into his monastery. His mind wandered; he was seized with madness; he was like one possessed by a demon, and in a little while he died.

The tenderest affections succeeded these most mournful emotions in Hamilton's heart. He was drawing near to the moment of heart-rending separation; but his thoughts, though turning heavenward, were not turned away from his home at Kincavil. He had cherished the hope of becoming a father; and some time afterward his wife gave birth to a daughter, who was named Isabel. She lived at court in later years, and received on more than one occasion tokens of the royal favor. Hamilton, who had always felt the tenderest respect for his mother, did not forget her at the stake, but, commended her to the love of his friends. After his wife and his mother, he was mindful of his native place. "O God," said he, "open the eyes of my fellow-citizens, that they may know the truth."

While the martyr's heart was thus overflowing with love, several of the wretches who stood round him aggravated his sufferings. A baker took an armful of straw and threw it into the fire to increase its intensity; at the same moment a gust of wind from the sea quickened the flames, which rose above the stake. The chain round Patrick's body was red hot, and had by this time almost burnt him in two. One of the bystanders, probably a friend of the gospel, cried to him: "If thou still holdest true the doctrine for which thou diest, make us a sign." Two fingers of his hand were consumed; stretching out his arm, he raised the other three, and held them motionless in sign of his faith. The torment had lasted from noon, and it was now nearly six o'clock. Hamilton was burnt over a slow fire. In the midst of the tumult he was heard uttering this cry: "O God, how long shall darkness cover this realm, how long wilt thou permit the tyranny of men to triumph?" The end was drawing nigh. The martyr's arm began to fail; his three fingers fell.

HAVING ACCEPTED THE POSITION of Superintendent of the OCEAN SAW MILLS in this city, I beg to inform the friends and patrons of the late firm of Danner & Tanner that my best attention will, as heretofore, be given to their interests. I now have increased facilities for filling cargo orders for LUMBER AND TIMBER of all kinds for foreign and domestic markets.

The Ocean Saw Mills have a capacity of fifty thousand feet per day, and can manufacture pine, cypress, black walnut, oak, ash, poplar, sycamore, cotton wood, and other kinds of Southern and their lower sides uppermost; and at the time of a late convulsion in South America the rising of the ground caused the sea to retire, which returned like a wall in appearance, carrying before it inland vessels that had only a few minutes before been left dry, towns and people being overwhelmed by the restless revolt. Prof. Tyler, in Popular Science Monthly.

A CANDIDATE for admission to church membership under Rev. Rowland Hill, being requested to give some account of his first impressions as to the evil of sin and the need of the gospel, related a dream by which he had been affected and led to serious inquiry, to the hearing of sermons, etc. When he had ended Mr. Hill said: "We do not wish to despise a good man's dream by any means; but we will tell you what we think of the dream after we have seen how you go on when you are awake."

THE Irishman had a perfect appreciation of business who, being asked by the judge, when he applied for a license to sell whisky, if he was of good moral character, replied: "Faith, I don't see the necessity of a good moral character to sell whisky."

IT HAS been ascertained that Lake Aral, in Asia, is 242 feet higher than the Caspian sea, and 157 feet higher than the Black sea, Heretofore Lake Aral was supposed to be only 27 feet higher than the Black sea.

LET it not be imagined that the life of a good Christian must necessarily be a life of melancholy and gloominess; for he only resigns some pleasures to enjoy others infinitely greater.—Pascal.

THE knowledge is small which we have on earth concerning those things that are done in heaven; notwithstanding, this much we know, even of saints in heaven: that they pray.—Hooker.

Religious Intelligence.

—Eight Jews and Jewesses recently received Christian baptism in London.

—An invitation has been sent to Moody and Sankey from missionaries in India to visit that country.

—A Christian native, one of the students from America, is at the head of the educational department in Japan.

—A Japanese secular journal says: "Christianity seems to be becoming popular and powerful, while our religions are moving in the opposite direction and are decaying."

—A correspondent who recently visited Basle, Switzerland, the city of Erasmus, reports that the Methodist Episcopal Church there, Rev. C. Achurl, pastor, has a membership of 350, with an average congregation of 400.

—There are seventy-one Congregational churches connected with the General Association of California. One of them is at Reno, Nevada; the others are in California. The total amount of contributions last year was $157,502.05.

—The New York City Methodist Episcopal Church Extension and Missionary Society, in the nine years of its existence, has expended over $470,000 in carrying on its work. It has 17 churches and chapels under its control; nearly 5,000 children attend its Sunday schools, and it employs 23 pastors and assistants.

—The Young Men's Christian Association has been making unusual exertions for the salvation of souls, in many of the towns and cities of Indiana during the past few months. Hundreds have been converted. Prof. J. K. Watts, of New Albany, has occupied perhaps the most prominent place in these meetings, but he has been ably seconded by many others.

—The recent tour of Dr. Summerville in India occupied just six months, and enabled the evangelist to visit a great portion of the country and all the leading cities. His sermons and addresses were listened to by large audiences of the most various nationalities and castes, and awakened profound interest. Wherever he went the different denominations gathered around him, without any display of sectarian feeling. Although an old man, and notwithstanding the fact that he made two addresses per day, on an average, he left India with unimpaired health. It is to be hoped that his example will be followed by English and Non-American divines. Such evangelistic visits are earnestly desired by the English-speaking population of India, and would do a very great amount of good.

—Mr. Farnsworth, writing to the Missionary Herald from Cesarea, Western Turkey mission, makes the gratifying statement that the famine is now ended. The harvest has been an excellent one throughout the whole of the devastated region in Central Asia Minor. Upward of [illegible] were received from America for the relief of the sufferers, but much larger sums came to England. The missionaries of the American Board had in all about $25,000 at disposal, with which they gave seed and clothing to not less than [illegible] people. Seed-corn was also distributed among the farmers to the value of $2,500. The abiding results of the famine have been very sad. Mr. Farnsworth estimates that in his district about 50,000 have been reduced from proprietors to beggars. The missionaries still have about $7,000 in hand, with which to help the sick, widows and orphans over the winter.

—Dr. Gottheil, of New York city, protests vigorously against the proposition of the Jewish Messenger that there should be established in this country a central authoritative Jewish sabbath-law. He says that the very life of Judaism depends on the principle of "congregational autonomy." He quotes from a distinguished member of the Prussian parliament, who, in reply to opponents of the ecclesiastical laws limiting ecclesiastical power, referred to the Jews as proof that a church does not depend for permanence on the power of its central organization. This numerically weak and scattered body, he said in substance, survived the most terrible persecutions for long centuries without any combination whatever among them. Wherever a settlement was made they formed themselves into a congregation, assumed as the natural rights all the authority needed, and from their self-governing synagogues resisted, as from impregnable fortresses, all the assaults of a world in arms against them.

—The Mohammedans in the Philippine Islands are eagerly buying up copies of the Koran, and the importation of them has been very large. Only a few months ago the Spanish authorities in the islands, by a royal decree, ordered the destruction of all copies of the Koran that could be found. The decree was issued in consequence of the discovery that the Koran was being printed in Manila. The decree was not executed, and the Mohammedans have now got possession of a large number of copies.

Our Young People.

TWO HUMBLEBEES.

BY GEORGE COOPER.

Two humblebees, in coats of gold,
Once met upon a rose, I'm told,
And searched its sweetness, told on told.

One was a grumbler; the other went
About his work in rare content,
For labor was his element.

"Buzz, buzz," quoth he idle, "it doesn't pay
To toil so hard from day to day;
Leisure's best—I'd rather play.

"For what use is it, after all?
Our labors mind nothing fall;
The desk is full; the cake is small.

"We never share in what we hive;
We work that idle men may thrive;
I feel the selfest love alive."

"Buz, buzz, good neighbor," answered he
Who the just "because" of toil
"If" and "when" to your toil again.

"Must he who labors, foolish-brain,
Think but to content himself—
To heap with gain his dark-row shelf?"

"What makes our stirring, busy hour
Is that some others it may cheer;
Else are we unknown, blue or near.

"Such labor brings oft sweetest ease,
And makes the best of loves."

From Our Little Friends.

SEASHORE CAMP-GROUND, Dec. 28, 1875.

MR. EDITOR: I want to write you a few lines, as I am a friend of yours and of the ADVOCATE, as well as the other little girls who write to you. I have spent such a happy Christmas. I am at our Seashore camp ground, spending the holidays with my grandpa and grandma. My mother and father and sisters and brothers are here too. Santa Claus did not forget us, though he did not bring us so many presents as he generally does at Christmas. My mother says the times are too hard. But we are thankful for what we did get. I went to see the Christmas-tree at Biloxi, given by the Methodist Sunday-school. It was very handsome, the speeches made were very fine, and the house was so crowded that a great many people could not get in. I will write you again some time; but for the present I wish you a happy New Year.

Your little friend,
JOSEPH MCGRIFFON.

Cheerful Chats with the Growing Boy.

BY GRANDFATHER SEVENTY.

I know him well. He was a long, lean, pleasant-faced boy, with a stoop in his shoulders and a shuffling walk. He stooped because he was too lazy to hold himself upright. He shuffled because he thought it was less trouble to drag one foot along after the other than to lift it up from the ground.

There were about twenty boys in his class at school, the generality stood about the eighth or ninth in the class. Sometimes he would go up a little higher, for he seemed so much out of his place he easy more than five or six days, the tail-end of the class; then he would go up again, and always find his level near the last spot. On examination days he was a curious mixture of confusion and indifference. He was never certain of anything, except that he did not know the answer to the question that was asked him. And, even though he knew that he could not give a satisfactory answer, he would remain standing and nibbling his thumb nail till the teacher would tell him to sit down. It made no difference to him whether he succeeded or failed. Once in a very long while, as if by some happy accident, he would know a lesson well; but he was never elated by it. When he missed he was not badly discouraged. He was resigned to his lot, for he thought that, as among the Israelites there were some who were specially appointed to be hewers of wood and drawers of water, so some boys must have been made to stay near the tail end of the class. And, as that involved less labor than hewing wood or drawing water, it suited him exactly.

This poor fellow was so much at variance with the [illegible] as to leave a rich father, not to enrich [illegible] of the gentlemen who [illegible] to consider it a misfortune, but to possess his father was his subscription. He knew that his father would pay his bills; and that on the [illegible] gentleman who [illegible] some one would be divided among the family. That seemed to [illegible] every stroke of labor or [illegible] and to quench every spark of [illegible] from the boy.

Possibly a kind friend was [illegible] to interest him in [illegible] tried to draw him out of his [illegible] of reading. She asked him if he was in the habit of reading history. He answered that he did not care much for history. She then asked him about the poets, and drew from him the confession that "he did not know [illegible] poet from another, and cared nothing for any of them." She with works on science and art and travel and all of every. Finally she asked him: "Well, what do you read?" and he replied: "I don't read anything at all."

One bright summer [illegible] on the [illegible] fellow was [illegible] window of a seaside hotel. It was a window overlooking the yard. A cat was leisurely making its way across the yard. He threw a log at it from the window. As it was too large to make a good [illegible] passed through the yard. Soldier's [illegible] boys who [illegible] in the ocean with their [illegible] told him [illegible] if he had been [illegible] down and [illegible] shoot, but he said that it [illegible] pleasure; so he only [illegible] [illegible] gun. He [illegible] [illegible] he would get measured for [illegible] pair. A young man who [illegible] throw good [illegible] will never get along very prosperously. The last I saw of this lazy fellow he was wanting a situation, and asking all his friends to get one for him. He had finished his education—all the education he will ever get. He reminded me of the raw hand from Ireland, who, seeking a place in a store, was told by the proprietor: "I have very little work to be done now, my man." "Shure, sur," replied Pat, "thin it's just the place that I'll shuit me exactly, sur, for it's little work I want to do, sur." Our lazy fellow went from friend to friend, from office to office, but without success. Then he thought he would wait a few years, and perhaps he might get a place as cashier of a bank, or president of an insurance company. I never heard of any such position being offered him. Such people are not generally much sought for.

My boy, there is no place on earth for a lazy man or a lazy boy, except the grave. Lazy people may lounge along the whole three-score years and ten of their unprofitable existence, only to live unrespected and die unlamented. From the days of Solomon to the present time sluggards have been in exceedingly slight demand, and from present indications it is not probable that the demand for them will ever be greater than the supply. Wake up! Keep awake! Don't be a sluggard!—Christian at Work.

A True Story.

One cold day in winter a lad stood at the outer door of a cottage in Scotland. The snow had been falling very fast, and the poor boy looked very cold and hungry.

"Mayn't I stay, ma'am?" he said to the woman who had opened the door. "I'll work, cut wood, go for water, and do all your errands."

"You may come in, at any rate until my husband comes home," the woman said. "There, sit down by the fire; you look perishing with the cold;" and she drew a chair up to the warmest corner; then, suspiciously glancing at the boy from the corners of her eyes, she continued setting the table for supper.

Presently came the tramp of heavy boots, and the door was swung open with a quick jerk, and the husband entered, wearied with his day's work.

A look of intelligence passed between his wife and himself. He had looked at the boy, but did not seem very well pleased; he nevertheless made him come to the table, and was glad to see how heartily he ate his supper.

One day after day passed, and yet the boy begged to be kept "until to-morrow," so the good couple, after due consideration, concluded that, as long as he was such a good boy, and worked so willingly, they would keep him.

One day, in the middle of winter, a peddler, who often called at the cottage, called, and after disposing of some of his goods, was preparing to go, when he said to the woman:

"You have a boy out there split-ting wood, I see," pointing to the yard.

"Do you know him?"

"I have seen him," replied the peddler.

"Where? Who is he? What is his [illegible]"

"A real rascal," and then the peddler swung his pack over his shoulders. "That boy, young as he looks, I know, in order myself, and heard him sentenced ten months. You'd do well to look carefully after him."

Oh! there was something so dreadful in the word "jail." The poor woman trembled as she laid away the things she had bought of the peddler; she could she be easy till she called the boy in and assured him that she knew that dark part of his history.

Ashamed and distressed, the boy hung down his head. His cheeks seemed bursting with the hot blood, and his head quivered.

"Well," he muttered, his frame shaking, "there's no use in my trying to do better; everybody hates and despises me; nobody cares about me."

"Tell me," said the woman, "how came you here, so young, to that dreadful place? Where is your mother?"

"Oh!" exclaimed the boy with a burst of grief that was terrible to behold, "oh! I hadn't no mother! I hadn't no mother ever since I was a baby! If I only had a mother," he continued, while tears gushed from his eyes, "I wouldn't have been sent to jail, and kicked and cuffed and horse-whipped. I wouldn't have been saucy and got knocked down, and run away, and then stole because I was hungry. Oh! if I'd only had a mother!"

The strength was all gone from the poor boy, and he sank on his knees, sobbing great choking sobs, a sublime [illegible] with the sleeve of his jacket.

The woman was a mother, and, though all her children slept under the cold sod in the church-yard, she was a mother still. She put her hand kindly on the head of the boy, and told him to look up, and not forget that now he should [illegible] mother. Yes, even put her arms around the neck of that forsaken, desert child. She poured from her mother's heart sweet, kind words—words of counsel and of tenderness, oh! how sweet was her sleep that night, how soft her pillow! She had plucked some thorns from the path of a little stranger striving [illegible]

That poor boy is now a promising man. His foster-father is dead, his foster-mother is aged and sickly, but she knows no want. The "poor out-door pauper" is her support. Nobly does he repay the trust reposed in him.

"When my father and mother forsake me, the Lord will take them up."

How at this trustful appeal to a heavenly Comforter, in life's darkest hours, fail to raise the [illegible] or quicken the [illegible] pulse! In the [illegible] there arises the [illegible] of a new mother, stinging [illegible] to her [illegible] the twilight, while [illegible] day's [illegible] cares.

The Centennial.

A hundred years is no inconsiderable part of the world's historical period, and, as about one-sixtieth of the time since man appeared upon the earth, it is far from an unimportant fraction of the past of human experience. In relation to our individual life it seems a long time—at least three times more than the average age to which men attain. Three times over the human race has died and been born, since the independence of this nation was declared. The world has moved during these hundred years. The sun and the solar system have traveled through almost immeasurable distances in space, and the human mind has journeyed fast and far in its explorations of science and in its discoveries of truth.

On the whole, there has been progress in knowledge and also in goodness. The world is better than it was, although still bad enough. In the direction of missionary effort especially the century just ended has been the most brilliant and successful of any since the day of Pentecost. Another hundred years of like progress will witness the evangelization of the whole earth, and, we may hope, the general conversion of the world. Our own country has taken a century to begin to exist, and it is probably even now in a germinant and transition state. Something has been gained for free institutions, and something has been lost, but, under the Divine Providence, the problems of government are working toward their final solution.

The material resources of the country, however greatly developed, are yet but partially unfolded. If we have grown from three millions to forty-five millions since 1776, what will not another century do for us in the way of population? The Mississippi valley alone will in that time sustain one hundred millions of people. But a small part of our territory is now settled and under cultivation, and millions of acres are yet to be occupied and reclaimed for tillage. The mineral wealth of the country has been scarcely explored as yet.

To us the century has been eventful and fraught with momentous epochs, but the coming century is to complete and mature the results. The uppermost questions which the centennial brings us are those of education, religion and constitutional liberty. Education made universal, the Church separated from all State control and patronage, and liberty unshackled by sectional and invidious legislation. The elements of agitation and conflict are in these questions, and there will be din and strife about them for years to come. It will, we hope, be only a war of discussion and of opinion, finally settled by the suffrages of an enlightened people.

Of the millions who were alive at the date of our nation's birth only a few stragglers are left. A few decrepit and wrinkled faces may appear at the centennial celebration that were bright with the smiles of childhood when the Declaration was adopted. How completely an hundred years swallows us all up! How few withered and halting vestiges of the grand army of to-day will look upon the sun as it rises a century hence! The time is long or short according to the standard of comparison. We glory in a century, recount its deeds, and point with pride to the monuments of its enterprise and to the grandeur of its achievements. But when we think of him with whom a thousand years is as one day, and of the eternity that was and that is to be, what is a nation's life, and what are the days of man upon the earth? How briefly and with what small emphasis does the inspired pen tell of centuries and kingdoms! The events connected with the establishment of Christ's reign in the world, and with the advance of his cause, are alone important. The nations are as the small dust of the balance. The questions that agitate the political world—our social and sectional disputes, the material progress of which we boast—are of trivial significance in comparison with Christ and his empire.

The centennial year, if people choose to celebrate it in any enthusiastic way, should be marked by greater diligence and liberality in the service of God. Instead of spending their money in Philadelphia and in the North, we would advise our people to endow their colleges, build churches, contribute more freely to missions, and for one year see that their preachers are supported. We sincerely trust that much of the exuberant and noisy patriotism which the occasion promises may find expression in the payment of old debts, in the suppression of fraud, and in clean and honest living. Let the country, North and South, East and West, wash and be clean, and take a new departure, eschewing extravagance and corrupt practices, and returning to the frugal and simple habits of the early days of the republic. Let us also hope that the year will be made illustrious by a great political renovation, the restoration of constitutional morality, and the enthronement of justice, honesty and civil liberty in the national administration.

Short.

Dr. Haygood, writing in the Southern Christian Advocate of the North Georgia Conference, says:

"The preachers had a hard time last Conference year. The aggregate of their salaries in the North Georgia Conference footed up about $40,000 "short." Divided among them all the average salary would have been short if all had been raised. The preachers received $10,000 less than in 1874. It is easy to write these figures, $10,000; it is impossible to describe what they suggest. The "times were hard," last winter, and the estimates were low on this account. The stewards did not promise much; it was, for the most part, really just what they called it—an "allowance." Alas! much of it was no better than "item 3" in a certain Irishman's will: "I will $500 to my brother John." "Where is the $500 to come from?" asked a friend. "That's just it," said the benevolent fellow. "I will that John shall have $500—if he can get it!" So the meager salaries were "allowed"—to those who could get them. Most of the preachers did not get them except in part. Some of the preachers were "wise in their generation" on the principle that burned children dread the fire. Old Bro. Y. has had $600 and $700 and $800 promised before, and wound up by receiving "fifty cents on the dollar." He has learned not to make accounts on the strength of the "allowance." So he squeezed through, and is not in debt. How he did it he can't tell. Our notion is that he is a financier of rare ability. So are the majority of Methodist preachers—the current opinions to the contrary. Their poverty does not prove them to be bad financiers; considering how little they get their success in keeping out of absolute pauperism proves their financial ability. Right here we make bold to say that our itinerant Methodist preachers get more out of the little money they have than any other class of men.

"But young Bro. S. was not so wise as old Bro. Y.; at least he was more credulous. He thought the brethren meant to raise the $700 they "allowed" him as a single man. He bought a few books—that he needed very much—a new suit of clothes "for Conference," made a few necessaries, and at the end of the year they "settled" with him at thirty-three and one-third cents on the dollar, and the poor boy went to Conference, wearing his new clothes, in debt. How he is to get out he don't know. His unpaid allowance helps to make the sad and shameful aggregate of "$10,000 short." But there are many very sad cases where there has been hard living and no conference clothes. Preachers with families have "given a receipt in full" at thirty-three and one-third cents on the dollar. "Receipt in full!" Yes—at Conference the Bishop's benediction closed the business. Is it not about time to quit the following "customs that have crept in among us?" 1. Allowing less than will secure a decent living. 2. Allowing more than we intend to pay. 3. Counting ourselves morally and legally absolved from an unpaid claim when the Bishop's benediction ends the old and begins the new Conference year.

We commend to the prayerful consideration of all concerned the following facts: the preachers report a gain of nearly three thousand members: they report their salaries, as allowed, about $10,000 short of the short receipts of 1874.

We trust the Methodists of Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and everywhere else will lay this counsel to heart. This shortness bears hardly upon the preachers and their families. To be negligent or penurious in supporting the ministry is a grave fault, to say the least, and leads to evils manifold. We hope the present year will show a better state of the church conscience and a higher development of the grace of giving.

Centenary College.

MR. EDITOR: The communication from President Andrews, in your last issue, found a very hearty sympathy in the heart of more than one reader of the ADVOCATE. He expresses the personal obligation which I feel under to the Mississippi Conference and to the authors of the resolutions, in favor of Centenary College. A few of the friends of this noble institution have been toiling steadily for the last six years to place it upon a firm footing, and secure to the church the labors of those wise, godly and generous men that belonged to a generation now nearly gone. A most interesting notice of one of them, the Rev. Thomas Clinton, appears in the same number of the ADVOCATE. We have had, so it seemed to us, but little encouragement from either the Mississippi or the Louisiana Conference; but we doubted not the day would come when our brethren would awake and bring something to the support of their own college beyond mere reports and resolutions. That these two Conferences are abundantly able to support a first-class college no one can doubt. The South Carolina Conference raises annually for Wofford $2,386.83, or did in 1874, besides $200 for educating candidates for the ministry. This it does by placing a "collection for education" in its list of annual collections and assessments, with those for Bishops, missions, widows and orphans. The Virginia Conference, equally wise and enterprising, raised in 1874 for Randolph Macon College, from her stations and circuits, the sum of $1,975.56. This college also has a regular collection allowed it by the Baltimore Conference. The people are ready to sustain the educational interests of our church, and will do so without infringing upon the support of their ministers, their missionaries, their Bishops or their widows and superannuates. Surely the Conferences of the Southwest, in the midst of a Catholic population, abounding in Catholic schools, cannot fully discharge their duty to their own people, nor fairly express Methodism in its advanced position as a branch of Protestant Christianity, without a college fully equipped for the training of young men in the several departments of philosophy, science and literature. I may ask what other opportunity presents itself to our church in these States to build up a college for the developing and training of young men whom God has given to her? Centenary has already done a great work for Methodism in the Southwest. She has the respect and prestige which belong to a useful and extended career; buildings which have been extensively repaired since the war, which, with an expense of $5,000 more, can be made equal, for either use or ornament, to any college buildings in the Southern States. Then add $5,000 to her scientific apparatus and libraries, and an annual collection by the two patronizing Conferences, and we shall in two or three years have all that we need for giving the youth of our church as good an education as any young man requires to prepare him for usefulness and success as a merchant, a farmer, or for either of the learned professions.

For several years past we have been obtaining from a few friends of education some $1,200 to $1,500 as a supplement to the tuition receipts of Centenary for the support of its faculty. We shall, by the blessing of Providence, still hold on, praying that help may come to our aid in this labor of love; hoping and believing that both the Methodists and Methodist preachers of Mississippi and Louisiana will yet, by one effort of the will and a steady union of purpose, forever establish Centenary by consenting to give her an income more reliable than any form of investment that can be made in these capricious, unsafe times.

Yours truly,

J. C. KEENER.

NEW ORLEANS, January 7, 1876.

[illegible] are more powerful than a thousand illiterate ones; but where all are uneducated progress is impossible. We know that it will require manhood, and the full exercise of it, to attempt to establish Methodist schools in many of our towns and cities; but the few can give direction to the many by a proper example. The church has only to make the effort in a few prominent places to solve the problem, and then the most incredulous will fall into line. All thinking men see the utility of such a course, but many doubt the ability of the church to carry it out.

Very truly,

S. P. RICHARDSON.

Greensboro Female College, Ala.

The undersigned committee, appointed by the board of trustees to attend the examination of the classes of the Greensboro Female College, beg leave to report that the examination was entirely satisfactory, evincing a clear and comprehensive knowledge on the part of the students, and an honest, conscientious, thorough training on the part of the teachers.

Without indulgence in the usual fulsome praise on like occasions, we are pleased to report that our highest expectations were fully realized. We heartily recommend the institution to the public as surpassed by none for thorough training of girls in every branch of education, and for that true discipline necessary to develop their characters.

OBITUARIES.

IN MEMORIAM.

The subject of this humble tribute, Mrs. NANCY BETTS, was born August 31, 1797; was married to Mr. Nine Betts—her peer in excellence—May 13, 1813; October 27, 1875, aged seventy-eight years, one month and twenty-seven days, she exchanged the cross for the crown—

"Entered her Father's house,
Where the many mansions be,
To worship before the great white throne,
Near by the jasper sea."

She was converted in early life, and in connecting herself with the church of Christ she offered herself as a "whole burnt offering" upon the altar of consecration, and during the course of a long life ever manifested an earnest, devout and conscientious Christian spirit. Her religion was not of a fitful, spasmodic character, but it formed a soft and genial principle in her whole life, and shone with an ever-increasing luster as she drew nearer the eternal shore. Religious reverence was her most characteristic. A face more quiet, more spiritual, more withdrawn at times from earthly objects, and more fully clothed in genuine devotion, I do not remember ever to have seen. How that image of piety and worship must abide with her children and large circle of friends! As the pebble cast upon the ocean's surface sets a ripple moving, which widens until it reaches the other shore, so will her influence be felt even beyond the transitory scenes of this life. Truly her works do follow her. Her illness was of a very severe character indeed, having [illegible]

Death of a Centenarian.

The death of Father Boehm, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, occurred December 28. We take from the Central Christian Advocate the following account of the venerable preacher:

The announcement of the death of Rev. Henry M. Boehm, better known as Father Boehm, will not surprise our readers. His advanced age, and recently his precarious health, rendered death probable at any time, although thousands expressed an earnest desire that he might live to see the centennial year of American independence. He was born on June 8, 1775, in Lancaster county, Pa., where his father was a Mennonite preacher, and afterward prominent in the organization of the United Brethren Church. Henry received a fair education and joined the Methodist Church when he was twenty-two years of age. On January 6, 1800, he was licensed to preach by the Rev. Thomas Ware, and was appointed to travel Dorchester circuit, Maryland. He attended the General Conference of 1800 in Baltimore, and was present at the ordination of Bishop Richard Whatcoat. At this time Methodism was still unimportant, numerically and financially. "Except in the large cities there were few commodious churches, and the best churches of that day were very inferior to those of the present time. The Methodist meetings were held in private houses, barns, and wherever shelter could be obtained." They were sometimes opposed with violence, and Father Boehm was once stoned while he was preaching. As Bishop Asbury's traveling companion he traveled over the States of Ohio, Indiana, Tennessee, Georgia, South Carolina, and other points South and West. Father Boehm was personally acquainted with all the Methodist Bishops from Coke to Peck. For more than thirty years he was a member of the New Jersey Conference, and was in 1812 placed on the list of supernumerary preachers.

On the twelfth of December he made an effort to preach at Richmond, where he was seized with the illness which terminated in death on Tuesday, December 28. It is stated that his last hours were peaceful, and cheered by the bright hopes of the Christian in a special manner. He spoke frequently of his departure, and he had a strong impression that he would not live to see the close of this year. Father Boehm leaves two children living and several grandchildren.

The funeral services were held on Friday at the Woodrow Methodist Episcopal Church, near Huguenot station, Staten Island. Among the clergymen in attendance were Bishop Janes, Drs. Reid, Nelson, Hurst, Freeman, Hunt, McKeown, Crane. The first address was delivered by Bishop Janes, who said, among other things: "Our dear friend had felt the warmth of one hundred summers and the cold of one hundred winters. He not only celebrated his one hundredth birthday, but he lived to celebrate for the one hundredth time the birthday of his Savior and our Savior. His life was full of perils and anxieties. He had a very perfect physical organism, and observed with care the laws of health. The time came when his natural force was abated, when agility passed from his limbs, and our centenarian died. He stood as a pillar in the temple of God. There was no decline of spiritual force, no backslidings, no letting go of God. There were no spots on his character. He also maintained the life of a Christian minister for many years. Our century plant, that the church has looked upon so long, has bloomed, and has been taken into the presence of his Parent and his God. With increasing beauty and constant development his progress shall be followed forever. He was always happy with us; he is happier with God and the angels. He was a pleasant companion in this world; it was delightful to hear him recount the events of the past. But these events, I think, will have an infinitely greater significance when we see them in the light of eternity. During Bro. Boehm's life all the institutions of the church were established. The fact that he was chosen to be the daily companion of Bishop Asbury shows that he was worthy to be intrusted with the confidence reposed in him. His example will not fade from the eye of the church."

Death of A. M. Holbrook.

Mr. A. M. Holbrook, editor and proprietor of the New Orleans Picayune, died at Bludon Springs, Ala., on Tuesday, January 1. Mr. Holbrook was one of our oldest and most enterprising citizens, and widely known and esteemed as one of the most prominent and able journalists of the country. From the Picayune of January 6 we make the following extract concerning Mr. Holbrook's personal history:

A. M. Holbrook was born at Townshend, Vt., on the twenty-third day of August, 1808. In his twenty-eighth year he came to this city and cast in his lot among the people with whom all his interests and hopes were ever afterward identified. He was then in the prime of life and the fullness of his strength. There are not many left who were young men with him in New Orleans so long ago. Those who do remember him will call to mind a muscular, well-proportioned, fair-haired man, with bright blue eyes and a pleasant smile. Three years later (in the year 1839) he became associated with the proprietary firm of the Picayune, then known under the style of Lumsden, Kendall & Co. His business capacity, steady thrift, untiring industry and great practical good sense proved invaluable to the firm of which he was now the junior partner, and the Picayune grew steadily and surely in the public favor until it came to take rank among the foremost journals of the United States. After the death of its senior member, which occurred in the year 1860, the firm was known as Kendall, Holbrook & Co., and after the death of Mr. Kendall as A. M. Holbrook & Co. Only a little more than a year ago Mr. Holbrook became the editor and sole proprietor of the Picayune, which position he occupied at the time of his death. The journal to the prosperity of which he had devoted the best years of his life was his, and with a firm hand he was guiding it midway between the dangerous extremes of party fury when death relaxed his grasp.

Mr. Holbrook was a Northern man, but a true friend of the South. His nature was exalted and noble. He was generous to a fault, and the people of Louisiana, whom he served long and faithfully, will sincerely mourn his loss.

REV. W. SHAPARD, D. D.—Dr. Shapard, says the Galveston Christian Advocate, of January 8, who was transferred by Bishop Marvin from the Alabama to the Texas Conference, and appointed by Bishop Pierce to St. John's station, Galveston, reached our city with his family last week. Our duty at St. James deprived us of the pleasure of hearing him last Sunday, but we hear his sermon at eleven A. M. and at night spoken of in the warmest terms of praise, both by his members and a number of the congregation. On Tuesday night last his church gave him a reception which made him feel at home among his people. We give him a cordial welcome to his important field.

THE Baltimore Episcopal Methodist of January 1 says:

It affords us unspeakable pleasure to announce to our readers that the Rev. William P. Harrison, D. D., of the Georgia Conference, has become associate editor of the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist. His official duties will commence with the next issue of this paper, January 8, 1876.

Periodicals.

THE ALDINE.—We have received from the publishers, the Aldine Company, New York, a bound volume of this magnificent art journal of 1875, besides specimen copies of various dates, and the initial number of the new year, January, 1876. We know of nothing in the range of contemporary publications at all comparable to the Aldine. The number, size and exquisite finish of its engravings commend it to all who have any appreciation of art, while the literature which it supplies is of the highest order. In the January number the pictorial gems are numerous: Inspiration, The Pardon, Scenes on the Pennsylvania Railroad, and Shooting the Rapids. We believe the Aldine is furnished to subscribers at $5 a year. Each monthly number is worth this amount. A volume bound is an ornament to the center table, and a means of culture, refinement and instruction to the family circle.

—Ware's Valley Monthly for January is fresh and able, and up to the standard of a first-class magazine. Bishop Marvin concludes in this number a luminous and powerful paper on the Testimony, in which he defends the divine authorship of the Scriptures. Of other leading articles we note: The True Issue of the Financial Problem; The True Theory of Education; Just Twenty Years, continued; Christmas Chimes; The Successful Lawyer; Fidelio C. Sharp. The several special departments—personal and social, political, ecclesiastical, educational, scientific, literary—are conducted with discrimination and judgment. The Valley Monthly is edited by William M. Leftwich. Charles E. Ware & Co., publishers, St. Louis, Mo. Price, $3 a year.

—Appleton's Journal begins the new year with improved typographical appearance, and with strong literary attractions. Julian Hawthorne, who is to write exclusively for Appleton's during 1876, begins a characteristic series of papers under the title of "A Journey to the Unknown." It is a weekly household magazine, devoted to popular literature, and all matters of taste and culture; it aims to be comprehensive, including in its plan all branches of literature, and treating all subjects of interest to intelligent readers; it designs to be elevated in taste and pure in tone; it gives in quantity fully twenty-five per cent. more than the largest of the monthly magazines, while in quality its literature is of the highest class.

—Littell's Living Age, January 1, 1876, is an excellent number. It has: France Before the War, How I Won a Wife, German Home Life, Her Dearest Foe, Diversions of a Pedagogue, A Monk's Daily Life, Misquotation, Mr. Story's Nero, Pets, besides poetry and miscellany. The Living Age contains the important contributions to current literature of the ablest writers of Europe, and especially of Great Britain.

—The Ladies' Repository for January has a fine engraved likeness of Bishop McKendree, and other illustrations. Among many excellent things in the table of contents we note: The Basle Mission Fest; Nervous Diseases—Insomnia; Modern Egypt; The Alhambra; William McKendree. E. Wentworth, D. D., editor. Hitchcock & Walden, and Nelson & Phillips, publishers.

—The American Agriculturist for January is splendidly illustrated and replete with useful information. It excels all other periodicals in the beauty of its engravings, and in the variety and excellence of its reading matter. Published by the Orange Judd Company, New York. Price, $1.50 per annum.

—Visitors' Guide to New Orleans is the title of a small volume recently published by J. Curtis Waldo, No. 56 Camp street, New Orleans. To all classes of our citizens, and especially to visitors from abroad, it will be found a very convenient and useful manual of reference.

—Vick's Floral Guide for 1876 is a marvel of beauty in its illustrations and typography. People engaged in gardening and flower culture will do well to order a copy. Published by James Vick, Rochester, N. Y. Price, twenty-five cents.

—Lippincott's Magazine for January has: The Century—Its Fruits and its Festival; Up the Thames; Sketches of India, Illustrated; Gentel Homme and Gentleman; Famishing Portugal, and other articles.

—Golden Hours for January is filled with good things.

REV. A. W. WILSON, D. D., of the Baltimore Conference, and pastor of the Mount Vernon church, Washington, is announced as editorial correspondent of the Richmond Christian Advocate.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE is among the first of our Methodist colleges, located in the healthiest part of the Virginia mountains, and in charge of competent men. Rev. E. E. Wiley, D. D., is widely known as one of the best educators in the country. Our boys can be safely intrusted to his care. The spring term of this institution will begin on the twenty-seventh of January, and close June 14, which is commencement day.

CITY OF NEW ORLEANS.—Mortuary Report for 1875.—The mortuary report for 1875 shows a total mortality of 9,117. The greatest number of deaths from any single disease was 709 from consumption. Total whites deceased, 3,869; total blacks, 1,587; mulattoes, 564; not stated, 97. Males, 3,416; females, 2,666; not stated, 35. Natives of twenty-nine foreign countries, 3,504; of the United States, 4,996. Total mortality per 1,000 inhabitants, 29.43; mortality per 1,000 white population, 25.45; per 1,000 colored population, 39.69. Number of coroner's inquests, 850.

A MOB, supposed to have been composed of leading citizens of Arkansas, attacked a sheriff and posse in charge of two prisoners, one of them a murderer, named Dugan, under sentence of death. The mob fired at the prisoners, killing Dugan instantly, and departed.

THE movement of duty, under the influence of holy love of God, consumates what we call good works.—Eskine.

LIFE INSURANCE.—The Louisiana Life Insurance company is a home company, managed by a board of directors composed of the best and most reliable citizens. We do not know the strength of this board could be increased. The character of the gentlemen composing it will be a sufficient guarantee to all those of the safety of the company so far as the agents of directors can make it safe. In a few years the prosperity of the South will be completed and certain that any part of the country and her banks and insurance companies that are well managed will be the most solvent in Christendom. Before the late war the credit of corporations in this city, taking them as a class, was equal to those in any part of the world where similar institutions existed, and such will be the case again, and we think that those who patronize companies whose corporations are liquidated parts of the country, and whose money has built the railroads and made public improvements which have enriched other sections, have not acted wisely. The money which we have invested in such corporations, and which has been taken away from our city and State, would have been as safely invested here, and would have been sufficient to build all the railroads we need, construct the levees along our rivers, and left ample deposits in our banks to enable them to meet the necessities of our commerce.

We take pleasure in saying that Col. Samuel M. Todd, the president, and R. W. Ogden, Esq., vice president and manager, are very capable and very estimable gentlemen to transact business with.

OCEAN SAW MILLS.—Among our advertisements will be found the notice of the dissolution of copartnership of the well-known and very obliging firm of Danner & Toomer, and the cards of those two gentlemen in relation to the same, as well as the card of Messrs. M. Puig & Co. in relation to the Ocean Saw Mills of this city, of which Mr. Toomer is to be superintendent. Mr. Toomer has experience in the business, and combines with it the energy and promptness which are so highly necessary in the successful management of such a manufactory as the Ocean Mills.

CRYSTAL POLISH.—We acknowledge the receipt of a box of the Manhattan Manufacturing Company's Crystal Polish. We have not had time since receiving it to test its merits, but the testimonials of those who have experimented with it and tested its merits leave no doubt of its value in polishing furniture and metals, and we take pleasure in calling attention to the advertisement of it, in another column, by Edward L. Hall, Esq., whose office is 81 St. Tchoupitoulas street, New Orleans.

COMMERCIAL AND CLASSICAL ACADEMY.—The well-known experience and ability of Robert M. Lasher, Esq., principal of the above named institution, leave no doubt of the first character of the school. We take pleasure in commending the advertisement to be found in our columns to attention.

CHEAPER THAN AT AUCTION.—Such is the fact. Messrs. Brashman & Adams have made a still further reduction in prices, and are really selling goods at lower prices than many of the same articles bring at auction. Better go to 584 and 586 Magazine street than to the auctions. So we think.

MILLINERY.—We take pleasure in calling attention to the advertisement of F. B. Hardon, dealer in millinery and fancy goods, 27 and 29 Chartres street. It is a good and reliable house, and the proprietor is well posted in, reference to the demands of customers. Give him an early call.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

ALL THAT art can accomplish in beautifying, strengthening and preserving the human hair is effected by Burnett's Cocoaine. This incomparable Hair-Dressing imparts a glossiness that is healthy and natural. It is a cooling vegetable oil, agreeable and clean, and dresses the hair perfectly. jal3 ft

THE STANDARD ELECTRIC CONDITION OF THE HUMAN BODY.—Health is that state of the system in which the opposing forces are properly balanced. If the sum of the electric force exceeds that of the destructive forces, the result will be an increase in the size of the tissue in which the electricity resides; but if, on the other hand, the sum of the electric force is less than the sum of the destructive forces, the result will be emaciation or atrophy. This proposition is strikingly exemplified in the growth of childhood, and the decay of old age.

Health consists in an equilibrium of the electricity of the system, and disease consists in a disturbance of that equilibrium. If electricity is properly applied it will restore that lost equilibrium, and health will naturally result.

The best form of its application is Pauli's Electro-Voltaic Chain Belt, which induces a moderate, pleasant and continuous current of electricity around the body and throughout the system. The depot of the Pauli Belt Company is 12 Union square, New York. jal3 ft

IN THE active pursuit of pleasure or gain the inestimable blessing of health is too often forgotten until disease is firmly seated, and the time only realized by great bodily and mental suffering. The Liver is the vulnerable point in most persons, and the disarrangement of the organ involves almost the whole system; hence the reason why in the Liver Disease there are enumerated such a number of affections, and we claim the Simmons Liver Regulator to be a remedy for them all. jal3 ft

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 30, 1875.

MR. EDWARD L. HALL:—I have examined the sample of Crystal Polishing Powder left with me by you, with the following result:

I find it to contain no free alkali or acids, on which account it will be entirely free from corrosive action when applied to painted or varnished surfaces. It contains no gritty substances by which abrasion of either painted or varnished surfaces will result. The particles of the Powder are all angular, and, individually, as in most kinds of solids and in many other powders, crystalline. The particles are exceedingly small and uniform, which, with their angular shape, give it special value as a rapid, yet free cleaning agent.

Special Notice to Our Readers.

SPECIAL CALL.

AGENTS WANTED

To sell the New Patent Improved EYE-CUPS. Guaranteed to be the best paying business offered to Agents by any house. An easy and pleasant employment.

The value of the celebrated new Patent Improved Eye-Cups for the restoration of sight breaks out and blazes in the evidences of over 4,000 genuine testimonials of cures, and recommended by more than 1,000 of our best physicians in their practice.

The Patent Eye-Cups are a scientific and philosophical discovery, and as Alex. H. Wyeth, M. D., and William Beatley, M. D., write, they are certainly the greatest invention of the age.

Read the following certificates:

FERGUSON STATION, LOGAN CO., KY., June 6.

DR. J. BALL & CO., OCULISTS—Gentlemen: Your Patent Eye Cups are, in my judgment, the most splendid triumph which optical science has ever achieved, but, like all great and important truths, in this or in any other branch of science and philosophy, have much to contend with from the ignorance and prejudice of a non-skeptical public, but truth is mighty and will prevail, and it is only a question of time as regards their general acceptance and indorsement by all. I have in my hands certificates of persons testifying in unsurpassed terms to their merits. The most prominent physicians of my vicinity recommend your Eye Cups.

I am, respectfully, J. A. L. BUYER.

William Beatley, M. D., Salvisa, Ky., writes: "Thanks to you for the greatest of all inventions. My sight is fully restored by the use of your Patent Eye-Cups, after being almost entirely blind for twenty-six years."

Alex. R. Wyeth, M. D., Atchison, Pa., writes: "After total blindness of my left eye for four years, by paralysis of the optic nerve, due my after using one of your Patent Eye-Cups restored my eyesight permanently in three minutes."

Rev. S. H. Falkinburg, minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, writes: "Your Patent Eye-Cups have restored my sight, for which I am most thankful to the Father of mercies. By your advertisement I saw at a glance that your invaluable Eye-Cups performed their work perfectly in accordance with physiological law—that they literally fed the eyes that were starving for nutrition. May God greatly bless you, and may your name be a household one in the memories of millions of thousands as one of the benefactors of your kind."

Eugene R. Durant, M. D., says: "I will, and cheerfully future sales liberally. Use Patent Eye-Cups—they will make money, and make it fast. Just sit down quietly all day, let a supply of Eye-Cups and some blanks, and promises, as fast as I can write, fall in a shower."

Major E. C. Betts, of Mobile, November 14, 1875, says: "I have used Patent Eye-Cups, and am satisfied they are good." Farmers and others, call on the Hon. Horace Greeley, late editor of the New York Tribune, wrote: "Dr. J. Ball, of our city, is a conscientious, high-toned physician, who is in all capable of intentional deception or misrepresentation."

Prof. W. Merrick writes: "They have given me back my youth's vision. My sight is restored to some 70% of its former keenness. May Heaven bless and prosper you, Ball, for having bestowed upon me, after twenty years of blindness, the invention of your Patent Eye-Cups. I only regret I did not take up my old pursuits."

Adolph Bornberg, M. D., private Secretary to Emperor Napoleon, wrote, after having his sight restored by your Patent Eye-Cups: "With gratitude to God, and thankfulness to the inventors, Dr. J. Ball & Co., I herewith communicate the trial of the Eye-Cups, the full future result of which, as I am fully convinced, will be to all and every one that has sore or impaired eyesight. Believing, as I do, that some of the experiment with this wonderful discovery has proved successful on me, at my advanced period of life—almost seventy years—I feel bound to assure the Ayleos to any body afflicted of the sore people of Capitol."

ADOLPH BORNBERG, M. D.

Sworn and subscribed to before me, this 6th day of March, 1874.

JOHN C. BAUER,
Notary Public.

John C. Bauer, personally appeared Adolph Bornberg, made oath to the following certificate, and by him subscribed and sworn before me.

WILLIAM STEVENS, J. P.

LAURENCE CITY, Mass., June 6, 1874.

We, the undersigned, having personally known Dr. Adolph Bornberg for years, believe him to be an honest, truthful man, trustworthy, and to truth and veracity unspotted. His character is without reproach.

M. BONNEY, Ex-Mayor.
S. B. W. DAVIS, Ex-Mayor.
GEORGE S. MERRILL, P. M.
ROBT. H. TILWORTHY, City Treas.

Reader, these are A B C certificates out of thousands we receive, and to the aged we will guarantee your old and diseased eyes can be made new; your impaired sight, dimness of vision and overworked eyes can be restored; weak, watery and sore eyes cured; the blind may see; spectacles be discarded; sight restored, satisfaction preserved. Ramie and Jute.

The Hon. Fred. Watts has published his annual report for the year 1875. Two million two hundred and twenty-one thousand five hundred and thirty-two packages of seeds and plants have been distributed in the past year. A large majority of these have gone to sufferers in the grasshopper regions. The whole report is very interesting. The following more nearly concerns us, and may lead to a branch of industry for which this State is eminently fitted. We can grow everything that California can, and many things that will not thrive in that State;

"There is perhaps no one subject of agricultural production in which I have taken more interest than in that which relates to fibrous plants, especially ramie and jute. These have been brought into notice within the last four years through the influence of this department; and now they are about to assume an importance which is only beginning to be known. Both these plants will grow successfully in all our Southern States, and especially in California. The impediment heretofore to their production has been the difficulty of separating the liber from the gummy principle and green covering of the plants. But this problem, it is believed, has been now solved by the invention of machinery which, by the aid of certain acids, separates the fiber perfectly and economically. The ramie is a native of India and China, where the work of separating the fiber is done by hand at a cost of $150 per ton. The latest patentee of a machine for separating the fiber claims that the cost of separating it will not exceed $30 per ton. It is a beautiful and lustrous staple, in strength and brilliancy almost equal to silk; in fact most of the dress goods made to imitate silk fabrics are made in part of ramie, and its value now in England is about £75, or $375 per ton; and it is said that in California twelve hundred pounds of this fiber may be produced on one acre. If these anticipations be realized, of which there is now a reasonable hope, the country may anticipate the prosecution of a new, useful and profitable industry. Jute produces a fiber of a coarser quality, but admirably adapted to cordage and bagging; and, because of its length and strength, greatly superior to either flax or hemp."—Florida Agriculturist.

Upland Rice Culture.

The land should be plowed into eight inches at two feet, ridges opened, neigh rice sown in drill and covered about an inch. When fully up it should be barred off, as the old plan for cotton; then the ridge scraped clean. Yes, weeds, grass, &c., all shaved clean. When up again two or three inches, before grass, it should be chopped through the width of the hoe, and a bunch left, and soon. Soon a bull tongue or sold sweep should be used to turn earth to the stalk and cover any grass sprouts. Continue this often enough to keep clean and early stirred. If any crop cultivated requires less hoe work, or is made cheaper, I want to know it. Cheraw Gazette of Southern Plantation.

To the foregoing the editor of the Planter adds:

We have had occasion to study the rice question pretty thoroughly, both theoretically and practically, and have no hesitation in saying that for the labor expended in its culture there is no crop that pays better. But judicious care must be taken in selecting both seed and soil. When practicable, new land should always be selected for rice, as, unless treated as our correspondent recommends above, it is a good deal of labor to keep the crab grass out of the drills. When it is necessary to plant old land, the bedding-up should be done pretty early—a month at least before the planting-time—so as to give the earth time to settle and the first crop of grass to get well started. Then early in March open the bed with a narrow hill tongue, sow the seed pretty thickly, and cover with a sharp iron-tooth harrow. As soon as the young rice begins to show itself have off the entire ridge or bed after parting off rather shallow, as directed in the foregoing communication. The yield under this or similar treatment, and at a cost of not over $15 per acre, all told, will vary from thirty to eighty bushels per acre of rough rice, and this, too, on upland piny woods soil. The crop should be gathered early—say when one-third of the heads have passed the dough stage. At this stage the grain will plump up nicely, and the forage be better than the majority of blade fodder. [illegible] Thoroughly winter and [illegible] seed.

Prof. C. S. Brinley, of Woodlawn, says: At the late meeting of the Wilson Co. Agricultural Society, Mr. L. W. Ellsworth, secretary, exhibited specimens of the Wilson's Albany and Edmunds Prolific. The plant is strong and vigorous, foliage large, stalk stout, tall, with a few of their crown of fruit stalks long and strong, berries large, conical. Some of the berries crowned. Fruit scarlet color, highly polished, of bright crimson, brilliant and most excellent flavor; enjoy eating eagerly from the fruit.

As compared with the Wilson, the Prouty's seedling is a more profuse bearer; berries larger, [illegible] in size, and superior in flavor; plant more hardy, stout, vigorous, and to resisting drought better. The yield on the same field, during the season of 1875, was more than double that of the Wilson. Commenced picking the two varieties the same day; done picking the Wilson July 14. Finished picking the Prouty July 25. Different [illegible] in favor of the Prouty. Notwithstanding the big berry crop of 1875, the demand for this variety was so great that nearly the entire yield was sold upon the grounds where grown, at a price one-third greater than could be realized for the Wilson at Chicago at the same time.

The Prouty's seedling has been tested for four years, the experience of the present year (1875) clearly proving its superiority over other varieties, and establishing its reliable bearing qualities and great market value. In beauty, vigor, hardiness, flavor and profusion of bearing it is without an equal—a single plant from a runner of 1874 produced this season more than a quart of perfect berries."—Gardeners' Monthly.

THERE is no day which we may not lay unbroken on the altar of humanity if we will do our regular work in a noble way."—E. M. Holland.

Consumption, Bronchitis and Asthma.

[illegible] GROVE, Rowan, N. C.

Send one dozen Ointment and one of Cathartic Pellets. When Mr. A. W. Fisher brought his wife to me for examination I found her in the incipient stage of Tuberculous Consumption. Then it was I concluded to make a fair trial of Indian Hemp, and now there is a general demand for those remedies. The Ointment excels everything of its kind I ever saw or tried.

P. A. SIFFORD, M. D.

N. B.—This remedy speaks for itself. One bottle will satisfy the most skeptical. Excite is not a single symptom of CONSUMPTION but it does not take hold of and disappear with a few hours' cold, in twenty-four hours.

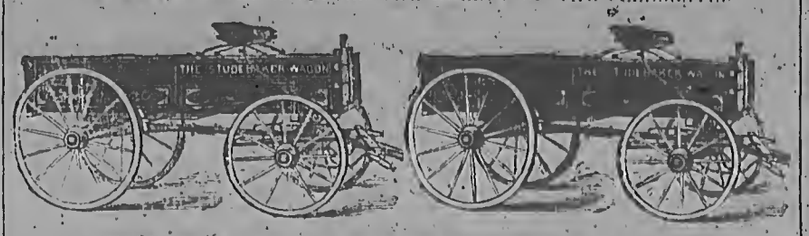
D. M. HOLLINGSWORTH'S PATENT DOUBLE SCROLL

The greatest improvement of the age on the old Concord Buggy. Twelve Bolts, instead of four, to hold the Springs and raise them up, so they cannot strike the axles at the end.

I HAVE RECENTLY ACCEPTED THE AGENCY OF THE CELEBRATED



STUDEBAKER WAGON.

FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds properly dated, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest-improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagons in which the SHAPE-SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally—hence the superiority of their work over all others.

SOUTHERN SHOE MANUFACTORY.

We hope all will follow the example of our friend. We have just made another visit to the Shoe Manufactory of our esteemed and enterprising fellow citizen, Mr. JOHN HANSEN, 24 and 26 Canal street, and, notwithstanding the hard times, we find that he is employing one hundred hands, and thereby supporting at least five hundred persons. His work is of the best quality, and is sold at the LOWEST PRICES, even below what the same goods can be bought for in the North. We advise all country merchants to call and see Mr. Hansen's stock before they purchase elsewhere, and thereby keep their money at home.

Ladies and gentlemen who wish to make Christmas and New Year presents of boots and shoes should call on Mr. Hansen before purchasing elsewhere, as they can have the goods at wholesale prices, and at the same time sustain home-manufactured articles.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The river is 6 feet 11 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending January 11:

	bales
Mississippi river and bayous	[illegible]
Red river	204
Ouachita river	301
Railroads	676
Lake	11
Mobile	1
Texas	1,852
Arkansas river	2,569
Total	4,225

On Saturday the market opened with a fair inquiry, and although operations were restricted by light offerings of the kinds most in request, yet the sales during the morning reached 2,500 bales, after which the movement became more active, and further transactions were reported to the extent of 7,500 bales, making a total for the day of 10,000 bales. The lower grades showed no less firmness than for several days previously, and in some cases holders accepted rates less than they had refused on Friday. This was especially the case with dusty lots. At the same time prime cotton with good, staple commanded quite full rates, whether of ordinary or strict ordinary. On Monday the movement commenced with a good sale of ordinary, and 2,000 bales changed hands during the morning at full prices for the latter quality, while the lower grades continued irregular, or easy, after which the movement was checked by increased activity and additional sales were reported to the extent of 5,000 bales, making a total for the day of 7,000 bales. Strict ordinary could be sold at 11c. on Tuesday the demand was slack throughout the day, and the sales were confined to 2,000 bales.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 21,500 bales, against 17,700 for the corresponding time last week and 11,200 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 2,036,284 bales, against 612,774 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 230,784 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 338,107—2,667,231 against 2,329,124. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 6,832 bales to Great Britain, of 78,721 to France, and of 147,029 to other foreign ports. We quote:

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. 22. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JANUARY 20, 1876. NO. 3.

NEW YEAR COUNSELS.

BY H. BONAR, D. D.

Do not dream away thy life-time;
'Twas not given thee for a dream;
'Tis a fragment of the eternal
Which thou must, thou must redeem.

Every hour is more than golden,
Every moment is a gem;
Treasure up these hours and moments:
There are princely pearls in them.

Be not selfish: earth's great sickness
Needeth self-denying men
To go forth among the dying,
And to soothe the beds of pain.

Doff the purple, don the armor,
Take the helmet and the shield;
Drop the garland, seize the weapon,
Make thee haste to take the field.

Lie not down among the roses,
Carry high thy cross and sword;
What! a Sybarite disciple
Of a self-denying Lord!

Be not weary; for the warfare
Hard and fierce will soon be o'er,
And the rest will be unclouded
On the green, unfading shore.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

COLUMBUS, O., Jan. 11.—In the House to-day a resolution, declaring against any division of school funds in the interest of any particular religious sect, was unanimously adopted.

A bill has been introduced imposing a fine of $50 for taking the name of God in vain.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 12.—At a large meeting of merchants on 'change to-day a resolution was unanimously adopted tendering to the respective executive committees of the Democratic and Republican parties the full use of their grand hall for the purpose of holding their national conventions this year.

ATLANTA, Jan. 12.—The Legislature met to-day. The Governor, in his message, says the valid bonded debt of the State amounts to $8,905,500. In regard to the late treasurer, John Jones, the Governor says the ascertained amount of the alleged payments made by him in the second redemption of bonds was $196,612.15. The entire amount for which he is liable on all accounts, as showed by a carefully prepared statement, is $291,969.45.

In concluding his message the Governor says it is not improper to state that the public credit has steadily continued to improve, and may now be justly considered as truly re-established. The message is a practical one, and deals entirely with State matters.

PASS CHRISTIAN, Miss., Jan. 12.—The Gulf Hotel, formerly Montgomery's Hotel, burned to the ground, with the exception of the kitchen and a few out-houses. The fire originated in a defective flue.

At the time of the fire the hotel was pretty well filled with winter visitors from the North, who were fortunate enough, with one or two exceptions, to save their personal effects.

About half the furniture was saved. The fire broke out at half-past ten o'clock this morning. Loss, $30,000; insurance, $15,000.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—Gov. Morgan called the Republican National Committee to order. Eighteen members and thirteen proxies present.

Mr. Garfield, in urging the location of the convention at Cleveland, said it should be held where "it would do the most good." We cannot afford to lose Ohio. The last vote stood: Cincinnati 20, Philadelphia 16, Chicago 7—no choice.

The committee to issue the usual call are Senators Howe and Morton, Messrs. Chandler, Gorham and Fulton. Adjourned to seven o'clock.

The committee met and selected Cincinnati as the place and the fourteenth of June as the time for holding the National Republican Convention.

MEMPHIS, Jan. 13.—In the election to-day for mayor, Flippen's majority over Longue, Republican, was 1,235. The Conservatives made a clean sweep and elected everything.

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—The ship Harvest Queen, from San Francisco for Liverpool, is believed to have been sunk by a collision in the Irish Channel. She had a crew of thirty persons, all of whom were lost, without doubt.

The steamer Adriatic, which reached here on Sunday last, collided with a vessel, about where the ship is supposed to have been lost, on the morning of December 31; but the captain of the steamer says he did not regard the affair of sufficient importance to mention it on his arrival. The Adriatic only lost her anchor stock, and she thought the ship suffered less.

The owners of the ship believe she left Queenstown, where she touched for orders, on the thirtieth of December; but the dispatch first reporting the loss says she left there January 5.

Cardinal McCloskey, addressing the Catholic Union, alluding to the discussion in relation to the Bible in public schools, said: "If this persecution which appears to be threatened is to come, let it come. They would emerge from it better Catholics than ever. This trouble, he said, was not going to be a religious but a political trouble. The Protestants had lighted the fire and expected the Catholics would supply the fuel. He urged them not to throw faggots on the fire, but as caution and advice entreated them, should a struggle come, to be true to each other and the church, and, above all, to those who were the innocent cause of it—their children."

Twenty-one freedmen, with two preachers, from New Orleans and Louisiana, sailed to-day for Monrovia, in West Africa.

MOBILE, ALA., January 14.—This morning, between twelve and one o'clock, a fire took place on St. Francis street. The entire block bounded by St. Michael, St. Francis, Royal and St. Joseph streets, with the exception of the Bank of Mobile, the Register office, old Western Union telegraph office and old express office, was destroyed. The fire originated in the rear of Lemoin Bros.' saloon, and, having reached Dane's stables, where a large lot of hay and grain were stored, spread with great rapidity. The loss, it is supposed, will reach nearly $100,000, a large portion being covered by insurance.

PHILADELPHIA, January 16.—The Christian Convention in this city, on the eighteenth and nineteenth instant, to be conducted by Moody and Sankey, promises to be a large one. It is expected that a thousand ministers from different parts of the country will attend.

MEMPHIS, Jan. 16.—A special from Greenville, Tenn., to the Avalanche says the widow of Ex-President Andrew Johnson died there last night, at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Patterson. She had never fully recovered from the shock caused by the sudden death of her husband.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—Mr. Morris' bill providing for an appropriation for the levees, introduced to-day, directs that the money shall be expended under the supervision of army engineers. Mr. Lamar says to-night that the majority of the levee committee is in favor of granting government aid.

Gen. Williamson's friends hope to have him here soon, and believe that if he is on the ground he will materially assist to defeat Billings.

Nothing further will be done on the amnesty proposition in the House until the judiciary committee reports on Banks' bill, which will probably not be for some time, when passion shall have subsided.

The Presidential agitation has suddenly broken out here with great fierceness. Morton's friends are much elated that Blaine's prospects have been so badly injured by his course on amnesty, and say that he has alienated the Conservative Republicans, while his wavering course upon the force bill last winter estranged the extreme Radicals.

The Louisiana delegation held a conference to-day, and agreed to vote solidly in favor of the centennial appropriation.

RICHMOND, Jan. 17.—Gen. Joseph R. Anderson, president of the Trobgar Company, makes a brief statement to the effect that the company having lost largely by the failure of other parties during the panic of 1873, has been compelled in consequence of these losses, and the continued depression in the iron trade, to suspend payment. It is hoped, however, that the suspension will be but temporary.

FOREIGN.

PANAMA, Jan. 3.—Peace prevails, with no visible signs of a rupture. Gen. Rafael Rizpuru, provisional president since the twelfth of October last, was inaugurated on the first instant, as constitutional president for a term of two years.

Dr. Antonio Borrero took his seat as President of Ecuador on the ninth ultimo. Gen. Jules Salnz, commander of forces, antiepathy resistance to the inauguration of Borrero, by Garcia Moreno officials still in power, deposed them and conducted the president elect to power.

Peruvian advices report that the money crisis was still further aggravated.

Admiral Montero, opposition candidate to Gen. Prado for the presidency, was taken to task by the government for misrepresentations and for his supposed intentions to head a rebellion.

Letters have been received in Lima, dated Cuzco, December 11, which announce the complete destruction by earthquake, on the fourth, of the town of Abancay, between four P. M. of the fourth and nine A. M. of the fifth.

No less than thirty-seven shocks occurred, several of which were very severe. The town is said to be completely destroyed, but it is not known what loss of life has occurred. The damage done is very heavy.

Telegrams announce a severe flood in Valparaiso. The business part of the city was inundated. Two lives lost and $1,500,000 of property destroyed.

The flood was caused by heavy rains and stormy winds on the tenth ultimo.

Several women have been registered, in some of the towns in Chili, as qualified voters, and will exercise the right of suffrage at the approaching election.

Costa Rica proposes referring the matter of her dispute with Nicaragua, regarding boundary, to arbitration, and declines further discussion with Nicaragua on the subject.

The people of Nicaragua are jubilant over the preference given by the commissioners at Washington for the Inter-Oceanic Ship Canal through Nicaragua territory.

The clergy of Salvador are yielding submission to the government.

The diet of commissioners from the Central American States, to mature a project for a confederation, will be held at Guatemala this month.

The Spanish steamer Algeria, with two hundred and four passengers, from Barcelona and Malaga, was wrecked off Cabras, near the entrance to St. John's, Porto Rico. Seven persons were lost.

BERLIN, Jan. 10.—The Pope has handed to the Bavarian ambassador at the Vatican a protest against the violation by Bavaria of the concordat by the enactment of a civil marriage law. The Bavarian government does not intend to notice the protest.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The Vienna correspondent of the Standard reiterates his statement that Austria is calling out reserves, and maintains that it is true. He shows that it has not been officially contradicted.

A dispatch to the Deutsche Zeitung asserts that signs pointing to the occupation of Bosnia by the Austrians multiply, and that the places where troops are to cross the Unna river are already fixed.

CALCUTTA, Jan. 11.—The Prince of Wales and suite have arrived at Delhi.

MONTREAL, Jan. 11.—There is good reason to believe Tweed is living with friends in the upper part of the city.

ORAN, Jan. 12.—A violent gale occurred in the western Mediterranean to-day, and swept the Algerian coast with great fury. The damage to property here is estimated at $100,000.

BERLIN, Jan. 13.—The Prince Imperial will not visit Philadelphia. Among other reasons, the condition of the Emperor's health renders the absence of his heir inadmissible.

LONDON, Jan. 15.—The Standard's Berlin special says: It would seem that an armistice has certainly been agreed upon between Church and State.

The Roman correspondent of the Germania, an Ultramontane organ, states that undoubtedly Bismarck is seeking a modus vivendi with the Vatican.

The Italie, a semi-official Roman newspaper, says that the Vatican has charged certain German prelates to report the conditions under which Prussian bishops shall be allowed to submit to Falk laws.

LONDON, Jan. 17.—The Times editorially urges adhesion to Andrassy's note. It says the Porte was never before so critically situated. If Andrassy's offer is allowed to pass Europe may soon be forced to apply harsher measures to wider areas. England stands in a peculiarly responsible position.

CALCUTTA, Jan. 17.—The Prince of Wales has left Delhi for Lahore. The Rajah of Cashmere is preparing to give him a magnificent reception.

CLOVER HILL, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: After rather adventurous trip of nearly one hundred miles by land and about the same distance up the great Father of Waters, I arrived here, on the packet steamboat Genevieve, on the night of the sixth instant. The little town in which our church is situated is the county seat of Issaquena county, Miss. It is built upon the banks of the Mississippi river, and derives its name (Mayerville) from its founder. We have a very neat little church building here, which will be all complete and ready for use in two or three weeks, only the finishing touches remaining to be given. It measures about forty-five by thirty or thirty-five feet, and is rather an imposing building in the little town. We also have a parsonage here, which, we are glad to know, the brethren are taking steps to have more comfortably and pleasantly fitted and furnished.

I preached my first sermon to a very attentive audience, assembled in the court-house, yesterday morning, which building we will use until our church is finished. The society here is rather small, though the field is indeed a rich one for ministerial labor. When we move into our own building we hope to have our Sunday school and other meetings duly organized and attended. There are, I suppose, as many as twenty families in our little town and vicinity, many of whom I have met, and received warm invitations to visit them. With the prayers of my brethren and the sustaining grace of God I hope to accomplish something here for Jesus.

Fraternally,

Letter from Great Britain.

MR. EDITOR: When the Prince of Wales left England, a few weeks ago, for India, several of the State church dignitaries announced that his visit would be followed by the most beneficial results to Christianity. Indeed one of the chief officers of that establishment declared that the prince would be a missionary of the cross. The accounts thus far received of his doings in that far-off land do not give much promise of these predictions being fulfilled, and show that the role of the missionary is not one his royal highness is likely to assume. We have had an account of his being engaged in a pig-sticking business, and of his being present in state at an exhibition where elephants, stimulated by drugs and goaded into fury, tore one another with their trunks, and gored each other's sides with the keen points of their tusks, and rhinoceros and tigers were driven into furious and fatal onslaught with bend and horn. English travelers have described these displays as being exceedingly disgusting, cruel and bloody. No European country but Spain would permit such exhibitions, and she only because under the total eclipse of popish darkness, and under the dire and degrading heel of popish tyranny. Of course much apology is made for the prince's presence and his engaging in such demoralizing sports; but nothing can excuse him for indorsing what the humane sentiment of his country has condemned. He has gone to India at the public expense, and is therefore the nation's representative. As such he will be regarded by the natives of India. Therefore the Christian in all his movements pays outward respect and homage to that Christianity which has made England what she is.

The thirtieth of November is now observed as a day of intercession for missions in Westminster Abbey and other churches of the Anglican communion. The Dean of Westminster has for several years made that day an occasion for displaying his liberality and catholic spirit. Two years ago he invited Max Muller to preach; last year Dr. Caird; and this year Dr. Moffatt, the late Livingstone's father-in-law and for nearly a half century a missionary in South Africa. The London Times says of Dr. Moffatt's appearance, etc.:

There is no true Christian, nor even any true friend to the cause of civilization, whether a member of the Church of England or not, who will not rejoice that by any means, regular or irregular, Dr. Moffatt, the true patriot of South African missions, should have enjoyed an opportunity of speaking on behalf of the cause to which he has devoted his life in a church and on an occasion worthy of his services. If at this moment the Church of England is duly interested in the evangelization of South Africa, and if she is really striking her roots in its soil, she owes, in the main, both the impulse and the opportunity to Dr. Moffatt and his fellow-laborers. Dr. Livingstone's strenuous energy and admirable patience have, indeed, been the chief instruments in paving the way both for our missionaries and our traders into the interior of the African continent; but he himself would probably have tendered a more cordial homage than any one else to the example of his father-in-law. For a man to have surrendered himself so completely to the interests of the people whom he desired to evangelize that he has at length to apologize to an assembly of his own countrymen, as Dr. Moffatt did yesterday, for having ceased to think in his native tongue, is a rare exhibition of the true missionary spirit. It will certainly be one of the most memorable incidents to be recounted by some future Dean Stanley, when supplementing the already recorded history of Westminster Abbey, that Dr. Moffatt, speaking near the grave of Dr. Livingstone, should have described within its walls the principles on which he and his illustrious follower laid the first real foundation of South African Christianity.

The venerable doctor was treated as a layman.

The Rev. F. A. Gince, a vicar of the Established Church, has published a work entitled "Some Questions of the Church Catechism and Doctrines Involved Briefly Explained, for the Use of Families and Parochial Schools." On page 17 we read:

We have among us various sects and denominations who go by the general name of Dissenters. In what light are we to consider them? A. As heretics; and in our litany we expressly pray to be delivered from the sins of "false doctrine, heresy and schism." Is, then, their worship a laudable service? A. No; because they worship God according to their own evil and corrupt imaginations, and not according to his revealed will, and therefore their worship is idolatrous. Is dissent a great sin?

A. Yes; it is in direct opposition to our duty toward God. As the Wesleyans approach nearest to the establishment, because of their use of the church prayers in their public worship, they are distinctly pointed out as being dangerous to the "faithful laity," to use a Proctorism, of the Church of England. What class of Dissenters should we be most upon our guard against? A. Those who imitate the most nearly the true church of Christ. Why so? A. Because we are more liable to be deceived by such, the points of difference being apparently few and unimportant; whereas the very circumstance of their being Dissenters shows that they have fallen from the unity of the Church Catholic, and consequently are not in a state of salvation. But are there not some Dissenters who use the same form of prayers as ourselves? A. Doubtless; but the prayers of the church being, for the most part, for the priest to offer up in behalf of the people, it must be sinful and presumptuous for those persons who are called dissenting teachers to address the throne of grace, usurping the priestly office. Is it wicked, then, to enter a meeting-house at all? A. Most assuredly; because, as was said above, it is a house where God is worshiped otherwise than he has commanded, and therefore it is not dedicated to his honor and glory; and, besides this, we run the risk of being led astray by wicked, cutting, words at the same time, by our presence we are witnessing our approval of their heresy, wounding the consciences of our weaker brethren, and by our example teaching others to go astray.

The omission of the r from the patronym of this gentlemen is more judicial than accidental.

Canon Liddon thus expresses himself about public opinion:

Public opinion is the common current of thought which exists in every body of human beings, whether large or small, when they are associated together, for no sooner are they formed into any sort of society than they create or secrete a certain deposit of thought and feeling in reference to all matters of common interest, to which they all contribute, and by which, in a greater or less degree, they are all bound. It is by this, as much as by the ordinary bonds of the law, that society is kept together, and it needs that mutual sympathy which common thought and feeling create in its members, and which varies according to their special character. Every family has its public opinion about the people with whom it associates; every village, every town, has its own particular way of dealing with the people and things around it; classes and professions have their public opinion, which is sometimes oppressively tyrannical; while above these, encircling and including them all, is the public opinion of the country, to which each in its turn contributes; and this again is swallowed up in the still larger opinion of the world, the influence of which will be felt more directly in the future than it is in the present, as civilization advances, and as nations are united and consolidated. But, continued the preacher, churches, as well as nations, have their public opinion, created by their members, and more or less controlling them, which is constantly being formed on matters of administration, and on the words and deeds of individuals, although it is by no means always either well-informed or just. After showing that it was a public opinion of this sort which St. Paul defied, Dr. Liddon went on to argue that simple defiance of public opinion is not of necessity a proof that the man who thus disregards the world is in the right. He may be actuated by bad humor, by a desire to give full play to his eccentricity—in which case public opinion will probably smile at him and pass him by, treating him as a privileged person, whose oddities are rated at their proper value—or, again, a criminal may defy public opinion just as he defies the law of God. Regarded from the moral and religious point of view, the preacher described public opinion as a compromise; for, he said, it affirms just so much of moral and religious truth as will keep society together, and no more; it affirms not the whole law of God, but only that part of it which it finds useful. As an illustration Dr. Liddon pointed to the punishment which public opinion—in this case in full harmony with the law of God—inflicts on the murderer, because murder, if unpunished, would break up society; while, on the other hand, it sanctions, even if under a protest, the marriage of divorced persons (which Christ in express terms condemned), because it fails to perceive that the free exercise of the passions thus permitted must in the end wound society itself. Thus the Christian finds himself compelled to defy public opinion, as St. Paul did, because he is above it, while the criminal defies it because he is below it. At the same time the preacher argued that no good man will differ from the opinion of his church or country without extreme reluctance, although those who live above it must inevitably come into collision with it. So had it been from the time of Christ, and so it must ever be; but before a man steeled himself against the judgment of his fellowmen, and still more of his fellow-Christians, he ought to be very sure of his ground. After referring to various classes of men, who must, if faithful to their principles, defy the opinion of their countrymen, and suffer in consequence, the canon concluded by quoting his text upon fitting motto for the dead, a suitable inscription for many a tombstone, and said that he feared the old proverb, "De mortuis nil nisi bonum," was not in as much favor now as in days gone by. At the present day death unchained many a tongue which was silent while the dead man lived, and which, directly the usual conventionalisms had been breathed around his coffin, began to murmur against him. Such hard words the preacher deprecated, although he reminded his hearers that for the dead it was a very small thing so to be judged of man's judgment, for they had already passed to the eternal throne, and had learned what awaited them at the final judgment day.

MR. EDITOR: "Procrastination is the thief of time" is an old and oft-repeated aphorism, and yet, if only our bad purposes were deferred and prevented by this means, well for us. I write this in reference to my intention of writing for your ever-valuable paper. Perhaps procrastination in that case was well, as I fear my letters might have unsettled some poor oppressed ones who were sighing for deliverance from evils entailed upon them by the sanguinary strife through which our country has passed. I think a spirit of discontent is unfortunate, if not really wicked. "Be content with such things as ye have, for he hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee," "Having food and raiment, let us be therewith content," are Scripture admonitions and promises that afford a deep and abiding solace to the soul, unlike the selfish, distrustful spirit of this world of greed and gain. Here is the tossed soul's quietizer: "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee!" Peace! Troubled soul, be still! Thy God speaks! Repeat slowly that promise: "I will," etc. Contentment—not stoicism—may be cultivated under the auspicious reign of grace, until "Prisons would palaces prove

If Jesus would dwell with me there."

Some of us have tried it. The internal condition is of more consequence than externals. True, we are largely creatures of circumstances, yet we can often manage and manipulate circumstances to bring out of any and every condition good. I am looking at things from the high plane of Christian attainment under the gospel of Christ, our Lord. There is a grand philosophy in "knowing how to want and how to abound, and in whatsoever state we are to be therewith content."

I have made the above reflections in comparing our State and prospects with your once prosperous and happy State. I have tried to keep myself posted as to matters and things with you, and conclude you have a long and dreary night of darkness and sorrow. I notice in some of your secular papers long lists—column after column—of properties advertised for sale for taxes. This does not look like prosperity. The low price of cotton is indicative of impoverishment. And yet what a grand country is Louisiana! What recuperative power she possesses! Certainly she ought to rise, and will, by the blessings of God. Our country is emphatically one of plenty and peace, and yet some of us realize that we are children of want. Our various industries are generally prosperous, and there is a wonderful future for Oregon. My mind has undergone but little change since my earlier impressions. I am highly pleased with this Egypt of plenty in its agricultural, climatic and geographic aspects. Still I find myself not unfrequently longing for the associations, scenes and companionships of the seventeen years of my life spent in the Louisiana Conference. To break off from these (and I am not weaned yet,) and form new attachments and associations when a man gets over forty years old, is a hard thing. The good Lord has been pleased to raise up for me and mine many friends here, but it will take years for friendships to be cemented as in the days of yore. To have confidence in one, to be with that one in affliction, to be drawn by all the tender and endearing cords of Christian affinity and fellowship—such a friendship is truly sacred. I think I have many such friends in Louisiana.

"Bless be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above."

OUT OF THE DEPTHS.

BY O. J. W.

Out of the depths, O Lord, I cry;
My trust and hope I put in thee.
Let me feel thy presence nigh
And that thy arm will shelter me.

Out of the depths, O Lord, I cry;
Thine ear incline and hear my voice.
All my spiritual wants supply
And be of my inmost soul the joy.

Out of the depths, O Lord, I cry;
Let thy face upon me shine
My soul in hope to thee lift high
O fill it with a life divine.

Rev. Thomas Clinton.

At the Conference held in Natchez, in the close of 1823, Rev. Thomas Clinton was elected and ordained elder, and sent to Wilkinson circuit under the presiding elder-ship of Rev. William Winans, one of the most important appointments then in the Conference. His selection for this work, where he was called upon to minister to an intelligent and cultivated community, shows that he had been diligent in improving his mind and enlarging his mental resources, and that he was rapidly fitting himself for any post on that might be assigned him, studying to show himself approved, a workman that need not be ashamed. Had he spent three or four years of the freshness and vigor of his early manhood at Princeton, or even at Vanderbilt, would he have been as well prepared rightly to divide the word of truth? Would the sword of the Spirit have hung as loosely in the scabbard, or the shield of faith been as brightly burnished? Would even his intellectual faculties have been as active and alert to grasp every weapon of defense or attack? During the year 1825 he labored on the Amite circuit, under the same presiding elder. In 1826 Thomas Clinton and J. G. T. Hawkins were the preachers on the Alabama circuit, Cahawba district, R. S. Kennon, presiding elder. In 1827 he was stationed at Tuskaloosa, in the same district. At the close of this year he married Miss Anna Hanna, the daughter of Hon. Henry Hanna, one of the pioneers of Mississippi, and for many years a member of its Legislature. The lady, at the time of their marriage, was a ward of Rev. Dr. Winans, and they were married at his house. She still survives.

Of this period of his life, Sister Wall, the daughter of Dr. Winans, writes: "When I was quite a child Mr. Clinton was a constant visitor at my father's house. Children have eyes keen to detect shams. I could see there was genuine earnestness and religion about the character of this minister. His eye was single, his feet walked in the narrow path. A little girl could see that. He had a kind word for every one.

"Mr. Clinton married at my father's house. I was the sole witness of a little episode that occurred on the night of his marriage. He was walking on the gallery, when a negro man came up and accosted him as 'master' with great impressment. He seemed thunderstruck. 'Who are you?' 'Why, you have married our young missis, and now you are our master.' If he had heard of a great misfortune he could not have seemed more disturbed. It was the first intimation he had of the fact that his wife possessed a snug property. It was as good as a play to me. I saw that Uncle Clinton had married our Annie for love.

"They settled near our home, and in the absence of Uncle Clinton, while he was about his Master's business, I staid a great deal with his wife, and was quite at home with them. I loved to hear him talk and tell of his early life and travels. He was the son of Methodist parents. Their good name and church record was all the inheritance they left him."

In 1825 he traveled the Pearl River circuit, and in 1829 was returned to Wilkinson circuit; in 1830 Washington and Adams, and in 1831 Feliciana circuit. From this period until 1849 he filled various appointments as preacher in charge and as presiding elder. In that year he was superannuated, and so continued until death. For fifty-five years continuously he was a member of the Mississippi Conference. Fifty-four times was his name called in that body, and the question asked of his brethren: "Is there anything against Bro. Clinton?" and as many times came the response from those who had scrutinized his walk and conversation: "His life is blameless and his duty discharged." At the last session his name was again called, but "the roll-call of the heavens had received another shining soul"—the weary laborer had gone home to rest. He was never a "star" preacher—one to draw large crowds and fill a great space in the world's eye; but he was always practical, earnest and useful, full of zeal and the love of God, and his consistent life and devout conversation gave weight to his teachings. The character and variety of his pulpit efforts were somewhat remarkable. On great occasions and before large audiences, as at quarterly or camp meetings, he seemed to be overwhelmed with the responsibility, and rarely came up to the expectations of his hearers. But when least was expected of him he succeeded best. I have heard my father say that the best sermon he ever heard from him, and one of the best he ever heard from any man, was on a cold, sleety Sabbath morning, in a country church, with a very small congregation, when most men would have been discouraged from making any effort. But his ministrations were always profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for "instruction in righteousness;" and the good he accomplished by word and example, and the part he acted in spreading scriptural holiness over these lands, can only be known when the secrets of all hearts shall be revealed.

He was small of stature, apparently feeble, and incapable of much endurance. His countenance was bright, open and pleasant, and expressive of great benevolence. His manner with children and young people, while it had but little playfulness and no lack of dignity, was so full of genuine sympathy and so free from restraint that he invariably won their hearts and their confidence. I well recollect how, as a child, I loved his coming and delighted in his conversation. He would not pat me on the head, ask me a few questions out of the shorter catechism, and then ignore my presence; but would talk with me as friend to friend, make me feel perfectly at home with him, and lead me on to talk and think with him. The respect, confidence and love which he won from his own children cannot be surpassed. He reared a large family, sons and daughters, to "praise him in the gates." Of his four noble sons, only one survives. The fame and usefulness of his "preacher boy" is known and read of us all. His brilliant and accomplished daughter, Martha, long preceded him to the better land. The terrible tragedy which bereft him of the darling of his old age was recorded in the ADVOCATE about a year ago. With what Christian fortitude and submission he bore these afflictions, and his triumphant departure to meet them on the other shore, will be the subject of our next and concluding article.

New Year.

MR. EDITOR: Again we have welcomed the return of our yearly jubilee, and seen the fulfillment of the angel's prophecy: "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." I know not how the winds and the clouds were in the Crescent City, but God made the day at Delhi as balmy and fresh and beautiful as the Spirit of the Babe of Bethlehem, and sent joys enough to fill to the brim old as well as young hearts.

The Christmas of 1875 is a bright page in our life's history, which we shall always read with interest—"a green wood" in the past, where memory will often lead us to rest when we are worn and wearied with the cares and duties of an ever busy present, or sad at the approach of a clouded future. Every hour of the day passed on swift wings, and the night brought the sweet fulfillment of many bright anticipations. The ladies of the Methodist church had a Christmas-tree for their Sabbath school. They had had much to discourage them, and were not sanguine of success. Not many of them have large fortunes, but they have large hearts, willing, skilful hands and a zeal and energy that makes it almost impossible for "in vain" to be written upon any of their efforts. There was certainly no eye so critical, no taste so artistic as not to have been at least satisfied with this effort. To some of us it was so passing beautiful that it seemed as the "scenery of a fairy dream." When the crowd had assembled the teachers and children sung sweetly together "Christmas Bells;" then they had a prayer from their minister, Rev. B. F. Alexander; then began the cheerful and witty distribution of the gifts by their faithful and beloved superintendent, Capt. H. P. Wells. There was none forgotten, none neglected. The pastor and his wife must certainly have been complimented by the remembrances they received, though I believe she had the most gifts—may be because they thought hers the harder lot. But the thoughtful attentions and loving sympathies an itinerant's wife receives from this people make her pathway, I should think, smooth and pleasant enough.

The finely roasted turkey and exquisitely embossed fruit cake which they received from the tree, together with the "good things" which came bright and early from other quarters, must have made the dinner at the parsonage the next day worthy of the rich man's table. God bless the noble women of this little village. May they each one add to their zeal and devotion for their church a faith that flies upon wings and talks with God. Such "a correspondence fixed with Heaven is surely a noble anchor." May their prayers this new year be more than ever the effectual, fervent prayer of the righteous, which availeth much. May the longings of their hearts be to win some soul for Christ before the close of these twelve months. O may we all be so devoted, so consecrated, that the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit may abide with us, which, I know, is asking more than fortune or success, or any earthly good, but not more than is promised.—St. John xiv, 16-23. But household cares call me away from pen and paper, and our little blue-eyed darling in his crib looks as if he thought writing to an editor was a poor way to entertain a baby. If I had time to write, and you had time to listen, I would like to tell you of this little stranger, who is a bud of such rich promise that his mother sometimes, as she rocks him to sleep, sleeps herself, and dreams that may be he is a Wesley in embryo intrusted to her keeping.

Hurriedly I must tell you, Mr. Editor, you have a safe place in our hearts, and we wish you and your loved ones a happy, happy New Year.

A WANDERER.

DELHI, LA., Dec. 29, 1875.

Gleanings from the Wayside.

MR. EDITOR: With your permission I shall here give a short sketch of my experience, hoping it may encourage some other benighted traveler to set out with renewed vigor to run the race God has set before him. I was converted twenty years ago. For several years my Christian duties consisted, just before retiring at night, in reading one chapter in the Bible and repeating a short prayer. I attended church quite regularly, but went more to be in company with my friends than to be edified by the minister. Occasionally I read the history of some eminent divine, and often wished I could enjoy the communion of the Holy Ghost as they did. I well knew I had never experienced such wonderful manifestations of God's pardoning love and comforting Spirit.

I was never fully awakened as to my dependence and ingratitude toward God till he laid his chastening rod upon me. It seemed that Providence designedly thwarted every purpose of my life. The demon anger seemed to take possession of me—I was angry with myself, everything and everybody. For the slightest provocation my blood seemed to be on fire. I was "angry even unto death." Everything was wrong, simply because my heart was wrong. I was well aware of the presence of an idol in my heart, but was not fully convinced of the sin of the usurpation of God's throne till the Holy Spirit began to endeavor to dethrone it.

"Thou shalt have no other gods before me." My spiritual condition grew worse and worse; the cloud that intervened between me and God became more and more lowering and threatening, until I began to think I would most certainly be deprived of reason, and in fact did wish that I should become deranged if thereby I could only have peace of mind. The constant wail of my heart was: "Oh, God, give my troubled conscience peace, or let me find rest in the silent tomb."

"The sorrows of death compassed me, and the pains of hell got hold of me. I found trouble and sorrow." This state of mind continued for seven or eight years.

About three and a half years ago the pastor of our church (who, by the by, is a most zealous worker in the Master's vineyard) had a protracted meeting, when God graciously burst asunder the slavish chains of my burdened soul. I was made most gloriously happy—so perfectly transported with delight that I felt as if my soul would take unto itself wings and fly away. Yea, the glorious Sun of Righteousness arose at that time in my spiritual sky with such resplendent brilliancy that I shall never forget the vision, nor has that sun withdrawn itself since, but continues to shine upon and warm my heart. At that time God's Spirit took possession of my soul, and I find such sweet comfort in his soothing influence that he shall ever, for time and eternity, retain possession.

Now I fear not the revilings, neither do I seek the applause of this world. God is now my hope, light, life, my all-and-all. The only real pleasure of my life is in the performance of my religious duties, and holding sweet converse with him who loves his children with an everlasting love.

God has so fully imbued my with his Spirit that now my soul is enabled to cleave unto him, and neither life nor death, powers nor principalities can separate me from his love.

Fraternity, Etc.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE of the twenty-first instant I read an article from the pen of Dr. B. M. Palmer, of New Orleans, first published in the Southwestern Presbyterian.

I think the doctor has stated the question of difficulty existing between the Presbyterian Churches, North and South, in regard to fraternity and organic union fairly, and has solved it to a demonstration. The very same arguments apply just as forcibly to the two Methodisms. Until the Northern Church or the Southern Church is converted and changed the same difficulties obtain. And why any church, Presbyterian, Methodist or Baptist, should persist in courting this union, under existing circumstances, I cannot conceive. It is paradoxical. It would be an act of hypocrisy on the part of the Methodist Church South to go into union. While the Methodists of the South held slaves the Wesleyan Methodists of England withheld all fraternal intercourse with us. Now that the institution is forcibly taken from us, and constitutionally denied us, they propose to send greetings, etc. Though the institution is dead operatively, it is as much alive morally as it ever was in the Southern mind; and, to use the argument of Dr. Palmer in his correspondence with the Rev. Dr. H. A. Nelson, of Geneva, N. Y., "You say: We bring no accusation against your present character and standing. You brought them against us a few years ago. Yes, you reply, but they were true of you then. But we ask: Why are they not true of us now? Because, is the response, your circumstances are so changed that you cannot repeat the offenses now. But, we rejoin, our principles are unchanged; we are in heart just the same as when you denounced us."

This argument of Dr. Palmer is overpowering and irrefragable, and just the argument they would use to an unconverted man applying for membership in their church. "Have you been converted from your sins?" "No." "Do you still love your sins?" "Yes." "No disposition to be changed?" "None whatever." Would they receive him? By no means.

They regarded slavery as a "sin, a covenant with the devil, and a league with hell." We thought differently. For a connection with this pretended covenant the Northern Methodists expelled one of the Bishops of the church. If they were sincere then, they must be now; and while the Southern Church entertains precisely the same views in regard to the institution that she has ever done, and, according to Northern views, they are just as great sinners morally as they were in the day of Bishop Andrew practically, why do they want union? "Oh, consistency! what a jewel thou art."

Memory.

The storehouse of the mind receives its deposits without option. Reflections, it is true, but indelibly stamped upon the tablets of memory. We cannot rid ourselves of the garnered store while life and intellect last. Its ever-present influence is both subtle and powerful. Pity's tear, love's bright glance, sorrow's wail or anger's scowl are but answering cadences of different chords, struck upon our heart-strings, so that the unexpected sight of a familiar face, or even a withered flower, may cause one to live over again a period of his life. Be it pleasant or unpleasant, the whole train of incidents connected therewith appear in life-like reality, and the sense of pain or pleasure, as the case may be, is endured or enjoyed as at first. We are our own sowers and reapers, and can blame no one with what we garner.

Memory, in her sheltered nook in the storehouse of the mind, presents her pure, unsullied pages, day by day, for the impress of our thoughts, words and actions. A lie, a theft, an angry word, will blot, shrivel and darken a leaflet, and this will stain the purity and demolish the beauty of the next. But the penitential tear may, like a "pearl of great price," clasp these soiled leaves together, aloof from the others, that the remainder, still in their unsullied state, may bear the impress of only Christian graces and virtues, which will appear as "apples of gold in pictures of silver," radiating light that will guide us triumphantly through the changing scenes of life. Our records are before us for the past year. May we not resolve, as we enter the next, to have a still brighter and purer one at its close? We will "scatter seeds of kindness" to faith, reaping love and fidelity, and can have no better stamps upon memory's tablets to insure our happiness here and hereafter.

EMMIE K. BAILEY.

OBITUARIES.

MRS. MARY ELIZABETH WILLIAMS.

The Fayette circuit, Mississippi Conference, has suffered largely, during the year now drawing to a close, in the death of no less than eight of its female members: Mrs. Louisa Stampley, Mrs. Philadelphia Shackleford, Mrs. Anna E. Dent, Miss Matilda Jordan, Mrs. Mollie J. Scott, Mrs. Catherine Humphreys, Mrs. Anna Bullen and Mrs. Mary E. Williams. What a harvest for the church triumphant!

The subject of this sketch, Mrs. Williams, was born in Franklin county, Miss., December 19, 1831. Her parents, whose name was Guice, were exemplary members of the Christian or Campbellite Church, and endeavored, both by precept and example, to bring up their children to love and fear God. This daughter was converted and received into the church of her parents when about twelve years of age. Her conversion was thorough, and her religious experience and Christian character were remarkably consistent all through life.

On the sixteenth of February, 1853, she was married to Mr. John C. Williams, of Franklin county, Miss. Mr. Williams was a member of the Methodist Church. Many of your clerical readers will remember his sainted father, "Uncle Lecky," whose generous hospitality made his comfortable home a pleasant retreat for the weary itinerant. And the old homestead remained the same cherished resting-place of the ministers of God under the more recent management of the happy couple now severed by death.

About two years after their marriage Mrs. Williams united with the church of her husband, under the conviction that they could better serve the Lord and bring up their children aright by being in the same church. Besides, a thorough investigation of the doctrines and usages of the Methodist Church, and of the evidences of their conformity to the Scriptures, had removed all her objections to Methodism; and she became and continued till death a conscientious Methodist.

Mrs. Williams was one of the best of mothers. Her success in training her children for God and the church is noteworthy. She said to me, during her last illness, that she had always endeavored to bring up her children to love the house of the Lord. This will remind her former pastors, as it reminded me, that she was always in attendance upon the public worship of God with her children. The result is that her children, seven in number, are all members of the church except the youngest, a little girl of three summers.

Mrs. Williams was a congenial companion, a valuable helpmate, and a wise counselor for her husband through the whole of their married life. She was the presiding genius of his home, and all was order, neatness and sunshine under her administration. But the light is gone, and that house is desolate, that husband heart-broken now.

Last August Mrs. Williams took her bed with fever, supposed to be malarial, no one dreaming of anything serious resulting therefrom. After some weeks, the fever continuing, a physician was called in, who quickly perceived that the fever was occasioned by diseased lungs, the evident result of measles which she had about three years before. Every effort was made to arrest the progress of the fearful disease, but in vain. When informed of her situation it did not alarm her. She had been all her life preparing for that event. Her only regret was in leaving her husband and children, to whom she was greatly devoted. It was my privilege to visit her several times during her illness. I never saw any one look upon death with less fear. Perfect love had cast out the fear of death. She would speak of going to heaven with as much composure and assurance as one would speak of going to church. After the lapse of about a hundred days she began to sink rapidly, and it was apparent to all that her time had come. Five hours before her death she requested all to be quiet in the room. Then, in slow and distinct language, she repeated the Lord's Prayer. After every clause she would exclaim: "Glory to God!" The ability to repeat this prayer and to enter fully into its spirit seemed to be with her the grand consummation of her Christian experience and life. Fifteen minutes before she breathed her last she recognized and spoke to her husband, but said she could barely see. The light of this world was fading from her eyes, but the light of eternity was dawning. At five o'clock P. M. of the twenty-second of November, 1875, she departed this life.

W. B. LEWIS.

EPHRAIM O. BROWN was born in Tennessee on the eighteenth of May, 1830, and died of pneumonia on the twenty-second of May, 1874. He moved to Mississippi in early childhood, thence to Catahoula parish, La., and afterward to Franklin parish, same State, where he remained until his death. He united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Hurricane church, in the twenty-first year of his age. He was united in marriage to Miss Angeline Head on the twenty-ninth of December, 1859, in whom he found a true helpmate and a devoted Christian woman. He was a hard-working man, and by a life of untiring energy he left his family above want. He was not demonstrative in his nature—a man more of deeds than of words. As an instance of the strength of his religious principles through manifold temptations, when called upon to attach himself to the "lost cause" he left home with his Bible in his pocket, carried it through a war beset with many temptations, where satan slew more than the sword, fought a double warfare, and returned home as he went—a soldier of the cross. He was strictly honest and upright in his dealings, kind and accommodating to all, and within the circle of his acquaintance he left many friends and no enemies. A devoted wife and four children are left to mourn his loss. A short time before his death he intimated to his wife that his sins were pardoned and that he felt his acceptance with God.

During his last illness, while Bro. William Nash was with him to administer the consolations of religion, he expressed himself as realizing the fulfillment of the promise: "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." His death was calm and peaceful. As he glanced back over a life of toil on earth, and then contrasted it with that rest that remaineth to the people of God, into which he was now entering, he exclaimed, in the language of Christian triumph: "I am going home to rest." When his arm fell to his side, and the sword dropped from his lifeless hand, the church of which he was a member realized that there was one watchman less on the walls of Zion. Brethren of his acquaintance, the church needs your services; move to the front and fill up the ranks of those who have "fought a good fight" and died at their posts.

A. M. WAILES.

AN ELECT LADY.

NARCISSA B. WIER, youngest daughter of Abner and Lucretia Winn, of Tuskaloosa, Ala., was born in Georgia, June 17, 1814; married to D. S. Wier, in Northport, Ala., in May, 1838; lived in Alabama until the winter of 1856, and moved to Jasper county, Miss., and in 1867 she moved to the State of Louisiana, where she died December 8, 1875.

She was converted to God and united herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church South at the early age of ten years. Since that time she has been a faithful, devoted and consistent Christian. In her manners she was gentle and quiet; in her religious profession she was meek and humble, seeming always to have the glory of God and the good of the church at heart; in her attendance on the means of grace she was regular and constant; in her attachment to her pastors she was steady and faithful; as a wife and mother she was a model. Her life was a blessing not only to her family, but also to the whole church of which she was a member. She made her home what every wife and mother should endeavor to make her own—the dearest, brightest of all other places to her family and friends.

Her family, consisting of two sons, four daughters and two step-children, were under the ready control of her gentle eye and loving voice, and the deep impress of her instructions and example must ever abide upon them. For them she lived and labored, and to them she clung with undying interest when death was hushing into stillness the throbbing of her heart. The writer had the pleasure of visiting her during her sickness, and I do not know that I ever saw one so much composed and resigned to the will of God. Speaking to me of her departure, she said: "I have been in the jaws of death before. If it is the Lord's will I should like to stay awhile longer with my children; but I have lived long for this hour. Now let the will of the Lord be done. I am ready." She is at rest.

UNDER THE SNOW.

Beautiful things lie hidden
Under the snow;
Tulips and daffodils sleeping,
Myrtles with broad leaves arr creeping,
And blue-eyed forget-me-nots peeping,
Under the snow.

Beautiful things lie hidden
Under the snow;
The crocus, and dear little daisies,
And arbutus in wonderful mazes,
Its sweet-scented flowrets upraises
Under the snow.

Beautiful things lie hidden
Under the snow;
For they will awake in the morning;
When spring with warm sunshine is dawning
They will peep out from under their awning
Under the snow.

Our dear little Alice lies hidden
Under the snow;
The angels their kind watch are keeping
O'er our beautiful treasure safe sleeping,
No pain and no sorrow or weeping
Under the snow.

Yes, beautiful Alice lies sleeping
Under the snow;
But she will awake in the morning,
The bright resurrection-day dawning,
No more to lie down, midst our mourning,
Under the snow.

Catholicism and Protestantism in Mexico.

The Two Republics has published the following paragraph relative to the development of Protestantism in Mexico: "There are 125 Protestant congregations, 11 churches, 99 halls of worship—$139,000 is the probable value of church property—28 free day schools, 28 night schools, 2 orphanages, 2 theological seminaries, 6 presses employed in the publication of religious literature, 6 religious periodicals, 122 agents employed; $90,000 spent this year in carrying on the work."

The figures which contain the above notice are significant, and we will make some reflections upon them. For some time we have followed with particular interest the development of Protestantism in Mexico, not only as a curious event in the history of religious liberty, but taking into account the influence which the propagation of a new doctrine must exercise alike in the political as well as in the social order. To value this influence it is necessary to have in mind what Mexico has been, and what it is yet, in great part under the exclusive dominion of the Catholic system, and to compare the practical results which the religious doctrines of Catholicism and Protestantism have exercised in the two orders mentioned. A study of this kind would give sufficient material for many volumes, and hence we will limit ourselves to certain general observations which the intelligent reader will be able to complete.

The influence of Catholicism in Mexico may be considered under two very different aspects, but which are connected in themselves—as a civilizing element, and as a hinderance to progress. Its introduction into our country was not the effect of an interior evolution, occasioned by the peaceful propagation of Christian missionaries, but an act brutally imposed by the armed conquest which, upon laying the basis of a society composed of foreign elements, sunk into the abjection of bondage the ancient races which populated these territories. It is not necessary to examine the unanswerable superiority of Catholicism, even in the idle forms which it took in Spain in the sixteenth century, over the bloody cathenism of Aztecs. The truth is that these two acts—the introduction of Catholicism and the conquest—are intimately connected, being, in consequence, inseparable in the spirit of the indigenous race.

Considering the question from this point of view, we do not believe that the adhesion of the conquered race to the religious doctrine, which was imposed upon them in most unfortunate circumstances, was very deep; and this would satisfactorily explain to us the rare facility with which in our days the reformation has been planted. In effect Catholicism has had no deep roots in Mexico. The indigenous race, which has formed the immense majority of our population, could not but see it as an instrument of foreign domination, with which it could never have sympathy. If the missionaries partly succeeded in mitigating a little the horrible yoke of the conqueror, even if they carried their condescension to the extreme of tolerating to a great extent the old idolatry, it were not possible for those problematic benefits to erase from the soul of the Indian the profound hatred in which he held everything which was intimately or remotely connected with the great catastrophe which happened in the first part of the sixteenth century. Don Carlos Maria Bustamante firmly believed that, religious liberty once decreed in Mexico, the Indians would return to the bloody worship of Huitzilopochtli, this being one of the reasons why he combated a measure of the same kind. This fear, which will surely make every intelligent person smile, was upheld in a true fact, and the indigenous race did not have any solid adhesion to Catholicism. It is to be seen, then, that in spite of the influence which this doctrine has exercised in our actual civilization, it is very far from being identified with it in an intimate and profound manner.

In the embryo society which was formed in the shadow of the colonial power, the ecclesiastical body—the only serious organization then extant—did not make a part of the same society; it was above it, depending upon a foreign authority. The constant movement of the ever-growing emancipation which followed that power, even in the time of the absolute monarchy, is well known. The noisy disputes between regalists and ultramontanes have no other signification.

The uprising of 1810 came to make manifest all the tendencies which were found contained in the clerical system. The open antagonism in which the priesthood engaged with the cause of independence and liberty was the forcible consequence of its doctrines, dogmas and discipline, but also signified that the country had nothing to expect from that corporation, so much more dangerous was the only depository of religious and moral teaching. Out of the multitude of conflicts which surged from that period to our days this tremendous truth declared itself, becoming each day more perceptible. The Catholicism which had entered Mexico, sanctifying the conquest, was an irreconcilable enemy of emancipation, of liberty, and of the progress of the country. Thus it was that this doctrine, connected in some countries of Europe with the most glorious events of their history, in these which naturally rely upon all the prestige of those grand national memories, in Mexico now is found fatally identified, first, with the disasters of the conquest, and then with all the abuses, with all the violence, with all the enemies of liberty, placing itself constantly on the side of the oppressors, and arriving finally to provoke and to uphold the greatest of attempts, the blackest of crimes—treason to the country.

As is seen, we are cut off entirely from the dogmatic question, and completely locked up in the domain of history. The events which we have pointed out are undeniable, as also must be the consequences which are deduced from them. The vigorous defenders of Catholicism, consequently irreconcilable enemies of independence and of republican institutions, frequently complain of the hatred that the liberal party professes to the church. So, then, in that complaint there is much of truth. But it is not the liberal party merely; it is the grand mass of society—that which feels a beginning of aversion toward a doctrine rickety and mean in goodness, whose influence has arrived to be omnipotent, infinite in evil. All this is explained in a natural and logical manner. When an institution is founded in force, in fraud, and the imbruting of the people; when it erects in the fundamental beginnings of its teachings the condemnation of all civil and political liberty, not being discovered in all its acts anything else than the most scandalous speculation—that institution, we say, is fatally destined to disappear, receiving a death-blow at each step that the people take in the way of advance and improvement. Such has been the history of Catholicism in Mexico. Such must be its necessary conclusion.

After this, the rapid progress that Protestantism is acquiring in Mexico cannot be a surprise to any one. The conservative party, protectionist in the matter of religion, combated as long as it could the liberty of conscience, as well as all other liberties; but the day this liberty stood definitely secured, it was consoled in believing that nothing could be made to counterbalance the Catholic influence, depending for this upon the proverbial ignorance of our people, and their meridional imagination, etc. This time, as always, it was mistaken in its calculations. The terrible blow which the church had received, and the germ of death which had been planted in its bosom from its implantation in these regions, was not perceived. The breach was profound; no human power could succeed in spanning it; criticism, and more than it—acts—had precipitated the work of dissolution; doubt had penetrated into the world of dogmas; the beginning of an evil whose ravages had been made to be felt everywhere had wished to be surprised; the field could not be better prepared for the invasion of a new doctrine, which came to conciliate the peace of spirits with material and social welfare, which came to place in memory the duties of religion, with the duties, no less sacred, of country.

We have said it, and we repeat it, that we keep ourselves entirely free from every dogmatic question. Let the Protestant and Catholic divines dispute as much as they like as to which of both forms is most in conformity with the genuine doctrine of Jesus, we only consider its social and political side in relation to the future of the country. So, then, in this sense, without reserve, we applaud the propagation of Protestantism in Mexico, for we see it is the only means of terminating a crisis dangerous enough. Catholicism is impotent to detain the advances of the philosophical spirit; this same system facilitates those advances by its unlearnable and illiterate conduct. Unbelief and indifference, powerful to destroy, cannot satisfy the religious aspirations of a people; and the shipwreck of morality—i. e., the relaxation of all social ties—must follow the shipwreck of beliefs, if there is not a new center to direct and purify religious operations.

Such is the show that Protestantism is said to make among us. The people must harmonize their tendencies; they cannot progress in one sense while they remain stationary in another; a society cannot be retrograde and monarchical in the church, progressive and liberal in the public square. The nineteenth century and the middle age are incompatible; and it is not the worship of Huitzilopochtli, nor the semi-Arabic Christianity of Philip the Second, that can satisfy the moral necessities of a republican people which aspires to occupy a worthy place in modern civilization. Translated from the Porvenir of November 23, 1875, by J. W. Butler.

Wonderful Memories.

Pliny says that Cyrus had a memory so prodigious that he could name every officer and soldier in his armies; and that Lucius Scipio knew every Roman citizen by name when that city contained more than two hundred thousand capable of bearing arms. Seneca speaks of a friend, Ponthus Latro, who could repeat verbatim all the speeches he had heard declaimed by the Roman orators. It is said that Joseph Scaliger committed to memory both the Iliad and the Odyssey in twenty-one days. Sir William Hamilton tells us of a young Corsican, of good family, who had gone to Padua to study civil law, in which he soon distinguished himself. "He was a frequent visitor at the house and gardens of Muretus, who, having heard that he possessed a remarkable art or faculty of memory, though incredulous in regard to reports, took occasion to request from him a specimen of his power. He at once agreed; and, having adjourned with a considerable party of distinguished auditors into a saloon, Muretus began to dictate words, Latin, Greek, barbarous, significant and non-significant, disjointed and connected, and he wearied himself, the young man who wrote them down, and the audience who were present. 'We were all,' he says, 'marvelously tired.' The Corsican alone was the one of the whole company alert and fresh, and continually desired Muretus for more words, who declared he would be more than satisfied if he could repeat the half of what he had taken down, and at length he ceased. The young man, with his gaze fixed upon the ground, stood silent for a brief season; and then, says Muretus, 'Vidi facinus mirificissimum. Having begun to speak, he absolutely repeated the whole words in the same order in which they had been delivered, without the slightest hesitation; then, commencing from the last, he repeated them backward till he came to the first. Then, again, so that he spoke the first, the third, the fifth, and so on; did this in any order that was asked and all without the smallest error. Having subsequently become familiarly acquainted with him, I have had other and frequent experience of his power. He assured me (and he had nothing of the boaster in him) that he could recite, in the manner I have mentioned, to the amount of thirty-six thousand words. And, what is more wonderful, they all so adhered to the mind that after a year's interval he could repeat them without trouble. I know, from having tried him, he could do it after considerable time.'"—E. S. Drone, in Scribner.

AN ASSOCIATION has recently been formed in this city (New York), under the name of the "Common School League," the object of which is to perfect an effective organization of the friends of our common school system for its defense and protection from the covert machinations or overt assaults of its enemies. In view of the concerted efforts now making by the Roman Catholics for the division of the school fund, and the various other schemes for the perversion or subversion of our public schools, such an organization has become a necessity, and, if wisely conducted and kept rigidly aloof from party management or control, is worthy of the co-operation of all friends of the American idea of education, as well as of the friends of civil and religious freedom. From a circular which has been sent to us we learn that the specific objects of the league are as follows: "1. The maintenance of the non-sectarian status of the common schools of the United States. 2. The defense of the schools against attacks, sorial or political. 3. The retention of the Bible in the public schools without note or comment, and its customary use in any school supported wholly or partly by the taxpayers of any State or by the United States. 4. Opposition to any grant of public money to any sectarian institution of any name or denomination whatsoever, whether said money is derived from the octoms, taxes, fines or licenses, from either municipal, State or national sources. 5. To collect and diffuse information relating to the common schools of the United States, in all their varied relations; to receive any reports, memorials, complaints or suggestions concerning the schools and their management, discipline, government or routine, and to take such action upon them as may be deemed necessary or advisable."—Christian Intelligencer.

DURING the past year 107,616,000 postal cards were issued by the Post-office Department, of the value of $1,076,160. The estimate for the next fiscal year is for 154,967,000. The total number of postal stamps sold was 973,275,025, valued at $25,477,511. The number of dead letters handled during the year was about 4,500,000. Of these, 31,799 contained money aggregating $61,000; 14,225 letters contained drafts, notes and bills of exchange of the value of $2,997,817; 135,027 letters contained samples of merchandise, postage stamps and miscellaneous articles; 3,740,000 contained nothing of value.

WHEN the Earl of Bradford was brought before Lord Chancellor Loughborough to be examined upon application for a statute of lunacy against him, the chancellor asked him: "How many legs has a sheep?" "Does your lordship mean," answered Lord Bradford; "a live or a dead sheep?" "Is it not the same thing?" said the chancellor. "No, my lord," said Lord Bradford, "there is much difference. A living sheep may have four legs; a dead sheep has only two. There are but two legs of mutton; the two fore legs are shoulders."

OLD DR. ABSALOM was a quack, and shockingly ignorant. On one occasion he was called by mistake to attend a council of physicians in a critical case. After considerable discussion the opinion was expressed by one that the patient was convalescent. When it came to Dr. Absalom's turn to speak, he said: "Convalescent! Why that's nothing serious. I have many times cured convalescence in twenty-four hours!"

THE BRITISH LIQUOR BILL.—The London Times states that last year the people of the United Kingdom bought 20,205,306 gallons of alcohol in distilled spirits for £41,574,134; 54,699,300 in malt liquors for £72,932,426; 2,592,660 in foreign wines for £12,963,288; and 650,000 in cider, perry and British wines for £1,000,000, making a total of £128,469,818, or over $642,000,000.

OF this I am sure, that, howsoever they wrong me, they cannot overmaster God. No darkness blinds his eyes, no jail bars him out. To whom else should I fly but to him for succor?—Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 30, 1875.

MR. EDWARD L. HALL.—SIR: I have examined the sample of Crystal Polishing Powder left with me by you, with the following result:

I find it to contain no acids or alkalies, on which account it will be entirely free from corrosive action when applied to paint or metallic surfaces. It contains no poisonous substances by which any accident or injury could happen while using it. The particles of the Powder are all angular, and not rounded, as in most kinds of sands and in many other polishing agents. The particles are extremely small and hard; which, with their angular shape, give it especial value as a rapid and fine polisher. Yours truly,

Transplanting.

Many persons are of the opinion that February is the best month to transplant fruit-trees. To such our remarks must apply, and not to those who have grown wise by experience.

February is doubtless a good month to transplant in for those who have either been misguided by a prevailing popular notion as to the particular fitness of February for that operation, or who have been unable to attend to this before; but we prefer transplanting sooner, for many reasons.

Deciduous trees (those that shed their leaves in autumn) are apparently in a dormant state from the time frost stops their growth until the sap comes again toward spring; this is true, in a measure, if the tree is left undisturbed, but so soon as it is removed there is an immediate perceptible activity of the sap to throw out new roots at the places severed by the spade. Therefore we may say that in this latitude vegetation, although inactive as to the formation of new leaves and wood during a period of about four months, is never inert in forming new roots. Let a tree be taken up in November, examine the roots in January, and in almost every instance young roots, varying from one to three and four inches in length, are visible. This admonishes us to plant as early after the fall of the leaf as practicable, in order to allow the tree the benefit of the winter's root growth, which gives the early transplanted tree marked advantages over the late one. In average years we find that May and June are what can be termed dry months, and this almost regular spring drouth is very detrimental to a tree transplanted late in the season. Still, with the proper care and some attention to the following hints, trees can be successfully transplanted even as late as the middle, and in some rare seasons the end of March.

Never select a piece of ground for your intended orchard site that is not well drained, either naturally or artificially. A soil intermixed with some gravel is more desirable than a compact clay, as the more porous the soil the easier will the root penetrate it. Plow the whole of your ground to the greatest depth the team at your command is capable of performing that indispensable operation. If your soil has been stirred to a depth of fifteen to twenty inches, your trees will afterward amply repay the work. Holes should never be less than two feet wide, and from eighteen to twenty-four inches deep. If wider, so much the better. Remember that from your work in laying the foundation of your orchard will depend all your after success.

Avoid heating manures in planting. A few shovels full of well-decomposed compost, well mixed with the soil, are advisable. Many trees die at the approach of hot weather from having been planted with an over-dose of unfermented and stimulating manure.

Wood ashes are very beneficial if used in moderate quantities. After your tree has grown a year or two you can fertilize your soil as much as you please, without hinderance to the health of the tree, but do not stimulate it at replanting. The economy of the tree has been destroyed by removal; compare it to a sick man just convalescent, whose health will gradually improve by a moderate, but nourishing diet, and who would at once relapse into his former illness by an excess in his food.

When your soil is prepared, select your tree with care. Young planters select a tree for its large size and large head of branches, but more experienced ones discard these points and have an eye to the roots. Without these, and an abundance of these, your tree is useless to plant. Plenty of healthy roots, few if any branches, the main stem cut back to two feet in a yearling tree, to four in an older one, will insure success. But leave your tree with a full head of branches, which you are afraid to shorten in, as you hate to destroy its fine appearance, and toward summer the roots, being in inverse proportions, will be unable to supply nourishment for the whole head gear, your tree will languish and struggle through its first season's growth; whereas, had there been no useless limbs to sustain, but a new head allowed to be formed in its permanent place, the result at the end of the growing season would have shown you where the advantage lies. You can hardly prune too severely when transplanting, but use your pruning knife moderately when your tree is growing, and especially when attaining a bearing age.

Examing the roots of your tree; remove with a clean cut all bruised ones; spread them out evenly as they radiate from the main stem; throw your soil gently first; sift in so that no hollows are left. Do not plant the tree any deeper than it stood before it was taken up; neither plant it too shallow; both are to be avoided; but of the lesser evil, too shallow planting is preferable, to too deep planting. The roots can grow downward, but they will not grow upward.

Don't stake your tree unless you have not heeded our advice regarding cutting back. When this is the case, we would say that perhaps dearly-bought experience may teach you a lesson if you despise friendly advice. If a tree cannot sustain itself by its own roots, throw it out; it will never do any good; there is no foundation below.

If you have been compelled to delay planting until late; use a good mulch of straw, leaves, or any material that will retain the moisture in the ground; but where planting has been attended to early, frequent stirring of the ground with a digging fork is the best mulching you can give.—J. P. Berkmans, Augusta, Ga., in Rural Southerner and Plantation.

AMERICAN OATS AND OATMEAL.—American oats are said, on reliable authority, to be as good as the best raised anywhere. Why, then, is American oatmeal inferior to that imported from Scotland and Ireland? It is believed to be owing simply to the way the oats are kiln-dried and ground. American oatmeal costs to the retail purchaser about six cents a pound; but double that price is asked for the Irish or Scotch. As oatmeal is considered very wholesome, and is extensively used, it would surely be worth the while to have the American article properly prepared. Those who can afford it use the imported, which costs twice as much a pound as the finest family flour. But poor people can scarcely afford to pay twelve cents a pound for oatmeal, even if it is wholesome.

MEDICAL.

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP.

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound. Its well-established virtue and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Breast and Bowels is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at any length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Diarrhea or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most efficacious in preventing that most awful scourge whenever timely resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure, this truly extraordinary medicine has, over most compounds of the same nature, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children, and it requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, not only because the bottles contain more sirup than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this sirup will keep for years without fermenting, and it can be used in families whenever required by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Sirup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night may take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a good night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three to four hours. For sale by

VIRGINIA AND TENNESSEE AIR-LINE RAILROAD.

WAS FOUNDED A. D. 1839, and has been a successful operation since that time.

Its Faculty consists of tried and experienced educators, some of them having been connected with the college from its earliest years.

Its Departments of Instruction are the regular Collegiate, the Scientific and the Preparatory. The studies (in part elective) are Languages, Ancient and Modern, Mathematics, Sciences, Physical and Metaphysical, Elocutionary, Forensic, and the higher Belles-Lettres. Mode of instruction thorough and practical, by text-books and lectures combined.

Its Buildings are commodious, affording excellent students' dormitories. Philosophical and Chemical Apparatus, Museum and Libraries ample; Literary Societies of superior educational value.

Its Location, 2,500 feet above sea level, in a retired and beautiful valley, amid mountains abounding in mineral springs, with a climate invigorating in summer, not rigorous in winter, has never been invaded by miasmatic or pestilential disease.

Its Charges are exceedingly moderate for advantages offered. For $100 a student can obtain board (only $10 per month), tuition, fuel, room rent, washing and contingent fees, for an entire session of twenty weeks.

Fall Session begins second Thursday in September.

Spring Session begins twenty weeks thereafter. Present year, January 27.

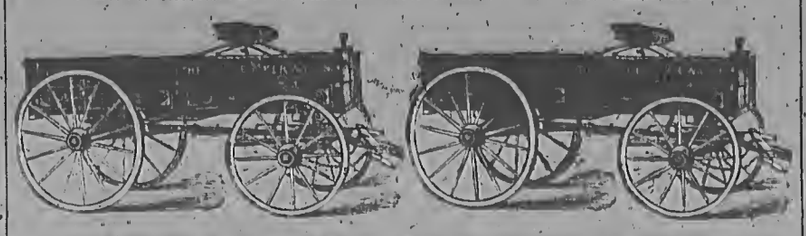
I HAVE RECENTLY ACCEPTED THE AGENCY OF THE CELEBRATED



STUDEBAKER WAGON.

FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds properly dated, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh, from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLIPE'S SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted: while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally; hence the superiority of their work over all others.

On Saturday the market opened under the influence of discouraging dispatches, Liverpool being reported dull at a further decline of 1-16d., with sales of only 6,000 bales, and arrivals 1-32d. lower, and New York weak at previous rates for spots and quoted 1-32@3-32c. lower for futures; and, on the other hand, sterling exchange ruled 1c. higher—equal to about 2-10 per cent. Under these circumstances the movement exhibited little animation, and the sales during the morning were confined to 1,500 bales, after which buyers came forward with rather more spirit, but without evincing much eagerness, and took 5,250 bales, making a total for the day of 6,750 bales. Prices exhibited rather more irregularity, but on the whole maintained their position sufficiently to require no change in quotations. On Monday the sales during the morning embraced 3,000 bales, after which the movement became more active, and further transactions were reported to the extent of 9,750 bales, making a total of 12,750 bales. Low middling sold at 11¾c., strict low middling at 11¾c., and middling at 12⅛@12¼c., the former for average lots. On Tuesday the demand continued fair, and 8,900 bales changed hands at steady prices for good staple kinds and the grades above low middling, while the poorer qualities showed continued irregularity, and when pressed upon the market sold at less than quotations.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 28,400 bales, against 26,950 for the corresponding time last week and 17,700 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 767,698 bales, against 652,302 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 97,134 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 356,902—2,748,711 against 2,391,809. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 49,681 bales to Great Britain, of 78,534 to France, and of 161,777 to other foreign ports. Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

THE YEARS.

BY MISS MULOCH.

Why do we heap huge mounds of years
Before us and behind,
And score the little days that pass
Like angels on the wind?

Each turning round a small, sweet face,
As beautiful as near,
Because it is so small a face
We will not see it clear.

And so it turns from us, and goes
Away in sad disdain;
Though we would give our lives for it,
It never comes again.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

JACKSON, MISS., Jan. 18.—Vote for United States senator in the Senate: Lamar 22, Martin 1; in the House: Lamar 89, the Republican members voting blank.

It is said a private caucus of Republicans decided not to participate in the election of United States senator, on the ground that the late election was carried by fraud and violence. One wing of the Republican party desired to compliment Senator Alcorn, while the other wing desired to pay Gen. Alexander Warner, late chairman of the Republican executive committee, and ex-State senator and major general of militia, that distinguished honor.

Yesterday the attorney general filed a bill in equity bringing to light the doings of a notorious land grab and fraud called the Pearl River Navigation Company, of which Warner was treasurer. The scheme mulcted the State out of a large sum, and the chief actors, excepting Warner, have left the State. The bill and publication of particulars created such a sensation that those who desired to compliment Warner could not stand the pressure. They were equally averse to voting for Alcorn. Therefore the whole matter was compromised by all hands voting blank. Witnesses have been summoned to appear before the committees investigating the charges against Gov. Ames and Superintendent of Education Cardoza.

FRANKFORT, Jan. 18.—Beck 106, Wadsworth 15, William Preston 1, Proctor Knott 1. Mr. Beck was then declared elected United States senator from Kentucky.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—The levee committee, at a meeting this morning, were unanimous in favor of the bill to rebuild the levees, and will so report. At first there was some difference of opinion, but after Mr. Ellis' statement of the case they agreed to report as above.

KERSER, W. VA., Jan. 22.—Ex-Gov. Francis Thomas, of Maryland, late minister to Peru, while walking on the track of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, was struck by the helper engine and instantly killed.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—A Rio Janeiro letter says Emperor Dom Pedro will be accompanied in his approaching visit to this country by the Empress and a number of immediate friends, also by three of the most powerful ships of the Brazilian navy. He will depart the end of March.

FOREIGN.

PARIS, Jan. 17.—La Patrie gives the following as the general result of the elections for senatorial delegates, professedly from an official source: Of 36,000 communes 28,000 returned Conservatives. The extreme Radicals have been victorious in very few instances. The successful candidates are Bonapartists, Orleanists and moderate Republicans. The Bonapartists preponderate in seventeen departments.

PARIS, Jan. 18.—Later returns show the Conservatives have elected majorities of senatorial delegation in the following departments: Loire, Marne et Loire, Loire Inferieure, Indre and Gironde.

HAVANA, Jan. 18.—The steamer City of Merida arrived from Vera Cruz this morning. She brings the following news from Mexico: Mr. Foster, minister of the United States, has returned to the capital.

The official Diario views the recent trip abroad of Portirio Diaz with suspicion.

It intimates that he was not known to have any mercantile transactions, and thinks such movements mean mischief and threaten the public peace. It is surmised that Diaz and Cortina have formed a political alliance. Cortina was to be released on $15,000 bail.

The early resumption of diplomatic intercourse with France is reported to be probable.

The Diario denies that the government has consented to the recruiting of Mexican officers for insurgent service in Cuba.

LONDON, Jan. 19.—The Madrid correspondent of the Standard says the Romanist electoral excitement is increasing. The archbishop and bishops signed a petition to the King for religious unity, and the pastorals advise the people to vote only for candidates who support it.

The British cabinet resolved to give general support to Andrassy's note.

The police have discovered that Thomas, the author of the Bremerhaven crime, scuttled a ship in 1866, on which he had £24,000 insurance.

The Post's Berlin special says the Archbishop of Cologne has taken refuge in Holland.

Lord Napier, of Magdala, has been appointed Governor of Gibraltar.

A special to the Standard from Rome says Italy closed the Episcopal Seminary at Como for refusing to admit a government inspector. This is a most important act, being the strongest step yet taken in States dealing with the church, and will doubtless produce great results.

LONDON, Jan. 21.—The Lancet says that on Friday the Pope, after fatiguing receptions, complained of being unwell, and had an epileptic seizure lasting forty minutes. Since then he has been confined to bed. Though his health requires the doctor's vigilant care, the grave reports recently circulated are groundless.

The memorial of the Anti-Slavery Society to Earl Derby, foreign minister, on the Cuban question, states they have reliable information that Spain is willing to place Cuba in the same relations that Canada occupied toward England, on condition that slavery is retained. The memorial points out that in view of the recent American circular the obstacle no longer exists which was advanced by Earl Derby last year that Great Britain's interference in the Cuban question would cause jealousy in the United States. Derby replied that the government would give the subject the attention its importance deserved.

The Times, in a leading editorial article on American finances, indorses Senator Sherman's proposition looking to a common unit for money and accounts for the United States and Great Britain. The writer says America in returning to specie payments will almost enter upon a new phase of monetary development. Therefore the change in American standard of value will involve no serious shock to social and commercial arrangements, such as would ensue upon an alteration in value of the British sovereign. The Times thinks the proposition opens no less a prospect than the establishment of a common monetary system for all English-speaking people, who by the end of this century will probably rule or influence the people of the greater part of the earth's surface, and monopolize even a larger share of its commerce.

BERLIN, Jan. 24.—The Spanish diplomatic representatives at the various courts have verbally informed the governments that after the defeat of the Carlists, which is expected in a short time, Spain hopes to be enabled to quell the Cuban insurrection through the increased reinforcements.

No foreign complications are anticipated, because the United States has distinctly repudiated the idea of annexing Cuba—a step which would lead to the election of a number of negro representatives to Congress.

The Reichstag to-day, by a vote of 141 to 133, passed the amendment to the penal code providing for the punishment of offenses similar to that of Duchesne.

Andersonville Horror.

The recent debate in the National House of Representatives on the amnesty bill has excited universal attention. We give below the conclusion of the speech of Hon. Benjamin H. Hill:

Mr. Hill then proceeded to sum up his arguments, and said:

What have we proved? I have proved that the Federal authorities broke the cartel deliberately. I have proved that they refused to reopen that cartel when approached by Mr. Stephens as a commissioner solely on the grounds of humanity. I have proved that they made medicine contraband of war, and thereby left us to the dread necessity of supplying the prisoners with such medicine as could be improvised in the Confederacy. I have proved that they refused to allow the surgeons of their own army to accompany their prisoners to the South. I have proved that the Confederate authorities proposed to return your sick and wounded, without an equivalent, in August, 1864, and that you never deigned to reply until December, 1864. I have proved that your high officers in command gave as a reason why they would not exchange prisoners, that it would be humane to the prisoners, but cruelty to the soldiers in the field. It was a part of your military policy to let your prisoners suffer, rather than that the Confederacy should have an increase of its military force. I have also proved that with all the horrors which you have made such a noise about, as occurring at Andersonville, greater horrors occurred in prisons where you held our troops, and that the percentage of death was three per cent. greater among our prisoners in your hands than among your prisoners in our hands. When the gentleman from Maine rises again to give birth to that unalligated effusion of genius, without a fact to sustain it, in which he says: "And here, before my God, measuring my words, knowing their full intent and import, I declare that neither the deeds of the Duke of Alva in the low countries, nor the massacre of St. Bartholomew, nor the thumb-screws and engines of torture of the Spanish Inquisition, begin to compare in atrocity with the hideous crime of Andersonville;" let him add to it: "And the atrocities of Andersonville do not begin to compare with the atrocities of Elmira; of Camp Douglas or Fort Delaware, and of the atrocities, both at Andersonville and Elmira, the Confederate government stands acquitted from all responsibility and blame."

Mr. Hill then quoted from a speech made by Jefferson Davis to the Confederate soldiers after the retreat of Gen. McClellan from before Richmond, in which he said that the crowning glory of the soldiers was their humanity to the wounded and prisoners who had fallen into their hands.

He also referred to the fact that the Richmond Examiner, which Blaine had quoted yesterday as authority against Davis, had stated that the humanity and generosity of Jefferson Davis would inevitably ruin the Confederacy. The gentleman from Maine has introduced that witness to prove Davis guilty of inhumanity, and yet the witness said that the humanity and generosity of Davis would ruin the Confederacy.

Mr. Hill also quoted the following from the Richmond Examiner: "The enemy have gone from one unmanly cruelty to another, encouraged by their impunity, till they are now and have been for some time inflicting upon the people of the country the worst horrors of a barbarous and uncivilized war. Yet, in spite of all this, Mr. Davis, in his dealings with the enemy, is as gentle as a sucking dove;" and that, continued Mr. Hill, is the truth. Those of us who were there at the time know it to be a fact. One of the most persistent charges brought by the Richmond Examiner and some others against Mr. Davis was his humanity. Over and over again has Mr. Davis been heard to say, when applied to to retaliate for the horrors inflicted on our prisoners (I quote his very language:) "The inhumanity of the enemy to our prisoners can be no justification for a disregard by us of the rules of civilized warfare and Christianity." Therefore he persisted in it, and this paper cried out against him that he would ruin the Confederacy.

But why bring up such a subject? War is always horrible. War always brings hardships, death, sorrow, ruin and devastation. And he is unworthy to be considered a statesman, looking to the pacification of the country, who will parade the horrors inseparable from war for the purpose of keeping up the strife which produced these horrors. My message to the gentleman from Maine is this: "There are no Confederates in this House. There are no Confederate ambitious desires or purposes in this House; but the South is here, and here she intends to remain." (Enthusiastic demonstrations on the Democratic side and in the galleries. Let fanaticism do its worst. Let it pass its nullifying act, trample on the constitution, abrogate the pledges of the fathers, incite raids on our people, multiply infidelities until they shall be, like the stars of heaven or the sands of the sea shore, without number; but know this: for all your iniquities the South will never again seek a remedy in the madness of another secession. (Renewed applause.) We are here. We are in our father's house. Our brothers are our companions, and we are at home, thank God. (Enthusiastic applause.) We come to gratify no vengeance, to retaliate no wrongs, resent no past insults, to open no strife. We come with a patriotic purpose to do what, ever in our political power shall be to restore an honest, economical and constitutional administration of government. We come charging on the Union no wrong to us. The Union never wronged the South. The Union has been an unmixed blessing to every section, to every State, to every man of every color in America. We charge all of our wrongs to that higher-law fanaticism which never kept a pledge or obeyed a law. We sought to leave the association of those who would not keep fidelity to covenant.

We sought to go by ourselves, but, so far from having lost our fidelity to the constitution, we hugged it to our bosom, and carried it with us. Brave Union men of the North, followers of Webster and Fillmore, of Cass and Douglas; you who fought for the Union, for the sake of the Union; you who ceased to fight when the battle was ended and the sword was sheathed—with you we have no quarrel. We felt your heavy arm in the midst of the struggle; but above the roar of the cannon we heard your voice of tenderness calling: "Brothers, come back." We are here to cooperate with you, to do whatever we can do, in spite of all our sorrows, to rebuild the Union, to restore it to peace, to be a blessing to the country, and to make the American Union what our fathers intended it should be—the glory of America and the blessing of humanity.

But you, gentlemen, who persecuted us by your infidelities until you drove us out of the Union; you who then claimed to be the only friends of the Union, which you had before denounced as a league with death and a covenant with hell; you who followed up the war when the soldiers who fought it had made peace and gone to their homes—to you we have no concessions to make. Martyrs owe no apology to tyrants; and while we are ready to make every sacrifice for the Union, secession, however defeated and oppressed, will confess no sin to fanaticism, however blighted and exacting. Yet, while we make to you no concessions, we say this: We come to you even in no spirit of revenge. We have but one ambition, and that is to add our political power to the patriotic Union men of the North, in order to compel fanaticism to obey the laws and live in the Union according to the constitution. We do not propose to compel you by oaths, for you never kept them.

The South did the Union one great wrong, and we come as far as we can and repair it. We wronged the Union grievously when we left it to be seized and rent and torn by the men who had denounced it as a league with death and a covenant with hell. We ask you, gentlemen of the Republican party, to rise above all your animosities and to forget your old sin. Let us unite to repair the wrongs that distract and oppress the country. Let us turn our backs on the past, and let it be said in the future that he shall be the greatest patriot, the truest patriot, the ablest patriot, who shall do most to repair the wrongs of the past and to promote the glories of the future. (Loud and sustained applause on the Democratic side of the House and in the crowded galleries.)

The Gospel of Numbers.

Under this head, Mr. Editor, we purpose to give a series of short articles running through several numbers of your paper—by your permission, we forgot to say—but then you have never yet said no to a missionary article. We now have in the office enough material, in the way of reports, to give a fair exposition of the strength and weakness of the missionary spirit of Southern Methodism; and yet we have not a tithe of our pastors' reports returned. Why is this? We sent the blanks to all the presiding elders before the Conferences—nothing to do but write a few figures and return—and yet they do not come. It would be an adverse inference to presume that only the few who have returned reports are missionary in faith and zeal. We will not for a moment allow ourselves so gloomy a view of our brethren. And yet it is a noteworthy fact that few reports have reached us where the collections have been deficient—many where they have been in excess of assessments. But our object now is only to introduce the following article from the Pacific Methodist. As it is in the line of things we contemplate, we make it our leader. If, after the showing made by this young Conference of the far West, the writer finds need to ask the significant question with which he closes, what "questionings" should not some of our older Conferences feel it needful to make?

D. C. KELLEY,
Assistant Secretary.

MEMBERS AND MISSIONS.

Our contributions to the cause of missions in the past have been so meager that they suggest one of two thoughts—either that we have no ability to give, or that we are not a missionary people.

Our members are industrious and thrifty; they represent as good a proportion of this Golden State as any other denomination; they live in as comfortable houses, have as much land, stock, money, etc., on an average, as other people. In every charge they control from $20,000 to $500,000. We hold property, as a corporate body, to the amount of $240,000, consisting of churches, parsonages, schools, camp grounds, etc. From facts such as these it is evident that we are not so distressedly poor as to have no ability to give to missions.

Are we a missionary people? Missionaries, such as Boardman, Pilmore, Asbury, Coke, Whitecoat and others, by their toil and sacrifice, established Methodism in the United States. It was the same character of men and work that gave us the blessed privilege of having a home in the church of our choice on the Pacific coast. But while we have received so much, what have we been giving? If our missionary character is to be determined by our works, I fear the answer is against us. To the testimony: In 1870 we gave $620, or 19 cents per member; in 1873, $942, or 28 cents per member; in 1875, $1,225, or 32 cents per member. Had it not been for Bro. Simmons' children, giving from $1 to $11 each, the average per member would have been much smaller. But in averaging the amount among the membership, injustice is done to those who always give liberally, to many outside contributing friends, and to a great many of our own members who never give anything for missions. For illustration: We of the most prominent stations in the Conference, with membership aggregating over 200, did not report any missionary collections. A leading circuit with 93 members reported $6; another with 72 members, $5; another with 141 members, $10; another with 96 members, $2.45; another with 67 members, $7; another with 218 members, $33; another with 81 members, $13; another with 165 members, $28; another with 90 members, $8; another with 100 members, $7; a strong station with 244 members, $52. Other like figures can be given, but they are certainly unnecessary to show that at least one-half of our people give nothing to the missionary cause. Only $160 has been given in the above ten works, including over 1,400 members. If one-half of our membership give nothing to the missionary cause, are we a missionary people?

Oregon Correspondence.

MR. EDITOR: Our winter has been remarkably mild, and I am writing the twenty-ninth of December. Have had a little ice, say a quarter of an inch thick once; but rain, rain, rain. Our rains are not so unpleasant as you might suppose, and are said to be the healthiest season of the year. We have frequent alternations of sunshine, and sometimes the sun or stars are seen while a slight rain is falling. Last night we were awakened by a slight peal of thunder. We were a little alarmed, as we had not heard such a thing for months, and but few times in two years. The electrical phenomena of this country is occult to me.

A large crop of wheat was harvested last fall, and most of it is stored, waiting for better prices. Some of the farmers are compelled to sell at the present price—eighty-five cents per bushel—but many will wait for $1 or more. Hence the wheels of commerce move tardily. Money is scarce, times are hard. I think the credit system in this country will in the end prove disadvantageous. It has a strange infatuation about it, and too many become hopelessly involved. To "owe no man anything, but to love one another," is of high moral significance, but its application in very many business and commercial transactions is of great moment. The picture, "Poor Trust is Dead," means a great deal.

Very little plowing has been done this fall and winter, and as a consequence the acreage in fall grain, which is generally the best, is less than usual. Crops have never failed—sometimes they are shortened. This fact gives zest and confidence to the tiller of the soil.

Our Conference, which met in this place early in September, was in the main a pleasant occasion. Every member, lay and clerical, was present save one—C. H. E. Newton—who was in a remote State, and feeble with age and labors. Our Conference, by the presence of our worthy and excellent transfers, presents quite an encouraging and respectable personnel.

We are in Christmas week, and there seems to be an unusual number of festivals, socibles, etc. In these things this country, and the city of Albany in particular, is not behind the foremost. Some of these things may be good and proper, but too many are questionable. The devil and his subalterns are busy, and using every method to entrap and lead away the unwary, and too many are his victims. We should not be "ignorant of his devices." The churches seem awake, and all of them have had their festivals or Christmas-trees except St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church South. We had a Sunday school mass-meeting at nine o'clock A. M. on Sunday. Wish Bro. Foster could have spent an hour and a half with us. He would have enjoyed it. We had a very appropriate and excellent address by Rev. Dr. Irvine, of the United Presbyterian church of this place. Our service of song was delectable—selections from the Amaranth of such pieces as Beautiful Rain (and it was raining), Feed my Lambs, Strike for Jesus, etc., led by Bro. Cathey. A beautiful gold pen was presented to Bro. Cathey in consideration of his valuable services rendered the school in music. It was a delightful hour, and, notwithstanding the rain poured, we had a good audience, and took up a collection to purchase Bibles for our school. We need Bibles and music-books very much, and if we had a library to circulate it would do a great amount of good. I throw out this hint to Bro. Foster and his excellent school. This is missionary ground, and we need help.

I know it may seem egotistic to write of ones self, yet I feel that many in the old Louisiana Conference will rejoice at any good that may fall to the lot of one who has spent the years of the prime of his life in the service of the Master in every part of that Conference. The twentieth anniversary of our marriage (China wedding) occurred on the twenty-third, and we were literally overwhelmed with good things. There were about one hundred persons present, almost every one bringing something. It was a festive occasion. The amount of good things it took to regale the people was great, but what was left was more to be wondered at—cakes, etc., various articles of provisions, wearing apparel, fancy articles, China set, glassware, etc., besides gold and silver coin. Truly, we feel encouraged—have no idea of starving while we have five hundred pounds of flour in the house, and so much of other things. Mrs. White was gay and merry as a bride of twenty years ago. Such treatment augurs good, and we feel encouraged to labor. God bless the dear people! "As we have received of them temporal things, may they of us receive spiritual." We know the blessedness of receiving, and yet it is written: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." "Give, and it shall be given unto you," is a comforting promise. Such marks of appreciation and love encourage and inspire to sedulous activity.

I wanted to tell this, and I will say it is a mighty good way to make a preacher happy; and there is no better way of closing this communication than by exhorting many of our church people: "Go thou and do likewise." Affectionately,

T. B. WHITE.

To the Preachers of the M. E. Church South.

The Familienfreund, the German official organ of our church, has entered on its eighth volume. It is published bi-weekly, and costs but $1 per annum. There are a great many Germans scattered throughout the bounds of your work. Will you endeavor to supply them with our paper? They may not understand you, preaching in English; but with the aid of this paper you can, nevertheless, religiously benefit them. I know of several instances where the Familienfreund was directly instrumental in converting precious souls. We cannot send them a German missionary—they are scattered over too vast a territory—but they are within your reach. Do not neglect them. Give them a German Methodist paper, and they will be Americanized and evangelized at the same time.

A little effort on your part in this direction may be fruitful of unquestionably good results. No religious influences being brought to bear on them, the Germans—vast numbers of them—are being rapidly materialized, yea, even brutalized. Come to their rescue! Win them for Jesus! Give them our paper! Address

THE COTTON CROP.—Here are some interesting facts about cotton. The largest crop of cotton ever made in the United States was during the season of 1859-60—i. e., 4,669,770 bales. The next in 1870-1, when 4,352,317 were marketed; the third in 1873-4, the yield being 4,170,388; the lowest recorded was in 1827-8, when the total was 727,953 bales.

In the last fifty years the highest price of cotton in New York was in 1864—namely, 190 cents per pound; the lowest price that season being 62 cents; in 1865 it was 122 cents, lowest, 43; in 1866 25 cents and 32 cents. In 1874 the highest price was 18¾, and the lowest 15¾. The highest quotation before the war was 27 cents in 1825; the lowest that season being 13 cents. The extreme of the lowest price was in 1848, when it was 8 cents, and the lowest that season 5 cents. In all the seasons between 1842 and 1846 the price touched 5 cents.—Columbus Inquirer.

Zion's Herald hopes that Gov. Chamberlain's refusal to commission Moses and Whipper as judges can be sustained, and adds: "It is not party rule at the South that is needed, but the union of all honest men to secure an economical and just administration of the local governments." We have for some time thought so. One of our colored presiding elders in Mississippi urged the people of color to vote on that principle at the last election. Pure partisanship is dangerous anywhere; it ends in personal gain at the expense of the public. Party rule under moral restraints is wise and democratic; the evil comes when partisanship breaks down moral restraints, as it did when Moses and Whipper were made judges.—New York Methodist.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Before this is published the pamphlet minutes of our late Conference will be mailed to all subscribers. Should any one fail to receive the number for which he subscribed he will please notify me at once. I regret the delay in the publication, but it was unavoidable. Under the circumstances, they have been issued with all possible dispatch.

THE STAR OF BETHLEHEM.

BY WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

As shadows, cast by cloud and sun,
Flit o'er the summer grass,
So in thy sight, Almighty One!
Earth's generations pass.

And while the years, an endless host,
Come pressing swiftly on,
The brightest names that earth can boast
Just glisten, and are gone.

Yet doth the Star of Bethlehem shed
A luster pure and sweet,
And still it leads, as once it led,
To the Messiah's feet.

O Father! may that Holy Star
Grow every year more bright,
And send its glorious beams afar,
To fill the world with light.

Women Preachers Again.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE, of December 16, 1875, Lorretta Crary Sadler attempts to set aside the scriptural arguments I furnished you some time since against women preachers. The communication, as a whole, certainly does her cause no good. Instead of finding authority in "the infallible standard" for women preachers, she actually resorts to Webster, and then begs the conclusion. She boldly declares "that the first preacher was a woman, and the first woman was a preacher. She took for her text an apple—she had for her audience a man. And he was converted by her argument." Was our Mother Eve a preacher? Was her commission from God, or from the devil? Can the devil make preachers? If his first was a woman, who was his second? If Mother Eve was a preacher of the devil, it is a bad showing for the women preachers of the present times. Besides, how does Sister Sadler know that the "text" was an apple? Will she please give her authority for this assertion? What does she mean when she says Adam "was converted by her argument?" Will she be so kind as to tell us what she means by the word "converted" in this connection? And will she give us some indication of the sermon or form or argument by which Mother Eve accomplished the work referred to? If that was the introduction of preaching, then God and the devil are in concord, and heaven and hell are one.

Sister Sadler appeals to Webster to prove that a prophetess is a preacheress, and then turns round, and marks a wide distinction between the terms. She says "the first woman was a preacher," and then says: "Miriam is the first woman spoken of as a prophetess." According to her own defining, a preacheress is not a prophetess; nor is a prophetess a preacheress; for Mother Eve was the first preacheress, and Miriam was the first prophetess. The first "first" was about two thousand years before the second "first." The first "first" took an "apple text," used an argument and "converted" "a man;" the second first uttered poetry, which "was spontaneous"—not inspired; "she had more enthusiasm than zeal, more self-esteem than veneration or firmness; hence her downfall." In both of these instances of the two first women preachers their efforts were sadly injurious. In the first case "a man" "was converted" from holiness to unholiness; in the second case a woman's ministry was the occasion of the "downfall" of a woman!

"Deborah, a prophetess," is introduced in order to prove that the women preachers of these times have scriptural authority to exercise the functions of the ministry. But since Sister Sadler says that "a prophetess" is "a poetess," "Deborah" avails her nothing. Besides, the inspired Paul, in the Hebrews, gives the glory of victory, peace and prosperity to Barak, and not to Deborah. Whom shall we believe—uninspired, fallible men, or an inspired, infallible apostle of Jesus Christ?

In the case of the church at Ephesus, I reaffirm that the "gifts" of Christ "to men" were "men." In other words, "the gifts" of Christ to the church were male gifts, and not female gifts. He gave the church "apostles," "prophets," "evangelists," "pastors and teachers." All these were men (males), and not females.

But Sister Sadler asks, "Were there any women at Ephesus?" and says: "St. Paul was too much occupied with his theme to draw a distinction between the sexes." This statement is hardly compatible with a careful reading of the Epistle to the Ephesians. In this same epistle we find the following: "Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord. For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the Head of the church." "And the wife, see that she reverence her husband." This last may thus be translated: "And the woman, see that she fear the man." This language of Paul harmonizes with that of Moses when he said (recording the words of God himself) of the woman: "And thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee." In his letter to Timothy St. Paul is explicit and emphatic on this same subject. He says: "Let the woman learn in silence with all subjection. But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. For Adam was first formed, then Eve. And Adam was not deceived, but, the woman being deceived, was in the transgression."

After all, Sister Sadler revealed her true, womanly and pious conviction upon this subject in the following language: "There is no call for women to lay aside the distaff or the sewing machine, or to leave the precious contents of the cradle and the abiding duties of the household to 'an hireling,' and march into the pulpit." This certainly is a truthful statement. "There is no call for women" to enter the ministry. There is no call either from God or the church "for women" to take upon themselves the office and work of the ministry.

In conclusion, the Methodist Episcopal Church South takes the Bible as her standard, both in faith and practice. As such she has made no provision for women preachers. She has no form of license for female preachers, nor has she any ordination ritual for a desconess, elderess or bishopess. Hence, if there be any women in our church who are aspiring to the ministry of the word, they would do well to change their church relationship.

This part of our beloved South has already been satisfied with a few female ranters of the Methodist Episcopal Church, North; and it is my abiding conviction that they have done more harm than good.

ANGUS DOWLING.

LAWRENCEVILLE, ALA., Jan. 3, 1876.

Mighty to Save.

I had studied those words many times; thought I had learned their import when the Savior found me out; but days and weeks are living commentaries upon them, and later experience has taught me that "mighty to save" has depths about them I have never fathomed, and heights that my highest telescopic vision of faith has never called into existence—regions unpeopled by fancy, nor thought of in dreams. Of late I feel that God has been shaking the arsenal of sin to its guilty center. Let me, for the Christian's encouragement and the sinner's guidance, give you a few of the Lord's triumphs. During a recent revival on C circuit, and its surrounding ones, the Lord has been moving among the very dry bones: Old men in their eighties, Universalists, moralists, skeptics and sinners in general, very hard ones in particular, the Lord has been saving. The preacher, calling up penitents to the altar one night, said: "God can save the oldest sinner, the worst sinner, every sinner! Though his sins be like unto Manasseh's for magnitude, the dying thief's for enormity, Saul's for vileness, or Magdalene's for astonishment, to-night they may, through Christ, be all forgiven. Thank God! when the thief was about being dragged down quick into hell, a look, a word saved him, 'Lord, remember me'—me—me. Even a dying Savior's heart could not resist that appeal; and, though the supppliant's feet were blistering upon the precincts of hell, Christ's hands, grazing the very jaws of the pit, plucked him therefrom, clasped him to this breast, and bore the precious trophy, as the first fruit of his death, to heaven. Saved! saved! Oh, old men—ye whose heads are blossoming for eternity—come! If you never tested a Savior, test him now. Angels might envy you this privilege. Come!" While he was speaking I saw an old man, whose head seemed to have been white for twenty years, and whose brow was marked with rude lines of sorrow, bury his face in his hands and weep like an infant. The altar was fast filling up with earnest seekers. Jaller-like, crying, and, Jacob-like, wrestling all around! The preacher still pleaded; "No singling," he said; "who will come out boldly and seek forgiveness at this altar? I ask only for those who want pardon now, just now." The old man rose feebly, his face still in his hands; before he arrived at the altar he threw his hands upward and shouted: "Glory, glory, glory be to God! He saves even me now." "While they are yet speaking I will hear. Alleluia! for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." As his trembling hand grasped the preacher's big tears of thankfulness fell upon it. He thought he saw the words "Mighty to save" enshrined in every tear. When Bro. H., who is eighty-five years of age, reads this, through his blinding tears, I know he will exclaim:

"O to grace how great a debtor
Daily I'm constrained to be!"

From the same meeting a Universalist of long standing, with deep and pungent conviction for sin, went home to pray. As he entered the house he said to his wife: "I feel strange somehow. Do you think I'm going crazy?" She said, knowing what was the matter: "O no, I reckon not. I suppose you are just coming to your senses. I've been praying that you might be found sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed and in your right mind." Down they both fell by the center-table, nor did they rise until God in mercy pardoned his sins. Speaking to a friend afterward, he said: "I feel made all over again—I'm a new man."

Often during a revival Sunday is a day of grief to every lover of the Lord. The dress, jewelry, pomp and vanity of this wicked world are predominant; all these things, and many more, being means by which satan draws the mind and heart away from religion. Hence it is said: "Sunday is show day, and we of necessity must not expect to save souls!" But, necessity to the contrary, we had prayed for ten souls to be rescued this day. Eight o'clock service ended—none saved. Eleven—none saved. Three—still none saved. After this service I saw a preacher go into the pulpit and weep out his grief to his Master, saying: "O my dear Savior, by thine own inconceivable agony, by thy doleful sufferings and tragic death, have mercy upon us. My heart must break unless thou save. Take, oh, take away these pangs of death by thy presence to save." Thus for some time he prayed and wept. As the preacher lifted up his head I saw a gentleman approach him. "Hold on! hold on!" he said, as the preacher said: "Oh, my dear sir, do you love Jesus? My heart is breaking for sinners." "I've just come from home to tell you that I found the Savior while I was praying by the bedside of my sick child this morning, and I'm going to join the church to-night." That evening conversions took place in the woods, and at night ten souls claimed to have found peace with God that day. The rejoicing in heaven, methinks, could but feebly outstrip the rejoicing that took place on earth that night as our last man joined the church. I could keep on for columns yet with these recitals of God's power to save, but I must desist. I may give more in the next paper. Eighty souls saved in four weeks, and forty made possessors of the blessing of entire sanctification, and the mighty work goes on! If we would have the church prosper, I find that we must strongly and explicitly press believers to aspire after holiness or entire sanctification as a blessing to be attained by faith now. It is not enough that we differ from the world in a few outward practices only, but in our inward principles, thoughts, feelings, desires and hopes. There must be a moral transformation wrought in the soul by the Spirit. Then discipline will be kept, prayers will continually arise, sinners will not be left in their sins, and the church will be all aflame with God's love. Their course will be onward and upward, pure in heart, on a journey of eternal approximation to God.

Will the Waters be Chilly?

MR. EDITOR: I notice in your last issue an article from the pen of the illustrious Dr. C. K. Marshall, containing strictures upon sundry choruses in common use among us, one of which reads:

"Will the waters be chilly
When I am called to die?"

I would not have the courage, under ordinary circumstances, to measure arms with a giant like Dr. Marshall; but the most cowardly animals in the whole zoological catalogue will fight for their own, and I must defend what in this quarter of the moral vineyard, at least, is regarded as mine.

The doctor objects, he says, to the word "chilly," because "it has the ring of criticism on the quantity and quality of the sufferings we may be called to endure in the article of death," and cites Paul, John, Wesley and a host of Christian women and children, imagining them suffering all the horrors of insoluble doubt, and making ridiculous inquiries concerning the amount of physical torture involved in the death struggle. He would prefer, it seems, for all the purposes of consolation, that it should read:

"Will the Savior be with me?"

And so would I, Mr. Editor, if there were no other work for singers and preachers but to comfort those who know the joys of an unwavering faith, and are assured of their acceptance with God. But I would just hint to the doctor that the Scriptures, from which all the sentiments uttered either in song or sermon should be drawn, contain many solemn warnings addressed to the sinner, and many words and passages calculated to spring serious reflections in the minds of the unconverted; and what sentence in the English language would more certainly stir the soul of a thoughtful person than the simple but momentous inquiry:

"Will the waters be chilly
When I am called to die?"

Indeed, Mr. Editor, the doctor has altogether mistaken our purpose in the use of this chorus; and strangely enough, too, for the hymn to which it belongs by common usage is a sufficient indication of the applicability of the language. Listen!

"Show pity, Lord; oh, Lord, forgive;
Let a repenting rebel live."

Again:

"Should sudden vengeance seize my breath,
I must pronounce thee just in death."

interlined with the earnest supplication:

"Prepare me, Lord, to die."

It seems to me, Mr. Editor, that a man in the condition indicated by these lines would disturb the atmosphere with a far more absurd sound to ask, "Will the Savior be with me?" than would David or Paul or John or any other Christian using the language of our unacceptable chorus. We are not always called to comfort Christians with our songs, pleasant as it would doubtless be to any of us who have voices; and the doctor might just as appropriately object to the lines,

"What scenes of horror and of dread Await the sinner's dying bed," or any other hymn of warning in our book.

But perhaps the doctor has not witnessed, as I have, the solemn, death-like stillness, indicative of deep, serious thought, which pervaded a congregation of sinners, and the agonizing of mourners while I have been honored with the privilege of singing those lines; neither does he know, perhaps, how often the heart of the writer has been comforted, amidst life's toils and troubles, with the reflection that there are souls now happy on earth, and some, I hope, happy in the glory land, who owe their conversion, more than to any other earthly influence or means, to the thoughts and emotions produced by those very lines. Yes, sir; even on the consecrated spot where the doctor rose up in the congregation, and with stentorian voice demanded the change suggested in his article. No, Mr. Editor, I can't accept the amendment. When the doctor contemplates his dying day, and would console himself with my little song, let him change it to suit himself; but as long as there are sinners to be warned, and anxious seekers to be urged to more earnest longings and efforts for salvation, and my voice must be used for that glorious purpose, let me continue to sound in the ears of my fellow-men the solemn inquiry:

"Will the waters be chilly
When I am called to die?"

SINGER.

TRENTON, MISS., Oct. 24, 1875.

OBITUARIES.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

CAPT. JAMES JACK was born in Wilkes county, Ga., on the seventh day of May, 1800, and died of paralysis on the twenty-seventh day of December, 1875, aged seventy-five years, seven months and twenty days. In 1822 he married Miss Ann Scott Gray, who died in 1838; and in 1847 he married his second wife, Miss Mary Jane Witherspoon, who still survives him.

In 1823 he moved to Jefferson county, Ala., and one year after this to Green (now Hale) county, same State, where he spent the remainder of his life, earning an honest living by the cultivation of the soil, raising and educating a large family of children, and at length passing away in a good old age, honored and esteemed by all who knew him.

Bro. Jack was emphatically a good man, acknowledged to be so by all who knew him, and he was extensively known in this section. Said one to me, who once lived a neighbor to him: "If I were now living in this community I would feel like leaving it, now that Bro. Jack is gone."

In token of their esteem for him, all the merchants of our little village closed doors, and along with the whole community attended his funeral, two miles out, at Concord church. He was a man of positive character and sound judgment. His children and neighbors all went to him for counsel, and his advice was generally correct and safe. He had ten children by his first and eleven by his second marriage, twelve of whom survive to mourn his loss. The majority of his children, who have come to years of discretion, are following his godly example; and those who have died have left a good testimony behind.

He assisted in erecting the first Methodist church ever put up in this community, two miles above here, and then aided chiefly in moving it to this place, and lived to see the membership grow from a little band to ninety-nine.

Not possessed of wealth and extensive learning in youth, he began early and toiled assiduously to take an honorable stand among men; and being an honest and upright man, and a gentleman, he soon obtained the confidence, respect and hearty good will of all who knew him. He enjoyed the friendship of all classes up to the day of his death. He was especially the friend of the poor, and they shared largely in his charities. Many of the freedmen attended his funeral, and some of them wept aloud at his grave.

In early life he fell in love with and espoused the cause of Christianity, as taught by Watson and the Wesleys, and for upward of fifty long years he was a faithful and intelligent member of the Methodist Church. His religion combined deep principle along with a sound experience. The second time I saw him, after he was stricken with paralysis, he talked freely of the confidence and love he had for his Savior, and of his readiness to depart and be with Christ, until all felt that God was in the sick-room, and that our holy religion could bring joy and peace and salvation even to the sick-bed and the dying hour.

He mentioned the subject of family prayer himself, called for the Bible, and, asking all to sit down, he requested us to read the third chapter of John, where the Savior teaches the doctrine of the new birth. He expressed a fear that the members of the church and ministers of religion were losing sight of this cardinal truth, quoting it himself: "Except a man be born again he cannot enter the kingdom of heaven."

His place can hardly be filled in this community. Two years ago he erected upon his own land a nice academy, and was dispensing gratuitous education to a number of children around. It was his purpose to build up a flourishing school at that place, and had he lived would doubtless have succeeded.

On the morning of the twenty-seventh of November last he had a complete stroke of paralysis in his left side, which almost entirely prostrated him, and from which he never revived, but gradually grew worse and weaker, till on the morning of the twenty-seventh of December last, the weary wheels of life stood still, and he bade farewell to wife, children, friends, earth, time and sense, and, stepping upon a cloud of glory, his immortal soul took its flight to the realms of light and bliss, there to dwell forever in the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. GABRIEL HAWKINS.

DIED, near Winnsboro, Franklin parish, La., on the fourteenth of November, A. D. 1875, Bro. W. W. RICHARDSON. Bro. Richardson was born in Concordia parish, La., November 30, 1825. At five years of age he lost his father, and was left to the care of a widowed mother in early life, who had to battle against its ills with two small children. His educational advantages were circumscribed. Living in a new country, with but few church facilities, his early moral training was left almost exclusively to his mother. In 1846 he was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Ballen, who lived but a short time. He was married again, in 1851, to Miss B. S. Gilbert, who, with eight children, still live to mourn their earthly loss.

Bro. Richardson joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1854, and became at once an active, zealous member, living ever thereafter a regular communicant at her altar. He loved her doctrines and discipline, her service and songs of praise. He served the church in various ways—as class-leader, Sunday school superintendent and steward—for years. Though naturally timid, he was trustful, hopeful, and but rarely shrank from duty, often feeling the divine presence in prayer. He was one of our best stewards. His labors in this respect were abundant, and his place will be difficult to fill. His house was ever the home of the itinerant, and his hospitalities were lavishly bestowed. He was a liberal man, and devised liberal things, often giving above his means. His sympathies were easily aroused by "the tale of woe and want;" he truly "wept with those that weep." His death has opened a wide chasm in the church and community, which cannot easily be closed; and when the church militant, with the "angel reapers," shall "sing harvest home," there will doubtless be full many a gem in those bright crowns of rejoicing that were placed there through his instrumentality as a "faithful steward of the household of God." May the Highest bless the bereaved!

THOS. H. MCCLENDON.

SUDIE ABERNETHY CAPELL was born December 25, 1867, and died October 18, 1875. Sudie was a sweet child, for her life was one of innocence and affection. She was a real jewel in the family circle, and by her lovely life had riveted the warmest affections of her parents and brothers to her. They were expecting, and justly too, to be proud of her as she ushered into womanhood; but, alas, how vain are all our hopes and expectations! Just as she had begun to live, she died. Death has hushed her charming little voice below, but she is singing with the pure and blest just over yonder. In the hour of death she began the song, "There is a fountain filled with blood," etc., and, being unable to continue, turned to her mother with the stare of death in her eye, and said, in terms expressive of her wish: "Ma, you sing it for me;" and forthwith her pure little spirit took its everlasting "good-night," and arose to embrace the morning light of eternity.

ANNIE E. CAPELL was born September 13, 1872, and died November 19, 1875. Little Annie was an interesting child, and was the joy and pride of fond parents. She is no more! Three summers was her allotted time to a world poorly adapted to one so lovely and so pure.

T. Y. ABERNETHY.

J. B. CALLIHAM was born in Adams county, Miss., in the year 1805, and died in Yazoo county (where he had lived about twenty-two years,) January 8, 1876.

He was married twice—first to Miss Elizabeth Still, who died in 1864, leaving eleven children to a father's care. In 1847 he connected himself with the Methodist Church South, of which he continued an acceptable member till death closed his earthly career. He died of pneumonia. After the death of his first wife he was married again, and by this marriage he had several children, who, with their mother, mourn his loss. Mr. Calliham was a useful, honest and industrious as well as frugal farmer. Able and willing to aid the needy, he had many friends. The writer was called upon to preach on the occasion of his funeral, and he was led to believe, from the large crowd in attendance at his funeral, though a very cold day, that he had not failed to impress his neighbors favorably. The people all seemed to love him, and were desirous of doing him honor. But the patriarch is gone to his rest; and may we all, preacher and sympathizing friends of the loved ones of the departed dead, adopt, as the expression of our earnest feelings, the text used upon the sad occasion of his burial: "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." And may our kind heavenly Father "temper the winds to the shorn lambs."

R. D. NORSWORTHY.

BRO. PORSEEM B. THOMPSON was born in Carroll county, Miss., August 22, 1830. His father moved to Bossier parish, La., when he was quite small. In 1853 he was united in holy wedlock to Miss E. J. Lawrence, daughter of A. Lawrence, of the same parish. In 1862 he volunteered in the Confederate service. He served in the army of Virginia under Gen. Stonewall Jackson, and was wounded in the second Manassas battle. He was furloughed, went home, and some time after was discharged on account of wounds received. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1873, while Bro. J. A. Miller was in charge, and lived a consistent member till his death, which was occasioned by a hurt received from a young horse, December 22, and on the twenty-fifth he expired in triumph.

As a citizen he was loved by all, as a Christian exemplary, as a Mason punctual to all the calls of the order, and as a husband devoted, kind and affectionate. Much could be said in praise of this good man, but it would not compensate the bereaved companion or enhance his raptures above. "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace." G. M. L.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

MOUNT CARMEL, FRANKLIN CO., MISS., January 10, 1876.

MRS. MARY E. WILLIAMS went to her reward November 22, 1875. She joined the church and was converted at the age of twelve years, and from that date until the day of her death her uniform Christian conduct was manifest to all. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South for about twenty-three years. She was also a member of the Fayette Female Financial Association; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we, in common with others, mourn her departure from us, we recommend to all submission to the will of God.

Resolved, That we sympathize with the family in their bereavement, and we recommend that they follow her as she followed Christ.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the family, and that another be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

BRINGING OUR SHEAVES.

The time for toil is past, and night has come,
The last and saddest of the harvest eves;
Worn out with labor long and wearisome,
Drooping and faint the reapers hasten home,
Each laden with his sheaves

Last of the laborers, thy feet I gain,
Lord of the harvest! and my spirit grieves
That I am burdened not so much with grain
As with a heaviness of heart and brain;
Master, behold my sheaves!

Full well I know I have more tares than wheat,
Brambles and flowers, dry stalks and withered leaves;
Wherefore I blush and weep, as at thy feet
I kneel down reverently and repeat:
"Master, behold my sheaves!"

Few, light and worthless, yet their trifling weight
Through all my frame a weary aching leaves;
For long I struggled with my hapless fate,
And stayed and toiled till it was dark and late,
Yet these are all my sheaves.

And yet I gather strength and hope anew;
For well I know thy patient love perceives
Not what I did, but what I STROVE to do;
And though the full, ripe ears be sadly few,
Thou wilt accept my sheaves.

The Bishop's Sermon.

AN EXTRACT.

The sermon of Bishop McTyeire at the Conference in Danville, Va., was requested by unanimous vote for publication in the Minutes. It takes time even for the quick hand of Bro. Peterson to assort, cipher up and set in order the heaps on heaps of resolutions, reports and statistics piled up on the table of the secretary. The discourse is expected from under the Bishop's hand for the Minutes. In the meantime we sample the sermon from a stenographic report. Our readers will be prompt to get the whole discourse after they have tasted.—Editors Richmond Christian Advocate.) The text was:

"Jesus said unto him, Let the dead bury their dead; but go thou and preach the kingdom of God."—Luke ix, 60.

The Bishop spoke as follows:

The context which I read in the lesson shows the Lord's dealings with three persons, who might be said to represent three classes. The first volunteered to become a preacher. It is said here in Luke, "a certain man," but the parallel passage in Matthew says it was a "scribe," offering his services in these words: "Master, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest." It is very possible, notwithstanding the humiliation of the Master's life—it is very possible there were some passages of special triumph which challenged the admiration of this man. It would be no bad thing to follow a man who with a few loaves and fishes could feed a multitude. The Master's reply put an end to his aspirations. He saw the motive of the scribe and struck at the root: "Jesus said unto him, Foxes have holes, and birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." We hear no more of him.

Another person was truly called. The Master said to him: Follow me. And he was inclined to obey ultimately, but there was something in the way at that time: "Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father."—a domestic reason. Natural affection finds no discount in the Bible. It is not a mark of grace for a man to be indifferent to his father. The Lord's answer was: "Let the dead bury their dead; but go thou and preach the kingdom of God."

I do not take it that this man's father was literally a corpse in the house, but I might paraphrase his meaning thus: "Lord, I am not disinclined to obedience, but 'I,' perhaps he said, "am an only son; I have an aged father; let me go and stay with him, and manage his business till he dies; then I will come and report for duty." But he spoke to one who had canvassed the situation. The Lord knew he had a father, and didn't call him in ignorance of his circumstances. "There are others who can attend to this business perhaps better than you; let them look after your father's affairs; let the dead bury their dead; let those who have no such ministry of life attend to the home matters. But time is short; go thou, from this day, and preach the kingdom of God."

Another seems to have been called also, but made an excuse of a different sort. "I will follow thee, but let me first go bid them farewell which are at home at my house." He had a house, property, circumstances. I take it he means about this: "Let me go home; let me go and put these things into ship-shape; after I have done that—bid farewell, not to the people, but the things at home—I will follow thee." The answer was: "No man, having put his hand to the plow and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." If you examine the meaning of the word translated "fit" you will see it refers not to character, but instrument. No man who does that sort of thing is a fit instrument for promoting the kingdom of God. The Lord is choosing agencies for his work. It is a very important affair in plowing to look straight ahead. Whoever looks back makes a crooked furrow. A great deal of our bad plowing comes from this unstability.

These passages bring out that cardinal doctrine we are familiar with in our standards, and practice too—the call of God to the ministry.

We shall, at the conclusion of this service, ordain certain brethren, but the church does not make them ministers. No, no! The church simply proves them, tries them. The church proposes only to accredit them to the world as ministers already called of God; for the first question propounded to them will be: "Do you trust that you are inwardly moved by the Holy Ghost to take upon you the office of the ministry in the church of Christ?" If any one of that class, no matter what his acquisition, eloquence, learning, moral character or social station, should say, "I do not," we would surcease right there. When he says, "I do," we proceed.

The calling of God to the ministry leads me to say: The ministry is not a profession. It is a vocation. A profession a man may choose for himself with all the lights about him. But no man is authorized to choose this ministry for himself. It is true now, as said by the Lord Jesus Christ then: "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that you should go and bring forth fruit." And none others can bring forth any fruit. A man may say, "I will educate my son for a lawyer, physician, merchant, farmer," and has a right to say so; but no man has a right to say: "I will educate my son for a preacher." It is one of the marks of a fallen church when a man deliberates in his household that this son shall be prepared for the army, that one for the bar, and the other for the church.

It happens now and then, if anything does happen, that this selection of man is also the choice of God, as when John Wesley was sent out. So of Fletcher.

I repeat, the ministry is a vocation. Men are called of God to it. St. Paul opens nearly every one of his epistles by this important fact. "Paul, an apostle, not of men, neither by man." He was jealous, if I may so say, lest it might be thought that he derived his authority from Peter or John, and not of God. He wished it understood that his authority came from first hands. And this simple truth disposes of that old wives' fable of a "succession" in the ministry.

But, says some one, why should this be necessary—this filling the ranks of the ministry by a call to it from Heaven? Why may not the ministry, like any other profession, depend upon the great law of supply and demand? Why is it necessary, in this matter of obtaining this class of public servants, that the law of demand and supply be departed from? I admit that question is worthy of consideration. For instance, if Danville or Lynchburg was scarce of doctors, the demand would soon produce a supply. Some doctors would directly move into it. If a town or village needs a blacksmith, it gets him very soon. If it needs a tailor or physician, or any other learned or unlearned profession, this law will bring him. You will find a little town away out in Kansas or Nevada in want of men of any profession. The law brings them from the East or West till it gets plenty. If they are short of carpenters or lawyers, they get them elsewhere, or they are made on the spot. You can trust that law to regulate the wants of a great community, but you cannot trust it for a supply of Christian ministers. You cannot do it for this reason: The more men need a gospel ministry, the less they are inclined to ask for it. The law of supply and demand doesn't work here. This one fact lifts the Christian ministry out of the sphere of professions.

How long do you think it would have taken the inhabitants of Nineveh to make out a regular call for Jonah? He was the last man they wanted. They would have sent for fiddlers, dancing-masters and circus actors; sent for doctors, lawyers (I doubt not it was a good place for lawyers,) carpenters, blacksmiths; but when would they have said to one another: "We need a preacher, and let us give Jonah a call?" Now he was not in demand. It took one or two voyages to get him there. How long before Sodom and Gomorrah would have acknowledged that they needed a minister? No, my brethren, it is true now, as then, in a large place or a small place, that the more a people need a faithful ministry, the less they desire to see it. What then? God must exercise his divine prerogative of calling a man without asking anybody's permission, anointing him and sending him out. Every gospel minister is a man not sent for, but sent.

Brain Enigmas.

The brain's action under peculiar circumstances is often directly the opposite from what might be expected. Imbecile children have been known to acquire some degree of mental ability by a blow on the head, while sensible persons frequently lose a portion of their sense in the same way. The case of a gentleman is cited who, by a blow on the head from a hammer, lost his knowledge of Greek. An Irish farmer, being struck by paralysis, found, on his recovery, that he had lost all knowledge of nouns and proper names, and the most remarkable thing was he could remember the initial letter of the word he wished to pronounce, but no more. In not a few cases of brain disease persons have forgotten acquired languages, and a knowledge of their mother tongue has returned; but Dr. Johnson, when dying, tried in vain to repeat the Lord's Prayer in English, but did so in Latin. A curious anomaly in brain action is that the brain can stand still for years, and then, on recovery, take up exactly the chain of thought which was interrupted by disease or accident.

A farmer of New England one day went home from his field after hiding his beetle and wedges in a hollow tree. That night he lost his reason, and remained a lunatic for eighteen years. A fortunate action restoring his mental faculties, he sat up in bed and asked if the boys had brought the beetle and wedges home. Being told they had not, he went to the tree, found them and brought them back. An English captain, struck on the head at the battle of Nile, while giving an order, remained unconscious for eighteen months. Being restored by a surgical operation, he sat up, and to the astonishment of his attendants he shouted in a stentorian voice the remainder of the interrupted order. It is not a little remarkable that serious injuries have occurred to the brain without material detriment to the mental powers; while, on the other hand, the most critical and scientific examination of the brain matter of insane persons fails to disclose any difference between it and the brain substance of the sane. Soldiers have been known to carry bullets in their brains without serious detriment, and operations for the removal of the balls, still further injuring the brain, had no effect on their thinking powers. A case is detailed of a man who received a blow on the head which fractured the skull and caused a suppuration by which more than half his brain was destroyed, and yet he retained his mental faculties in full force till he died.

The brain sometimes loses control of the muscular system, as in St. Vitus' dance, in which the patient has no voluntary control of his muscles. Sometimes the physical spasm is in one direction only, as in the case of a lady whose mental disease prompted her to double up her body and make leaps like a fish. A more singular case was that of a girl, who, while the fit of mental aberration was on her, did nothing but repeat the action of standing on her head. These acts were in consequence of a diseased brain. In health, as we all know, the brain exercises a control over the minutiæ not only of voluntary action, but also of memory; but in disease, particular slips of remembrance are often extracted from the mind and total blanks exist in their place. An old soldier, after having sustained the removal of a bullet from his brain, was found to have forgotten the odd numbers; and a teacher, having had a brain fever, forgot the letter F. Sometimes a sudden affection of the brain removes whole masses of knowledge at once: An Italian, who was master of the languages, was struck down by a disease which affected his brain. On the day of his attack he spoke English, the language he had last acquired; the disease progressing, he forgot that and spoke French, and on the day of his death he had forgotten everything but Italian.—"Borderlands of Insanity," by Andrew Wynter.

Pulpits.

Who knows what becomes of the old pulpits? What curious tales might be told of some of them; and if they could speak or write, what curious tales could they tell! But as a matter of curiosity we should really like to know whether any of the pilgrim pulpits, for instance, are in existence, and where. Let some of the good old brethren rub up their memories, and let us see what is known about these old standpoints.

To give an idea of what we mean, here are three or four facts about pulpits in Europe: In a closet near the door of the church of St. Nicholas, at Leipsic, is the pulpit in which Martin Luther, the reformer, preached.

The pulpit of the celebrated Richard Baxter is still preserved in the vestry of the Unitarian church in Kidderminster, and was occupied by the writer a few years ago. It is small, and of the octagonal form. In the front of it, near the top, are the words, in yellow letters: "Praise ye the Lord;" and on the four front panels are the words: "Dau widow gave this."

John Bunyan's pulpit was removed, many years since, from Belfast to London, and it is feared is now lost. His vestry chair is yet preserved in the vestry of the present church; his pulpit Bible is in possession of the distinguished family of the Whitebreads, who purchased it for a large sum, and his large, awkward pulpit candlesticks are in the pulpit of the Baptist church at Irthlingborough, in Northamptonshire.

The pulpit of the excellent Dr. Isaac Watts was sold a few years ago in London, and is yet used in a small place of worship in that city.

The pulpit used by George Whitefield, in his open-air efforts on Blackheath, was carefully preserved till a very few years since, when it was borrowed by a careless preacher and broken.

Some twenty years ago, when the corporation of London purchased the Baptist church in Carter Lane, London, to make the approach to the new London Bridge, they presented the fine old carved pulpit, so long occupied by Dr. John Till, to his successor, Dr. Pippon. It has been handsomely varnished, and now occupies its proper position in the church in New Park street, where not a few American Baptist pastors have occupied it.

OUR TEMPTATIONS.—A great many people imagine that if the circumstances of their lives were different, their lives would be much better than they are. They seem to think that the sin comes from the opportunities of sinning by which they are surrounded, and that if the opportunities were removed sin would die out within them. Well, in one sense this may be true, and in some cases it undoubtedly is true. This was the old monastic conception, and men fled from their fellow-men, from the sights and sounds and seductions of actual life, and shut themselves within walls of stone, and buried themselves in caverns of the earth. But their experiment was not a success, as the self-scourging they inflicted upon their bodies, in their vain effort to eradicate sin and make themselves holy, proved.

The truth is, friend, temptation is in you, and you might as well expect to fence your body from the impurities of his own blood as to protect your soul from the seductive tendencies of your sinful disposition. The mind makes its own sins, and the offspring are of the color and character of the parent. What you need is not that your old, wicked heart be kept from evil round about you, but that you have a new heart given to you. "Except ye be born again ye cannot see the kingdom of heaven." Golden Rule.

The largest organ in the world is in Albert Hall, London, and was built by Henry Willis in 1870. It contains one hundred and thirty-eight stops, four manuals, and nearly ten thousand pipes, all of which are metal. The wind is supplied by steam power. Thirteen couplers connect or disconnect the various subdivisions of the organ at the will of the performer.

The London Metropolitan Lay Mission numbers 600 volunteer workers. During the past year 84,071 visits were paid, 3,352 meetings held in halls (attended by 112,005 persons,) with 150 open-air services, 115,000 tracts and illustrated periodicals given away, and 1,540 persons induced to attend public worship.

Religious Intelligence.

—By resolution the American Bible Society has refused to participate in the Centennial Exhibition if kept open on the Sabbath.

—The King of Burmah has asked for more Christian teachers to come and reside in Mandulay, and promises them protection and aid.

—Rev. Dr. Duane reports two thousand parishes in the Protestant Episcopal Church which have contributed nothing during the past year to foreign missions.

—The Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church report that on December 1 the receipts for the eight months of the year had been $104,970, against the sum of $134,294 during the same time last year.

—In the Zulu mission, South Africa, there have been numerous cases of conversion and awakening of the native Christians to a sense of their personal responsibility. In one of their public meetings $500 were subscribed for the cause of Christ.

—The Berlin correspondent of the London Times writes: "Russian government missionaries stationed at Hakodadi, writing to the semi-official Church Messenger, triumphantly relate the steady progress of 'orthodoxy' in Japan. The conversion of the Japanese race to the Russian religion, they say, is universally considered by the Japanese as a guarantee of their success in the great work of introducing European culture and civilization."

—The annual report of the Japan mission of the American Board is very cheering in its tone. The field is opening beyond the utmost ability of the missionaries fully to occupy it. More men are needed, and there is perhaps a still greater need of women to do such house-to-house work as Miss Dudley has done at Sendai, but is obliged now to relinquish on account of her duties at the Kobe Girls' School. Medical services have to a notable degree prepared the way for the direct work of the mission. Hiogo officials, for instance, steadily refused to allow the preaching of the gospel in their city, but now permit Sabbath services at the dispensary, where a congregation of thirty, mostly school teachers and physicians, attend Mr. Atkinson's preaching. Mr. Taylor was recently invited to open a hospital at Bezene, a large inland city, one hundred miles west of Kobe. On visiting the place he found that there was a Bible interest started by a Japanese student who had been converted in America, but had died shortly after his return to his native city. Several high officials were present at a Bible meeting held in the house of the vice governor, who is himself an inquirer. Since Mr. Taylor's return to Kobe a government officer has written to him: "Give us the gospel first and the hospital afterward; for we cannot afford to wait for the gospel." It is probable that the sacred city, Kioto, once the Mikado's residence, and filled with temples, will be occupied by the mission during the autumn. The blind counselor of the Kioto government, Yamamoto by name, is greatly interested in the truth, and especially desires that a Christian school be opened there. He has said that what the Japanese need is some power that will change the heart and reform the life, and that naught can do this but Christianity.—Independent.

THE AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.—The fifty-first annual report of the American Sunday School Union, which has just been published, gives interesting statistics of the progress of its work during the past year. During the year the association has published about 960 maps, diagrams, class-books, and numerous periodicals for use among the Sunday schools of America. The secretary reports that the growth and interest in Bible study and Bible reading through the adoption and general use of the system of International lessons has greatly increased the demand throughout the country for instruction as to the methods of Sunday school work. In addition to the oral instruction in Bible study imparted in many conference exercises, 123 distinct sermons and addresses have been delivered upon this subject. The same report includes a carefully prepared summary of the missionary work of the Union for the past year throughout the Northwest and Southwest, and also Michigan, the Pacific coast, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Ohio, Indiana, New York, New England and Kansas. In the various fields of its work thus cited the Union has organized 4,258 new Sunday schools, appointed 6,480 new teachers, instructed 48,049 scholars, and visited or aided 3,098 additional new schools. There were also 13,825 families visited by the missionaries. The Union expresses its gratitude to the American Bible Society for the generous aid given to its works by liberal grants of Bibles and Testaments to supply needy schools. The report further states that the introduction of the American Sunday school system on the European continent has been heartily undertaken and vigorously prosecuted by the London Sunday School Union, which employs several Sunday school missionaries in Germany, France, Switzerland and elsewhere. The latest report of the American committee records the following gratifying success of the foreign work of the Union: In Germany 1,218 Sunday schools have been established, 8,743 teachers appointed and 81,755 scholars instructed; in France 990 schools have been established, comprising 41,520 scholars; in Spain there have been established 20 schools, with 95 teachers and 1,060 scholars; in Italy 90 schools are carried on, receiving an attendance of 1,000 scholars; while in Switzerland about 600 schools have been established, numbering 2,096 teachers and 46,370 scholars. In Brazil, Chili, New Granada, Mexico, Zacatecas, etc., Sunday schools are also in operation upon the American plan. The receipts of the Union for the year, from legacies and other sources, have amounted to $90,079.65, and the expenditures for salaries, books and other requisites to $89,085.03.

Our Young People.

SOME PLACE FOR ME.

What if a little ray of light,
Just starting from the sun,
Should linger in its downward flight—
Who'd miss the tiny one?
Perhaps the rose would be less bright
'Twas sent to shine upon.

What if the rain-drop in the sky
In lifeless ease should stay;
I'll not be missed on earth, so I
Contented here will stay;
Would not some lily, parched and dry,
Less fragrant be to-day?

What if some acorn on the ground
Refused its shell to burst,
Where would the stately tree be found?
Or if the humble dust
Refused the germ to nestle round,
What could the sailor trust?

I am a child. It will not do
An idle life to lead
Because I'm small, with talents few
Of me the Lord hath need
Some work or calling to pursue,
Or do some humble deed.

I must be active every hour,
And do my Maker's will;
If but a ray can paint the flower,
A rain-drop swell the rill,
I know in me there is a power
Some humble place to fill.

Grandpa Goodale Stories.—No. 19.

HOW PORPOISE TOM CAME TO THRASH THE MAN AT BLUE HILL, AND HOW HE CAME TO BE CALLED PORPOISE TOM.

MY DEAR CHILDREN: Let us proceed at once with Tom Sinkle's yarn, and perhaps we can finish it to-night.

"You see," continued Tom, "I had just got back to the old cottage where I had left my Aunt Molly so many years before, and I was feeling sort of proud like at having my pocket full of money and a snug little sum to my credit in a Boston bank, and I had been keeping kind of dark about it for the six months I had been running as mate on the Sally Lotus, for I wanted to surprise my old aunt when my time came. I confess it was a mean thing in me not to have gone over to Blue Hill before, but you see we had to make short trips; but this time I was determined to see her, and I got the captain to let me stay off in trip just for this very purpose. Well, as I said, I had just got back to the old cottage, and I thought I would look round a bit and see how the land lay before I went in. So I drew up to the old kitchen window and looked in. There was the same old fire in the big fireplace, and the logs were blazing away just as though they had been burning ever since I left, and the same old trappings were about the room; and sure enough, there in the corner of the fireplace sat Aunt Molly, looking a bit older than when I saw her last, but still pretty much the same. But one thing I couldn't understand—there was a sailor just about my build sitting by the fireplace talking to Aunt Molly, and I didn't like the looks of the fellow a bit.

"I just thought I would listen awhile to what he had to say before I went in, and so I sort of eased up on the window and put my ear down to the crack, and then I heard him say:

"'So, Aunt Molly, you can scarcely believe that your runaway Tom has come back to you after all these long years to ask your forgiveness.' I knew then that the fellow was a rascal trying to pass himself off for me, and I took a good look at him, and soon remembered him.

"You see some three years before, when this fellow and I were cruising together in the Mediterranean, we were captured by pirates, and while prisoners together in the hold of the pirate ship I had told him my story, and given him some trinkets and a little Bible my Aunt Molly had given me when I was a boy, for I was very sick, and thought my time was about up, and the fellow had promised me that if ever he got away he would take them to her. Well, soon after this the pirate captain set adrift all the men he had captured, in a small boat, on a dark night; but he kept me on board, because I was so sick he thought I would soon die; and now here was that same man trying to pass himself off for me to my Aunt Molly; for you see, as I told you, a good many people thought she was rich. Aunt Molly looked at first as though she did not believe him, but when he drew out the trinkets and the old Bible I saw the old lady spring up from her chair, and before I could stop her she flung her arms round this scoundrel, saying: 'My boy—my own Tom.' This was too much for me, and I burst in the door with one kick of my foot, and in a second had the fellow on the floor and gave him a tremendous thrashing. You ought to have seen how astonished Aunt Molly looked; she screamed at first, and I had hard work to make her believe that there were not robbers in the house; but I soon drove this fellow out, and was not long in making my peace with her.

"Well, as I said, just as we were leaving Castine on the Sally this man managed to get on board to work his passage to Boston, and I knew I had to be on the lookout for foul play. Well, about twelve o'clock that night this fellow raised the cry of 'Man overboard,' and that when no one but he and I were on deck, and I had the wheel. I called him to take the wheel, and at once threw into the sea some chicken coops and boxes that were on deck, and rushed to the davits to lower a small boat; but just as I was reaching over to loosen the ropes he dropped the wheel, and, springing behind me like a fox, threw me into the sea. I was a good swimmer, but knew a man would stand a small chance on a dark night, with the wind blowing hard from the northeast by north. I did the best I could, however, to keep my head above water, and soon saw lights moving on the brig, and knew that a boat was coming to my rescue. I shouted at the top of my voice, but to my dismay saw by the lights that the boat was moving in the wrong direction, and that the wind kept them from hearing me. Well, I saw the boat go back to the brig, and then I gave myself up for lost; but just then I felt my hand touch something, and soon found it to be one of the chicken coops I had thrown overboard. It was a large coop, and so built that it could not sink, and I soon climbed upon it and waited for day. It was a long night, messmates; but day came at last, and then I waited, hoping and hoping that some vessel would come along and pick me up. There were some cod lines on the coop, with large hooks on them, and if I had had any bait I would have tried to catch some fish, for I was so hungry I could have eaten them raw. Two days and nights passed, and I began to get desperate, for I had not seen a single sail. The porpoises kept coming up and staring at me with their little eyes, with no lashes on them, and blowing water out of the top of their heads. I began to get vexed at them, and determined to try to get my revenge out of them, for they seemed to be mocking me in my misery with their frolicking. So I watched my chance, and took a hook and line in each hand, and the next one that came along I hooked in each side of the head with a cod hook, and soon found myself astride the creature's back. It was a hard horse to ride, I can tell you, messmates; but it was my only chance, and I hung on to him, and headed toward land. The beast plunged and snorted, and tried to dive, but I clung to him, and after a hard tussle he started for shore, and landed me on Deer Isle in about six hours."

And this is why Tom Sinkle was called "Porpoise Tom."

"But, grandpa, do you believe that story?"

Well, no, Tom, I can't say I do exactly; but it is a fair specimen of sailor's yarns.

To-morrow night we are to have the "Bee Hunt," and then the long looked-for "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." And now good-night.

GRANDPA GOODALE.

A RABBIT'S CURIOUS HOME.—I have often heard of rabbits rearing their young in strange places, but the following fact seems to me to be most extraordinary: An official on the London and Northwestern railway, in the midland counties, had constantly noticed a rabbit passing to and fro on the permanent way. Curious to know where it came from, he examined the locality, and eventually discovered beneath a "railway sleeper" a nest of four young rabbits. Continuing his observations, he discovered that whenever the parent rabbit left her young she carefully closed the aperture with sand and small stones. Considering that during the day some dozens of trains, often heavily laden, passed over this identical sleeper, I think you will agree with me that in choosing such a place wherein to give birth to its young the mother displayed a reckless disregard of life. I am sorry to add that since this first came to my knowledge the young have been removed by some person unknown.—The Children's Friend.

THE MAN AND THE PERCH.—A man went to a stream to fish. He caught a small perch. As he took it off the hook the perch said: "Pray, put me back whence you caught me.'

"'Why should I do so?" said the man.

"'Why,' quoth the perch, 'can you not see that I am young and small, and not so well worth your while as I shall be some time hence, when I am grown large and plump?"

"'That may be,' said the man; 'but it strikes me that if I let you go now you will not be such a fool as to let me catch you when you grow large. I should have been glad to have caught a large, plump perch, but I am not quite such a fool as to let you go, and, it may be, catch no perch at all. I have you, and I mean to keep you."

"FUNNY RAIN."—A little four-year-old had been intently watching the process of corn-popping on a stormy day in the beginning of winter. Happening to turn to the window she observed for the first time the falling snow. Amazed and delighted, she ran to her father and exclaimed:

"O papa! do look at the funny rain! It's popped out all white!"

Christ is a flower, but he fadeth not; he is a river, but he is never dry; he is a sun, but he knoweth no eclipse; he is all in all, but he is something more than all.—Spurgeon.

Pokers.

It is said of Mr. Webster, and he somewhere says it himself, that he had a special gift for making fires. In the palmy days of his senatorial glory it was his habit in the winter-time to rise betimes and kindle every grate in the house himself. There is a peculiar sleight in making a good fire; and the achievement did the great expounder as much good, and afforded him as much pleasure, in a certain way, as the writing of a diplomatic dispatch or the triumphs of a field day in the Senate chamber. Making fires may be ranked among the fine arts, and the loftiest genius may well covet the excellent gift. There is satisfaction in it, and the comfort of it is felt by the builder; "yea, he warmeth himself, and saith, Aha! I am warm. I have seen the fire." The slow fire is a torment to others than those who have died at the stake. The martyrs are a million-fold more than those who have been canonized, or made famous by their invincible faith and supernatural courage.

Who has not found his patience quite exhausted at the inhospitable hospitality of a make-believe fire, half frozen, and welcomed to a mere smoke of stewing and sputtering sticks, as hard to kindle as asbestos, or to a grate of coal in which the vital spark is well-nigh smothered, and combustion the thing apparently to be deprecated? And who has not blessed the deft and generous oversight that makes the chimney roar with riotous blaze, and speaks with tongues of fire to those who have sought the fire-side refuge?

The next thing to making a fire is the care of it. Like everything good, it must be watched and nursed. Eternal vigilance is the price of civil liberty, and of a good fire also. The fireman without a poker is as helpless as a Jehu without his whip. Nearly everybody likes to poke a fire, and nearly every one thinks he can do it better than another. In nothing is human conceit more manifest. The use of the poker must be well, timed, and directed with judgment. There must be a skillful hand and an accurate eye, a patient mind and a serene temper. There is exhibition of character in the way people walk, in the pull they give the door-bell, in the manner of opening and shutting doors. Probably nine persons out of ten will spoil the fire in their attempt to mind it. Let a man take the poker in hand and he stands revealed. He will handle it in a jerky, nervous way, he will grasp it with terrific energy, as if his life depended upon the blow to be dealt, and he will, in a blinding fury, mash the coal, or so misadjust the hickory sticks that draft and flame become impossible. To let well enough alone is the rarest of virtues in this world. People must ever be meddling and tinkering in church polity, in political expedients, in social reforms, in finance. If there is occasion they do it seldom wisely, and where there is none they must stir up things anyhow. We have known only a few people who could contentedly sit by a good fire and let it alone. The temptation to grasp the poker is, with the most, irresistible.

There are fires that need attention; they must be revived or they will shortly go out. The height of wisdom is to know when and how to use the poker. The instrument itself is a boon to mankind, only let it not be abused. The world needs it in all its enterprises. Civilization would become retrograde, science, art and literature would become so many heaps of smoldering embers without it. The fires of patriotism require to be aroused continually lest the flame of 1876 should be quenched; but how the good work is marred by those who seek to keep alive the memories of sectional strife! A poker in the hands of bigotry and fanaticism is a most mischievous thing. See how Blaine, Morton and kindred spirits are putting out the pure flame of love for a united nation. In the hands of greedy politicians the poker is indeed most dangerous. They put out the fire which they profess to nourish, and in its stead kindle the devouring flames of sectional hate and bitterness. In their endeavors to stir up the spirit of liberty there are those who must drag in the question of religion along with those of finance and official honesty, and set the country by the ears. The national constitution, once a very good and wholesome document, has been worked at until State sovereignty is likely in the end to be swept away by endless amendments and perverted constructions. The pokers of Federal intervention and coercion have only begun their work unless a speedy change comes over the people. The fraternity agitation between the two principal Methodisms is another illustration of the poker rashly used. There are some fires—hard coal fires, for example—that will not bear poking at all. Let them alone, and give them the conditions of air and draft, and they do well enough, but when you attempt to force them they fall into a mass which nothing can kindle.

Religion in the churches should be evident in the spirit of love and zeal. The membership should be aglow with the spirit of burning. It is a scriptural injunction to "stir up the gift of God which is in thee." A venerable apostle says: "Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance." Even the "pure minds" were to be stirred up. Blessed is the preacher who has the gift of stirring up, and who can so handle the divine word as to keep the aspiring flame ever vigorous. Ill-directed efforts, such as scolding and fretting and impatience, may put out what little fire there is, and sometimes a revival is brought to a sudden end by the zealous and well-intended but not well-timed efforts of the preacher. A fire has its laws and conditions, and it will not allow us to disregard them. The spiritual life of a church has its conditions and methods under the ministry of the Holy Spirit, and our efforts must be reverently in accord with his operations. A revival fire is to be touched with caution. Every one connected with it may think to mend it, and insist upon his own measures. Let it be fanned with the breath of prayer, but be careful in the use of the poker. The seraphim in their beautiful ministry used the tongs to bear the live coals from the altar of sacrifice.

Southern University.

MR. EDITOR: The Southern University, situated at Greensboro, Ala., is the only male college now under the supervision and patronage of the Alabama Conference, and as such the Conference has a large and dear interest at stake in this institution of learning. At our last Annual Conference the subject of denominational education was discussed freely, and with greater unanimity than has been our wont. The church, I think, is everywhere waking up to the fact that her institutions of learning are her right arm of power, and that sanctified learning is the hope of the age and the country. It is known to the public generally that the Southern University has recently taken a new departure under Dr. L. M. Smith as president, and almost an entire new faculty. The professorship of mathematics has been vacant until quite recently. Arrangements have just been made with Rev. J. S. Moore, the former professor of mathematics, to hear a few classes in the higher branches of that department, and perhaps assist somewhat in modern language. This arrangement makes the present corps of teachers full, efficient, and, as far as I can judge, entirely satisfactory. On my recent visit to Greensboro, to hold my first quarterly meeting, I had an opportunity for the first time to mingle somewhat with these men. I find them to be scholarly, genial, lovely men, working together in the greatest affection and harmony, and exerting a most fatherly and controlling influence over the students. The faculty are all ministers of the gospel except one, and some say he ought to be—men of decided religious character, making their religion prominent carrying it with them into the school-room, diffusing it in their lectures and in their daily conversation among their pupils. My recent visit has inspired me with zeal and new hope for the institution. The numbers are about as last year, and the prospect for a goodly increase at the beginning of the approaching half session is good. The people of Greensboro also are rallying to the institution with a most commendable zeal. All the churches, yea, and men of no church, are coming up to the help of the college not only with their patronage, but with their material aid. This people have in the last few years actually contributed thousands of dollars to build up and further the interests of the university, and altogether the outlook for the college, I think, is far better than it has been for years. The Conference at the last session passed very harmonious resolutions urging the preachers to take up collections this great centennial year, endeavoring to pledge each member of the church to contribute at least $1 for the endowment of the college. This whole matter was committed to Rev. O. R. Blue as financial agent, who is expected to operate through the preachers, and it is most ardently and devoutly to be hoped that by united effort something may be done worthy the occasion and worthy the institution, so dear to many hearts. Let us be stimulated to noble deeds by the example of our Baptist brethren, who are making this grand centennial year the occasion for endowing their college in this State. They have already commenced the work, and are succeeding to the admiration and wonder of all lookers-on. In many obscure neighborhoods they are getting a dollar from each member of the church, and sometimes from every member of the family, and it amounts to hundreds of dollars where nothing has been obtained heretofore. Bro. Blue, the financial agent, it is to be hoped, will take the matter in hand, devise some plan of systematic operation, and through the preachers set the ball in motion, which, like the stone cut out of the mountain, without hand shall roll on until it fills the whole land.

A. H. MITCHELL.
SPRINGFIELD, ALA., Jan. 13, 1876.

Letter from Lovick Pierce.

The venerable Dr. Pierce still writes with mental vigor unabated. The following letter, addressed by him to the South Georgia Conference, appears in the Southern Christian Advocate of January 12:

MY DEAR BRETHREN: Although it is true I was at our Conference, I feel it amounted to so little in the way of Conference intercourse that I can only relieve my own heart by this expression of my increased indebtedness for your loving kindness. You passed my character because there was nothing against it—although there was very little for it in the way of work done. But you passed it because my life-long labor satisfied you that when I do not preach, it is only because I cannot. To me preaching has never been a task, but a benediction; for, no matter how low the tidal wave of my religious feeling had fallen, it almost always flooded more or less while preaching. But my vocal capacity is gone, and my common idea is gone forever. My friends try to cheer me up with the belief that it will only be a winter spell. I never felt as anxious to preach in all my life as of late; but it is because I desire to kindle again the upward and onward aspirations of early Methodist converts. There is a fearful falling away on this vital issue. Yes, brethren—this vital issue. There is nothing more certain, either in natural or moral philosophy, than this: that if religion does not go on it goes out. God could never have made the requirement of religion a necessity without making the sedulous cultivation of it, in order to its preservation, equally a necessity. With this divine philosophy I had charged my mind, and had preached a few times on the reopening vistas through which we early Methodists looked into the bright future of our entire sanctification. For I might say, here and now, that no one ever went on to perfection unless he or she did so by believing in and passing through this work of entire sanctification. The idea of reaching unto perfection away this side of entire sanctification is simply absurd.

There lingers about my mind a constant apprehension that I preached my last sermon in Waynesboro on Monday, the first day of November. If so, I am glad my last effort was from these words (the second time): "For this is the will of God, even your sanctification." It is out of my line to preach from a few words, but these exactly filled the bill of my wishes in regard to the text.

It will be right for you, my brethren, to ask God to restore unto me voice enough to preach again; and especially if his hand is in it, that I may be able to stand in my lot as one of the fraternal messengers to the next General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in May, 1876. Your leaving me as an effective man—although I could not have had the face to have asked it—is doubly dear to me on account of this commission. I did not want to go there—if the Lord will allow me to go—as a supernumerate, but as a regular itinerant. For while I can add nothing to the merited honors of your Conference, it will add much to your marvelous history that a member of your body, in the seventy-second year of his ministry and ninety-second year of his life, should be rated effective, and sent as one of the fraternal messengers of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

If God confirm it as part of his will concerning me, and my embassy is successful, I shall then have the answer to the question: Why have I lived so long?

And now, brethren, let me assure you that, while I could not pray with you, nor preach to you, I did pray for you. I wanted to exhort you to go out next year—every one of you—determined to preach more closely the sinfulness of sin, and show that shallow convictions of it will end only in an extemporized moral reform. Insist on conversions as clear as the almost involuntary exclamation: "Abba Father;" and urge every professor of it to go right on to perfection, assuring every one of them who does not feel this to be a duty, and live accordingly, that they either started wrong or else got wrong. There is no religion where the soul is not athirst for more.

I had intended to give you my views on true Christian sanctification—a subject now no little imperiled by false views and false conclusions. But I could not speak, therefore I have written some essays on the facts and features of this higher life plane. I hope they will introduce our dear old Advocate to a broader circulation in 1876. As I cannot preach to you, I must write. A happy New Year to every one of you; and this it will be if we all preach more holiness, and grow holier ourselves. So, Lord, let it be.

The Right Spirit.

THE publisher informs us that the names of new subscribers are coming in encouragingly. We trust this is only an earnest of the rising tide, and that before another month has passed there will be a perfect inundation. At $2 a year no Methodist can well find an excuse for refusing to subscribe. The paper is worth this for its secular news alone, and double this amount for its religious and literary reading. Nothing in the way of tracts or books is as cheap as the ADVOCATE. The preachers are persuaded of the importance of putting it in every family. A brother writes:

When I reach my circuit and look around a little I will try to do something for the ADVOCATE. I can't do without the ADVOCATE as a co-worker.

Another says:

I earnestly wish I could get every family in my charge to take and read the ADVOCATE. I feel it our privilege to get the people to take the ADVOCATE. It helps the preacher and the people. I feel like a friend had come when my ADVOCATE comes. It is a wise counselor, a good preacher, and ever faithful pastor. May the good Lord help you in your good work.

These are specimens of what we are daily receiving. It encourages us greatly to know that our brethren are in full sympathy with us in our work, and that we have their hearty co-operation in our efforts to give the people a thoroughly good religious newspaper. Let us keep the ADVOCATE before the people, and never relax till every Methodist takes it.

A Century's Progress.

The Central Presbyterian makes the following cheerful comparison between 1775 and 1875:

According to our estimate there were, in 1775, 2,073 Protestant churches in what soon became the United States, 1,117 ministers and 71,150 communicants. When we state that there were in this year 143 Presbyterian ministers in the country, that in 1770 there were 77 Baptist churches, and that the Methodist Church was formally organized in 1784 with 83 ministers, it will hardly be thought that the estimate as given can be too low.

The population of the colonies at that time is usually spoken of as 3,000,000. In 1790 it was 3,929,827. In 1775 it was probably less than 3,000,000; but, taking this as the number, we have the following ratios: 1 church to 1,417 people; 1 minister to 2,685; 1 communicant to 42 of the population.

In the "American Baptist Year-Book for 1875" we find a table of statistics of the religious denominations of the United States for the year 1874, which we presume is derived from trustworthy sources. We supply some omissions, and make a fair addition for the progress of the churches for one year. The result gives the summary: 78,423 churches, 55,151 ministers, 8,473,239 communicants.

By the census of 1870 the population of the United States was more than 38,000,000. It will not be an overestimate, we presume, to put it at 42,000,000 for 1875. This will give us the following ratios: 1 church to 535 people; 1 minister to 757 people, 1 communicant to 5—really a fraction less than 5.

Thus it appears that while in 1775 there was 1 communicant for every 42 people, now there is 1 for every 5. In other words, the church has increased more than eight times as fast as the population of the country.

The Western Methodist has come out in a handsome new suit, very becoming and attractive, and such as it is worthy to wear. We congratulate our excellent cotemporary on these indications of enlarged usefulness and prosperity. The Western is one of our most valued exchanges, a really good religious newspaper, and sound in the polity and statutes of Southern Methodism.

Blessed is he who learns to profit by his wants and infirmities, and who, in all the privation he endures, is still submissive to the will of God.

The Southern Methodist Publishing House.

ITS PROSPECTS.

MR. EDITOR: If we can announce to the General Conference in 1878, to be held in Atlanta, Ga., that the Publishing House is out of debt, a thrill of joy would be felt throughout the connection. The hearts of nearly seven hundred thousand Methodists would be gladdened by the intelligence. Liberal things might then be devised, and the church supplied with a wholesome literature at prices slightly in advance of the cost of publication. When in 1866 the business of the house was resumed prospects were by no means favorable for success, yet, under all the disadvantages that have surrounded us, the capital has since then increased from $87,165.70 to $306,701.55. It is true that during this period difficulties have frequently confronted us that at times seemed almost insurmountable, yet the church has, in every time of trial, rallied to our aid, and a kind Providence has smiled on our efforts, until now we have a capital of more than three hundred thousand dollars over and above our liabilities as the basis of future operations.

The past year was one of great financial embarrassment and distress. Many of the largest commercial houses in the country yielded to the force of the financial pressure, and were unable to maintain an existence. The Southern Methodist Publishing House, however, has passed this crisis safely, its paper protected and its credit unimpaired.

We have entered upon a new year with no note of discord throughout the church, and with more favorable prospects for business than at any former period. In every department of our house an activity prevails that we have not previously seen, indicative of the success with which our labors will be crowned. Orders for books are coming in from every direction, accompanied with the money, and promises of greater energy in behalf of the Publishing House than ever before. Besides, we have more than two years before the meeting of the General Conference in which to achieve the success that we so earnestly desire—the payment of every dollar we owe—and we believe that during this time it can and will be effected. It will, however, require not only earnest work on the part of our brethren, but the hearty co-operation of both the preachers and members of the church. Let the presiding elders and the preachers in charge of stations and circuits everywhere see that the people they serve are well supplied with the standard works of Methodism, and thus contribute to the circulation of a sound and pure theology, and at the same time to the accomplishment of the object we so much desire.

Pledging every energy we possess to the achievement of this result, and with earnest prayers for the health, the happiness and the success of all our brethren, I am truly your brother in Christ,

A. H. REDFORD, Agent.
NASHVILLE, TENN., Jan. 11, 1876.

FLORIDA CONFERENCE.—The thirty-first session of the Florida Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South, convened in the court-house at Quincy, Fla., January 5, 1876, Bishop W. M. Wightman in the chair.

Rev. F. Pasco, secretary, writes as follows to the Southern Christian Advocate:

Dear Brother: In the midst of all my duties as presiding elder, secretary of the Conference, editor of Minutes, etc., I have managed to find time to prepare a report of the proceedings of the Conference for the Advocate. We have had a most delightful session. Business was conducted with dispatch, and the appointments gave general satisfaction. Bishop Wightman has endeared himself to our Conference by the interest he has always manifested in us, and he has presided over our deliberations so often that we feel very strongly attached to him. Our collections have advanced on last year. I have not the reports by me, and can give figures only approximately: Conference collection, $960; domestic missions, $940; foreign missions, $400. The membership has increased about four hundred. We have sixty-one appointments this year. We feel greatly encouraged for the future. May God grant us a prosperous year. Pray for us.

DR. HALL'S CHURCH, NEW YORK. An order was duly entered in the Supreme Court, Chambers, giving permission to the trustees of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church to sell the old church edifice, at the corner of Nineteenth street and Fifth avenue, to Aaron Arnold, for $295,000. The proceeds of the sale are by the terms of the order to be applied to the payment of the bonds issued by the church and maturing on January 1, 1876, and the remainder is to be used toward canceling the indebtedness occasioned by the building of the new church at Fifth avenue and Fifty-fifth street. From the statements made in the petition on which the order was granted it appears that the church society was first incorporated in 1808 under the name of the Presbyterian church in Cedar street. In 1835 the church was removed to Duane street, and in 1852 its title was changed to that of "The Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, corner of Nineteenth street," the latter name being taken from the place of its new location. A few months since the title was again changed to that of "The Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church."

We sincerely sympathize with our brother, Rev. James A. Ivy, and Sister Ivy, in the loss of their infant daughter, Virginia Lee, who died on the eighteenth instant, aged six weeks. God has gathered the lamb into the heavenly fold.

The New York Methodist says: A correspondent of the Atlanta Advocate corrects Bishop Bowman for writing this from Georgia: "By a decided vote the brethren have asked of the General Conference a geographical division. This will throw most of the white work in the northern, and most of the colored work in the southern division. Such an arrangement will doubtless greatly facilitate our work in both parts of the State." The correspondent says that "the collocation and the inference seem thoroughly partisan." Bishop Bowman will gradually learn that to tell the truth in matters of this kind is "thoroughly partisan" every time. The critic proceeds: "How does the Bishop know that a geographical division of the Georgia Conference, if it ever comes, will be by an east and west line, dividing the State north and south? Who decided that matter? Was the thought born of an expectation or a hope that color should be the geographical line?" Of course the Bishop had some reason to know that the North and South Georgia Conferences were contemplated, and the resolution (against a color line) passed by the Conference would be in perfect harmony with a geographical line that mainly coincided with the distribution of races.

In answer to several inquiries why Easter will fall, this year, on the sixteenth rather than on the ninth of April, we would say, by way of explanation, that Easter day is regulated not by a solar but by a lunar cycle—the cycle that regulates the Golden Number. Now by solar calculation a day always begins at midnight; but by lunar calculation it begins at noon. If, therefore, the Paschal full moon falls on a Saturday, after twelve M., it is counted as falling on Sunday; and then Easter day is, under the rule in the Prayer-Book, the Sunday following. This is what happens in the present year. The Paschal full moon falls on Saturday, April 8, at 2.43 P. M. It is therefore counted as falling on Sunday, April 9, and Easter day is the Sunday following—i. e., April 16. It may be added that should the full moon fall on March 21, before twelve M., that full moon is counted as falling on March 20; would not regulate Easter day, but the one following. This happened in 1810. (See Brady's Clavis Calendaria, volume 1, page 272.)

KAVANAUGH CAMP GROUND.—This camp ground is located near Louisville, Ky., and the friends of the enterprise are moving in the matter. The Courier-Journal of late date says:

The Kavanaugh camp meeting board of trustees held a meeting at the Walnut Street Methodist church yesterday afternoon at two o'clock and organized by electing Bishop H. H. Kavanaugh president of the board. Rev. T. F. Van Meter was elected vice-president, Rev. T. B. Cook, secretary, and John L. Wheat, treasurer. A prudential committee, consisting of these officers, and of R. F. Levi, J. A. Middleton and Rev. J. F. Redford, was also appointed, to whom the business of getting ready for the next annual meeting was referred. We understand that it is the intention of the board to begin work at once soliciting and receiving subscriptions to the stock of the association. Said stock is to be sold at $5 per share.

In Union Theological Seminary, in New York city, are six sons of foreign missionaries, all born on foreign soil, and retaining in their vernacular the languages of the several countries from which they came and to which they intend to return. This knowledge of Arabic, Turkish, Hindostanee and Tamul will give an immense advantage to these young men in taking the work at the hands of their honored fathers. A hopeful sign for missions. There are eight others in the seminary who, in addition to their knowledge of English, speak German, Spanish, Welsh and Greek in their vernacular.—Observer.

WOFFORD COLLEGE.—This noble institution, says the Southern Methodist of January 15, offers to Christian parents unsurpassed advantages for securing to their sons a finished literary and scientific education, with a corresponding moral training. Dr. James H. Carlisle, who succeeds Dr. Shipp in the presidency of the institution, entered upon the duties of his position at the beginning of the present session with about the usual number of students, while everything connected with the college is moving on with the same harmony and efficiency that has characterized its course in the past.

A private letter from Bishop Paine, dated January 10, says the Western Methodist, informs us that he is improving in health and strength, and he hopes to be enabled to do some work in the good cause to which long since he devoted his life. So may it be, we pray. The Bishop writes us that his son-in-law, Maj. Hamilton, who was seriously but accidentally wounded by a shot from a pistol, is improving, and, to the surprise of his physicians, is likely to get up. This news will be very gratifying to many friends.

Active preparations are making in New York city for the meeting to be held by Moody and Sankey next month in Gilmore's Concert Garden, or the Hippodrome. The estimate of the cost of altering the Hippodrome for the revival meetings is $10,000. The records of the department of buildings give the owner of the Hippodrome as William H. Vanderbilt, and James Renwick as the architect who planned the alterations.

There will be a church sociable, under the direction of the Ladies' Aid Association, at the Felicity Street Methodist Episcopal Church South on Friday evening, the twenty-eighth instant. We have received complimentary tickets.

THE WORLD'S PROGRESS.—A dictionary of dates. Being a chronological and alphabetical record of all essential facts in the progress of society from the creation of the world to August, 1876. With a chart. Edited by George P. Putnam, A. M. Fifteenth edition. New York: G. P. Putnam & Sons, 1871.

The matter of the volume is embraced in the following chapters: 1. Supplement to the World's Progress (185 to 1807.) 2. Dictionary of Dates. 3. Literary Chronology. 4. Heathen Deities. 5. Tabular Views of Universal History in Cotemporary Columns. 6. A Copious Biographical Index. The World's Progress is a valuable work for reference, especially so to professional and literary men. It is well arranged for convenience, and great care and labor have been bestowed upon its compilation. We are indebted to the publishers for a copy.

THE PROBLEM OF HEALTH—HOW TO SOLVE IT.—By Reuben Green, M. D. Boston: Published by B. B. Russell.

A very practical and sensible book, well adapted to the wants and circumstances of the general reader. The author is specially emphatic in his condemnation of the use of poisons as medicine, and gives no quarter whatever to stimulants, such as alcoholic liquors, opium and tobacco. He treats of health in general, the science of medicine, sanitary science, stimulants, brain work, sunlight, exercise, dress, women, marriage, care of the sick, etc. After pretty thorough examination we pronounce it a good and useful work—one that can be safely and profitably read by all.

NEW ASTRONOMY.—By P. E. Trasbour, M. D. B. Bloomfield & Co., publishers, New Orleans, 1875.

Sixty-seven pages in paper binding, giving the author's views of astronomy, and the errors which, in his judgment, encumber the science. He insists upon the eternity of matter—that it is immutable, universal and infinite. We infer from our hasty examination that he is a materialist, and that he regards matter as the God of the universe. The style is faulty, the teachings and conclusions of the writer anything but convincing.

—The Atlantic Monthly for January, 1876, has been received. It has: Private Theatricals; A Painted Fan; Lincoln's Plans of Reconstruction—a Bit of Secret History; The Dead Connoisseur's Friends; Going South; Jacques Jasmin; Acole; One of the Thirty Pieces; Sunset on the Bear Camp; The Mafiusi of Sicily; Old Woman's Gossip; Sonnets: 1. At Stratford-on-Avon; 2. Three Flowers: The Revere Catastrophe; A Familiar Letter; Four New Books of Poetry; Recent Literature; Art; Education. H. O. Houghton & Co., publishers, Boston, New York: Hurd & Houghton. Price, $4 a year.

—The Ladies' Repository for February has: Social Life in Greece; Death and Life, Garrets, Camp Meetings, Fair Weathers and Foul in a "Far Country," The Two Traitors, Manzoni, A Village in Northern New York, Grandmother's Heroine, Hymnody, Jezebel, or Woman's Influence Perverted, and other articles. The editorial departments are, as usual, ably and carefully prepared.

—Golden Hours for February, besides many beautiful illustrations, has: Allen Dale's Wood Pile, Notes on Natural History, Skating for Boys, Abdallah, the Lion, Japanese Worship, What the Whole Family Said, Naaman's Little Maid, and other articles. A delightful and wholesome magazine for the young. Hitchcock & Walden, Cincinnati, Nelson & Phillips, New York, publishers. Price, $1.50 per annum.

—The Atlantic Monthly for February has: Confessions of St. Augustine, Under Moon and Stars, Manmatha, Phidias to Pericles, Jacques Jasmin's Francinette, A Literary Nightmare, The Unseen World, Boston, Old Woman's Gossip, The Railroad Death-Rate, The Currency Conflict, and other articles. H. O. Houghton & Co., Boston, publishers. New York: Hurd & Houghton.

—Appleton's Journal for January is a very interesting number. Among the articles we note: American Historic Houses, Centennial Sketches, Gatherings from an Artist's Portfolio, The Secret of Hospitality. The departments of art, literature and science are, as usual, full and instructive.

—Scribner's Monthly for February has: New York in the Revolution, Illustrated; The Hollis Bust of Milton, Illustrated; A Hundred Thousand Homes, Illustrated; Philip Nolan's Friends, Illustrated; A Piece of Secret History; The University of Michigan; Freuch Duels; Gabriel Conroy; Revolutionary Letters, and other articles.

—Dr. Thomas Nicholson, of this city, has laid on our table a copy of his pamphlet on Consumption—a demonstration of its curability by the inhalation of oxygenated air through medicated fluid. An appendix exhibits the wonderful curative properties of salicylic acid.

—The Lake Side Library is issued three times a week. Each number contains some one work of a standard author entire, and is sold at ten cents. We have received No. 30, containing Sermons Out of Church, by Miss Mulock. Donnelly, Loyd & Co., publishers, Chicago.

—The Galaxy for February has: Madcap Violet, Home Rulers in the English Parliament, Anna Seward and Maj André, Suicide, Parma and Bologna, The Tradition of Conquest, Social and Domestic Life Under the Ancient Regime, Army Reduction, and other articles.

—We have received D. M. Ferry & Co.'s Seed Annual for 1876. It is a very complete descriptive catalogue. Farmers and gardeners will find it of value for reference. See advertisement in another column.

—The Cultivator and Country Gentleman, published weekly by Luther Tucker & Son, Albany, N. Y., is one of the oldest and best agricultural papers in the country. Price, $2.50 a year.

—Appleton's Guide for Railways and Steam Navigation for January, 1876, has been received.

The recent move of Prof. Swing from the Central church to McVicker's theater, in Chicago, is attracting considerable attention. Fifty merchants have each subscribed $1,000 as a guarantee fund, which will support the new society for at least two years. Out of these fifty a committee of nine have been chosen to attend to the complete organization. There are nearly three thousand seats in the theater, the sale of which was recently made. The price of seats ranged from $5 to $20. The amount received and the guarantee fund is said to afford sufficient revenue. Mr. Swing receives a salary of $7,000.

MARRIED.

HOWARD—REGAN.—On the 11th of January, 1876, by Rev. H. P. Lewis, Rev. P. Howard, of the Mississippi conference, to Miss M. E. Regan, of Pike county, Miss.

VAUGHN—PREWETT.—By the same, on the twelfth of January, 1876, Mr. D. F. Vaughn to Miss Eva Prewett, all of Pike county, Miss.

MORRIS—GODBY.—January 13, 1876, in the Methodist church in Franklin, La., by Rev. J. F. Scurlock, Mr. Henderson B. Morris to Miss Fanny L. Godby.

NALEE—PUGH.—On the twelfth of January, 1876, at the Methodist church in Calvert, Tex., by Rev. A. M. Pugh, Mr. S. H. Nalee, of Dallas county, Tex., and Miss Lila F. Pugh, of Calvert, Tex.

KING—SCOTT.—Near Newbern, Ala., January 11, 1876, by Rev. C. H. Kelley, Mr. J. F. King and Miss Mary T. Scott.

TO OUR AGENTS.

When subscribers pay, let us know at once. We are sending bills to subscribers, and if their payments to agents are not promptly reported bills may reach them for amounts already paid, but not reported to this office.

A MOST DESIRABLE ROUTE TO NEW YORK.—Those who have had the pleasure of traveling from Buffalo or Niagara Falls to New York over the Erie road will bear testimony to the unsurpassed accommodations on this line. Aside from the pleasure of taking the Falls in their route many passengers choose it in view of personal comfort in travel. Those who may have business to transact with the general passenger agent, John N. Abbott, Esq., will find in him a most courteous and intelligent gentleman, and an officer well calculated to work up the business of his department in a corporation of such vast proportions. Indeed the courtesy and attention to the comfort of passengers on the part of officers, conductors and employés generally is one of the most desirable features in the management of the road.

ST. LOUIS, IRON MOUNTAIN AND SOUTHERN RAILWAY.—The traveling and shipping public is much indebted to the enterprise of the directors of the above named road for rapid transmission between New Orleans and St. Louis. The company has shown great enterprise from its first organization to the present. Those who wish to obtain information in reference to the different departments of business can do so by addressing W. R. Allen, general passenger and ticket agent, Seth Fink, Esq., general freight agent, St. Louis, Mo., or J. C. Zimmer, Esq., agent, Cairo, Ill.

A FIRST-CLASS RESTAURANT.—The Four Seasons Restaurant, at 111 Chartres street, while it is one of the cheapest in the city, is one of the best. John Bosio, Esq., the proprietor, is well acquainted with the business. He buys the best, and his cooks know how to prepare to suit the palates of his guests. We advise those who are not acquainted with this house, and with whom it may be convenient, to give him a trial.

INSURANCE.—The footings of the last statement of the New Orleans Insurance Company will be found in our advertising columns. The company, as will be seen, was established in 1805. It has continued to maintain its high standing through the vicissitudes of more than two generations, and there is none now more worthy of public confidence.

FAIRBANKS' SCALES.—The character of Fairbanks' scales for accuracy as a standard in weighing is so well and so fully established that we need only call attention to their advertisement, and of the agency under the control of our excellent neighbor, W. B. Bowman, Esq. No. 53 Camp street.

SPORTSMEN'S DEPOT.—Should any of our readers want to supply themselves with guns, or any kind of firearms, sporting materials, game bags, shot pouches, gunpowder, cartridges, fishing rods, nets, hooks, or any kind of fishing tackle we advise them to go to the Sportsmen's Depot, 55 St. Charles street, kept by our clever neighbor Richard Rhodes.

MESSRS. ORIEL & WRIGHT, cotton and sugar factors, and general commission merchants, No. 93 Decatur street, will attend to sales of wool, moss or hides, as well as cotton and sugar. They guarantee the best prices in the market. We take pleasure in directing attention to their advertisement in another column.

ORNAMENTAL AND CONVENIENT.—The paper lapboard offered for sale by C. O. Palmer & Co. is unique, convenient and useful. Light, durable and neat, the yard measure on one side is an important addition to its value. It can be used as a cutting-board, lunch table or writing desk. See advertisement elsewhere.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.—Planters visiting the city should call at the agricultural implement depot of H. J. West, Esq., on Magazine street, between Lafayette and Girod, where they will find a large amount of labor saving machinery, useful in the field, the garden, the workshop and the household.

MESSRS. BRASELMAN & ADAMS, No. 388 Magazine street, have one of the finest stocks of dry goods to be found in this market. They are anxious to close out their winter stock, and advertise that they will sell cheaper than at the auctions, so as to get rid of their goods before Mardi Gras.

COTTON AND CORN PLANTER.—Harbin's Combined Cotton and Corn Planter, with Thomas improvements, is an implement which, it seems to us, every planter needs. We call the special attention of planters to the advertisement to be found in our columns.

FLOUR.—The house of William H. Matthews & Bro., 71 Poydras street, advertise in another column three thousand barrels of choice flour and two thousand barrels of corn meal. Those purchasing for shipment or home supply will do well to give them a call.

BOOK-BINDER.—Adolphe J. Lehoy, Esq., at 92 Camp street, over James A. Gresham book store, is an experienced book binder, and will bind blank-books, music or periodicals at short notice, in good style and at economical terms.

FOR CHINA or crockery of any description our readers cannot do better than go to Navia & Offner's China Palace on Canal street.

SEE the notice of Burnett's Cocoaine for the hair, on this page.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

HOW SELDOM we see a splendid head of hair! From sickness, excessive labor or neglect thousands find their hair gradually wasting away. Burnett's Cocoaine will repair this waste. The Cocoaine is a perfect hair dressing, a promoter of the growth of the hair, a preparation free from irritating matter. It has great affinity for the human skin, is rapidly absorbed, and imparts luster and strength. ja27 tf.

NOT disagreeable, hardly more bitter than lager beer, and much more satisfactory and pleasant, Simmons' Liver Regulator can be taken at any time without interfering with business or pleasure. It is so gentle, safe and such a good digester that it is often used after a hearty meal to settle the food and relieve any apprehension that the meal may disagree with you. ja27 1t

MEDICAL.

I MUST OWN that your Simmons' Liver Regulator fully deserves the popularity it has attained. As a family medicine it has no equal. It cured my wife of a malady I had counted incurable—that wolfsbane of our American people, Dyspepsia. She desires that all nations and people might know the virtues of this God-given remedy. Hoping that the above will appear in your Almanac of 1876, and be of some use in extolling the virtues of your excellent medicine, is the wish of your humble servant,

A. E. P. ALBERT,
Professor in Nicholas Public School,
Parish of Terrebonne, La.

I have used Simmons' Liver Regulator for two years, and recommend it as a very superior medicine for Dyspepsia and Liver Disease.

GEORGE W. SMITH,
Kentucky Conference,
Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Your valuable medicine (Simmons' Regulator) has saved me doctors' bills often. I use it for everything that it is recommended for, and never know it to fail. I have used it in Colic and Grubs with my mules and horses, giving them about half a bottle at a time. I have not lost one that I gave it to. You can recommend it to every one that has stock as being the best medicine known for all complaints that horse flesh is heir to.

E. T. TAYLOR,
Agent for Grangers of Georgia.

[Illustration]

Simmons' Liver Regulator doubtless is one of the best medicines ever compounded from the great botanic garden of nature, and contains no life-destroying component hidden under some technical name, but is a purifier, rejuvenator and regulator not only of the Liver, but of the whole system.

FOR THE ADVOCATE.

Bee-Keeping.

1. If you wish to keep the worm or moth out of your bee-hives, have your hives sitting upon boards or planks the hive sitting upon the boards in two places, so that you can take out one piece and get the worms and eggs off of it, and put it back and take out the other piece, and clean off in the same way. This ought to be done, as often as every ten days, after the fifteenth of June until the first day of October. This will keep the moth almost entirely from your hives. I object to the plan of sitting the hives upon the heads of rails or small blocks, as that induces the worm fly to pass up into the comb to deposit its eggs, where you can never get the worm out until the hive is ruined.

2. Driving your bees from one hive to the other, after the common plan, will ruin your bees, for the reason that you lose a crop of young bees. Sometimes they do well, but only when there is a young swarm nearly ready to come out, which, when driven out with the old bees, will do well. When you wish to drive from one gum to the other, put your new gum in the place of the old gum, with the head loose, so that you can take it off. In taking the old hive to pieces, save all the best, well-filled pieces of comb, with young bees, and string them up in the new gum where you wish to drive your bees into, and then nail on the head. The bees will go in and do well, for all bees will take care of their young. This plan of stringing up the young bees will apply to the saving of bees from the woods or forest when you cut a bee-tree. This is almost a never-failing plan to save bees from trees in the forest.

3. Being afraid of the stings of bees, or of being stung, is the reason you cannot manage bees. Go to the store and buy a small meal-sifter, and put it into the end of a small flour sack, and fasten the sack well over the half of the sifter. Open the other end and slip it over your head, and tie it around the neck, so as to let the sifter come over the face. Put on your gloves, and go where you please among your bees.

4. You should never let your hives stand where the hot sun will come upon them from eight o'clock in the morning until four in the evening. Many persons, in hiving bees, let the gum stand in the hot sun, and think that the bees hived are doing well. But when they come to examine the gum they find that the bees are out and gone. Nothing but the hive standing in the hot sun was the cause of it. If these few hints are well received I may write again.

Respectfully,

OLIVER FLEMING.

BRUNDIDGE, ALA., January 5, 1876.

Preparation and Sowing of Wheat.

The experience of the past year for a large portion of Mississippi has completely exploded the theory that wheat is too uncertain a crop to grow in this State, and that it does not pay to raise it. The wheat harvest of the year was the largest ever grown in Mississippi, and wherever pains were taken in the preparation of the land, and the land was seeded soon enough—say by the twenty-fifth of October—the yield was large and most remunerative.

The land intended for wheat should be thoroughly and closely plowed and well pulverized, forming a fine and firm seed bed. Where the land is not naturally rich enough, scatter cotton seed at the rate of forty or fifty bushels to the acre, and harrow them in with the wheat. This plan is almost certain to bring a good crop.

The seed should be carefully selected, and thoroughly sifted and cleaned. If the wheat has been affected with smut it should be steeped in a solution of bluestone for ten or twelve hours before planting. Or another plan that we have used with great success against smut and rust is to make a strong brine of salt and water, strong enough to float an egg; soak the wheat for twenty-four hours in this brine, taking care to skim off all the defective grains and trash that rise to the top. To dry the wheat so that it can be handled, sprinkle it with quicklime. We have used this method for years, and have never known it to fail.

We would also recommend the sowing of seed grown in a different soil and climate, instead of that raised at home. We are satisfied that this method improves the quality and quantity of the yield of wheat, and we are strongly inclined to believe that the wheat will not rust as readily; such, at least, has been the experience of many skillful farmers with whom we have conversed on the subject. Up to this time the red May wheat has proven the most reliable variety to sow in our soil and climate. Other varieties that have been tried this year generally failed, or have given such poor results as to be rejected.

Every farmer who contemplates sowing wheat this fall should thoroughly prepare his land and sow it from the twentieth of October, and never later, if he expects his crop to escape the rust. Also sow the red rust-proof oats early in the fall if you expect to secure good crops.—Farmer's Vindicator.

MEASURING BULK CORN.—The rules for measuring corn, as given by your correspondents, produce different results, and consequently are erroneous. The dimensions of a bushel are 18½ inches in diameter and 8 inches in depth; therefore there are 2,150.4 cubic inches in a bushel.

To find the number of cubic inches of corn in bulk, multiply in inches the length, breadth and depth, which product will be in cubic inches. Divide by the number of cubic inches in a bushel (2,150.4,) and the quotient will be in bushels of shelled corn. Then you must decide what proportion of corn and cobs there are in a bushel; say they are equal in bulk, then divide by 2, and the quotient will be the correct amount in the ear.—G. C. H., in the Courier-Journal.

Bears are plenty in Oxford county, Me. A small boy recently was out hunting partridges, and when upon the point of firing at one he saw a huge bear making for him. The lad stood his ground with the fortitude of one of maturer years until the bear got within fifteen feet of him, with mouth wide open, and then let him have the contents of his gun, taking effect probably in his eyes. Brin dropped and rolled over once, and then came for the boy again, with vengeance; but, throwing down his gun, and not being far from the house, he succeeded in escaping from his dangerous enemy.

A great nature reveals itself less by its escapes than by its recoveries, as sickness shows the native vigor of the constitution.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 30, 1875.

MR. ED. L. HALL—SIR: I have examined the sample of Crystal Polishing Powder left with me by you, with the following result:

I find it to contain no acids or alkalies, on which account it will be entirely free from corrosive action when applied to paint or metallic surfaces. It contains no poisonous substances by which any accident or injury could happen while using it. The particles of the Powder are all angular, and not rounded, as in most kinds of sands and in many other polishing agents. The particles are extremely small and hard, which, with their angular shape, give it especial value as a rapid and fine polisher. Yours truly,

ALFRED W. PERRY,

MEDICAL.

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP.

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound. Its well-established virtue and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Breast and Bowels is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at any length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all Inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Diarrhœa or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most efficacious in preventing that most awful scourge whenever timely resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure, this truly extraordinary medicine has, over most compounds of the same nature, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children, and it requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, not only because the bottles contain more sirup than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this sirup will keep for years without fermenting, and it can be used in families whenever required by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Sirup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or in less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night may take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a good night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities at intervals of three to four hours. For sale by

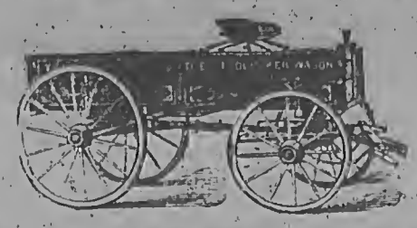
I HAVE RECENTLY ACCEPTED THE AGENCY OF THE CELEBRATED



STUDEBAKER WAGON.

FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds properly dated, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is finished by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of select iron, dressed by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLOPES HOULDER SPOKE is used; thereby they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally, hence the superiority of their work over all others.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The river is 5 feet 9 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending January 25:

Mississippi river and bayous	bales... 9,515
Red river	5,462
Ouachita river	448
Railroads	7,851
Lake	50
Mobile	438
Texas	2,190
Arkansas river	2,542
Total	29,418

On Saturday the market opened with a fair inquiry, but operations being restricted by light offerings of the kinds most in request, only a moderate business was done during the morning, after which the movement became more animated, and the entire sales of the day summed up 9,600 bales. Good staple and even-running lots of strict low middling and the higher grades were in special request, and being offered sparingly, commanded very full prices—in many cases ⅛@¼c above our outside quotations. Other descriptions were steady. On Monday, the movement being checked at the opening by light supplies of the better qualities, and favorable demand less freely, the sales during the morning reached 3,000 bales, after which the demand was rather more active, and further transactions were reported to the extent of 5,500 bales, making a total for the day of 8,500 bales. Good ordinary sold as low as 9¼c, and strict middling at 12c. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair inquiry, and although operations were restricted by light offerings of the kinds wanted, yet the sales summed up 10,650 bales, at steady prices for the medium and better qualities, but at irregular and easy rates for good ordinary and the lower grades.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 28,750 bales, against 28,850 for the corresponding time last week and 24,950 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 853,021 bales, against 686,556 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 404,951 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 417,385—2,893,144, against 2,475,759. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 51,273 bales to Great Britain, of 37,995 to France, and of 175,743 to other foreign ports. Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

☞ We do not retain dead advertisements.

AGENTS WANTED

To sell the New Patent Improved EYE-CUPS. Guaranteed to be the best-paying business offered to Agents by any house. An easy and pleasant employment.

The value of the celebrated new Patent Improved Eye-Cups for the restoration of sight breaks out and blazes in the evidences of over 6,000 genuine testimonials of cures, and recommended by more than 1,000 of our best physicians in their practice.

"The Patent Eye-Cups are a scientific and philosophical discovery, and as Alex. R. Wyeth, M. D., and William Beatley, M. D., write, they are certainly the greatest invention of the age.

Read the following certificates:

FERGUSON STATION, LOGAN CO., KY., Jan'y 6, 1876.

DR. J. BALL & CO., OCULISTS—Gentlemen: Your Patent Eye Cups are, in my judgment, the most splendid triumph which optical science has ever achieved, but, like all great and important truths, in this or in any other branch of science and philosophy, have much to contend with from the ignorance and prejudice of a too skeptical public; but truth is mighty and will prevail, and it is only a question of time as regards their general acceptance and indorsement by all. I have in my hands certificates of persons testifying in unequivocal terms to their merits. The most prominent physicians of my county recommend your Eye-Cups.

I am, respectfully, J. A. E. BOYER.

William Beatley, M. D., Salvisa, Ky., writes: "Thanks to you for the greatest of all inventions. My sight is fully restored by the use of your Patent Eye-Cups, after being almost entirely blind for twenty-six years."

Alex. R. Wyeth, M. D., Atchison, Pa., writes: "After total blindness of my left eye for four years, by paralysis of the optic nerve, to my astonishment your Patent Eye-Cups restored my eyesight permanently in three minutes."

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

GALVESTON, Jan. 26.—A News special from San Antonio, dated to-day, says: Advices received at different points on the Rio Grande, through couriers from Saltillo, state that a revolution has been started in the northern and central portions of Mexico, near the Rio Grande. Gen. Herrera has pronounced for the movement and surprised the authorities at Parras.

The revolutionists assaulted Rasoves, which is defended by Modeo, who is prepared to defend it until reinforcements can arrive.

The majority of the people in the northern districts are reported in favor of suppressing the rebellion, and are preparing for the emergency.

Gen. Porfirio Diaz is at Laredo.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 26.—The snow crushed the courthouse and other buildings in Shasta. The snow is blockading the railroads in Nevada.

MEMPHIS, Jan. 26.—The Avalanche's Jackson, Miss., special tonight says it is reported that the committee have evidence rendering the impeachment of Lieut. Gov. Davis certain.

There is no question about Superintendent of Education Cardoza's guilt. He will certainly be removed.

The committee investigating the case of Gov. Ames are reticent. Notwithstanding the voluminous testimony, the impression prevails that the impeachment will not be pressed, as conviction is regarded as impossible.

LOUISVILLE, Jan. 26.—The residences and stores along the levee are rapidly filling with water. The rain is general and continues.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31.—Owing to the bellying tactics pursued by Morton in pushing Pinchback against the protest of a considerable minority of Republicans, the Democrats in the House are coming to the conclusion that the Lodging agreement will be violated, and must be set aside, if Pinchback is admitted. Mr. Wheeler will be called to consult on the subject with the Democrats.

The Democrats of the House have agreed to notify the Radical senators that if Pinchback is seated they will regard the Louisiana compromise as violated in spirit. Speaker Kerr has been selected to convey the message.

Hamilton, of Texas, declines to serve on the Radical Congressional campaign committee. This job was neatly put up, by the way. Having secured the adoption of Blaine's policy of reviving sectional strife, the party then put on the committee all the Liberal Republicans in Congress for the purpose of forcing them to swallow and indorse that policy.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—The Times has a Constantinople dispatch which gives the details of the great suffering among the Armenian Christians from the cruelty of their Turkish rulers and the unrestrained rapine of the Kurds. Many Christians are pressing conversion to Islamism in the hope of escaping oppression.

A dispatch from Vienna to the Daily News mentions a rumor that the Sultan, after receiving the ambassadors of powers, intends to announce that the reforms proposed by Austria are impracticable.

MADRID, Jan. 25.—The elections are ended. The total number of deputies elected is 306. Of these 311 are supporters of Sagosta, 10 Clericals, 1 Cantonalist, and 3 Ministerialists. Senor Castelar is the only Democratic Republican elected.

HENDAYE, Jan. 25.—A dispatch from Bontera announces that the Carlists are making a general movement. There is heavy firing around San Sebastian. Eight battalions are advancing on the neighboring Carlist positions.

Later advices from Bontera report that the fighting continues. The Alfonsists are rapidly gaining ground in the neighborhood of La Sarte and Durgun. No idea can be formed yet of the losses on either side.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—The Berlin correspondent of the Times telegraphs that the threatened collision between the Porte and Montenegro has changed the aspect of the Eastern question. He quotes an important statement in the Montenegro official gazette, that Turkey is determined to make war on Montenegro, and says that the article throughout is a justification of the insurrection and denunciation of Turkish cruelty. It declares that Montenegro has so far conformed to the requirement of international law. If Turkey acts differently Montenegro will be freed from all restraint, and forced to adopt any measures calculated to protect herself and secure the future of the Serbian race. The article concludes: "No regard for any one or anything will fetter our action."

A dispatch to the News from Rome reports that Garibaldi presided at the meeting of the survivors of the country's battles. His suggestion for the formation of an association of these survivors, with branches throughout Italy, was unanimously adopted. Garibaldi appeared in excellent health, and was enthusiastically greeted by many Englishmen and Americans who were present.

A letter from a naval officer on the Alabama station says the general opinion of the European residents is that the Celestials are bent on fighting, sooner or later. The admiral has but a man-of-war to each treaty port to protect British interests in case of emergency.

MADRID, Jan. 27.—The following was received here: Alfonsist Gen. Quesada has occupied Villa Real, on the frontier of the provinces of Alava and Guipuzcoa, an important Carlist position, defended by five battallons of troops with four Whitworth guns and some cavalry.

The Royalists captured the artillerymen, two of their guns and all of their material.

The Carlists also lost heavily in killed and wounded.

Alfonsist Gen. Maldonado simultaneously occupied the heights of Artuban, to the east of Villa Real, meeting with only slight resistance.

Gen. Morlones, after taking Montgararte Cordilleras, occupied Zaros, from which he threatens the Carlist rear.

The Carlists have suspended the bombardment of San Sebastian, and commenced withdrawing their siege artillery.

It now seems there has been but one Republican (Castelar) returned to the new Cortes, and but one Radical (Angiada.)

The Marquis of Sandoval, extreme monarchist, will lead a group of six or seven deputies. The constitutionallists or Sagastists will number thirty-six.

But very few Moderados, or partisans of religious unity, have been returned. The elections to the Senate will probably be favorable to the government.

From the Work.

VERMILIONVILLE, LA.—Mr. Editor: Shortly after sunup on Wednesday morning, January 12, we left the steamer Mattie and her courteous officers, and were soon at the parsonage in Vermilionville. Entering, imagine our pleasant surprise when we found the two first rooms comfortably furnished. Going farther back, we found the kitchen well supplied with the needful. Turning into the dining-room, we found the safe supplied with plenty of nice edibles, preserves, etc. Soon a basket of cooked provisions came in, and another and another, first of one thing and then another. A wagon put off our little freight; another wagon brought us a barrel of flour, sent by a steward. All through the day there was something coming in for the preacher and family. We found in the wood-room plenty of wood prepared to hand, and of course a fire was soon cheerfully blazing, as it was a cool morning.

But, sir, the kind ladies, who were the instruments in furnishing all these comforts, were, notwithstanding, disappointed, because they had arranged among themselves to be present at the parsonage, have the fire burning, the rooms comfortable, the table set, and a nice, warm dinner served thereon; and thus they wished to receive and make their pastor welcome; but the boat came earlier than was expected. We take the will for the deed.

My work embraces two appointments—this place and Plaquemine Brulee. I visited the latter place and preached on the twenty-third instant. There they agreed to furnish me a horse to ride, as I lost one a few weeks ago. So we are at work, and pray that a great manifestation of the outpouring of the blessed Spirit on this people be made this year. A word for the kind Capt. Pharr, who so generously transported us around. I take this opportunity of expressing my gratitude to him, and bespeak a liberal patronage on all his steamers, both on the Bayous Teche and Vermilion. Any one wishing transportation on either of these bayous will find his boats—viz.: the Rene Macready and Mary Lewis on the Teche, and the Mattie on the Vermilion—nice and comfortable boats, and the officers courteous. We tender them our thanks for kindnesses. Yours fraternally,

R. A. DAVIS.

A very powerful religious revival is in progress at Russellville, Ky. A series of meetings, began in December and held alternately in the Methodist church, Rev. H. C. Settle, pastor, and the Cumberland Presbyterian church, Rev. B. M. Taylor, pastor, has so far resulted gloriously; and the good work goes on. The Russellville Herald, January 20, says: "The elder members of the churches say that such a powerful and glorious religious revival has not been witnessed in Russellville during the past thirty or forty years. Up to present writing eighty-seven persons, embracing many prominent and influential citizens, have made a profession of religion."—Western Methodist.

William B. Astor, out of his immense fortune, left the following rather diminutive donations to benevolent institutions in New York city: The American Bible Society, $10,000; the Society for Relief of Respectable Aged Indigent Females, $5,000; the Institute for the Blind, $5,000; the New York Lying-In Asylum, $5,000; the Ladies' Repository, $5,000; the Exempt Firemen's Benevolent Fund of the Volunteer Department, $5,000.

New Orleans Pacific Railroad.

A mass meeting was held at St. Patrick's Hall, in New Orleans, on Thursday night, January 27, for the purpose of securing aid to this important enterprise. Two thousand citizens were present, and much enthusiasm was manifested. Several able addresses were made. We give below an extract from the speech of Gen. Cyrus Bussey, president of the Chamber of Commerce of this city:

Now, gentlemen, we have organized in the city of New Orleans a company composed of your own citizens, gentlemen in whom you have implicit confidence, who have come forward with an enterprise which will bring back to Louisiana and the city of New Orleans the trade which has been taken from your doors, and which will brighten your countenances, bring back your commerce as in the days of old.

Not one dollar of the money shall be spent except for the legitimate purposes of building this railroad. To-day there are six hundred men grading the road, and about twenty-five miles have been graded, and toward the beginning of the present spring months the road will be graded, ready to receive the first purchase of iron. You have only to come forward and support the enterprise, according to your ability and it will be an accomplished fact. There must be no words backward, but we must spend every dollar of our resources that we are able in the construction of this great enterprise.

I know, gentlemen, that you have been dependent heretofore upon public appropriations, and upon railroad schemes that have been wholly in the hands of the people living away from New Orleans. Every one who engaged in a railroad desired to make a grand speculation and ultimately sell it out. But this is an enterprise which you are undertaking for the people that are to be benefitted by your property enhancing in value, and to afford the people living all along the road a double price for their land and products.

It will place them in proper competition with the rest of the country, and they will have all the advantages that we now seek by the construction of this railroad. When this railroad is completed to some point in Texas we will then connect with the Texas Pacific railroad, running through a vast and rich country.

You find here how Galveston has been supplied with the railroad interests, and we would equip with that entire system of railroad which has been served doses in the South in homeopathic doses, while the North and East have been receiving them in large allopathic doses. We may then naturally expect in a short time to have direct communication with the Pacific coast, and New Orleans will be the city to receive the immense transfers and traffic that will come from the shores of the Pacific.

Applause.

Gentlemen, there would be thousands of people coming here from every part of the world, by way of the Pacific railroad, who would linger in New Orleans, spend their money here in the shape of patronizing hotels, boarding-houses, hackmen, shop-keepers, etc.

Every conceivable branch of trade would be benefited by the transient travel that would pass through the city. But how is it to-day? Every traveler from the Pacific coast goes by way of Chicago.

Had Chicago, when she was burnt out last, lost her railroad connections, the whole town of Chicago would not contain forty thousand people. Nothing but railroads have made these towns or cities prosperous.

The city of Cincinnati is to-day, and has been, for the last three or four years, spending $80,000 to make railway communication between Cincinnati and Chicago. Now every dollar of that is to enrich the State of Kentucky, and not one dollar to the city of Cincinnati.

But in this enterprise you are asked not to enrich Mississippi or Alabama, but you are asked to enrich your own State, and thereby enrich yourselves; lower taxation, bring in immigration, cause the building of towns, bring other facilities that would make your State great and prosperous. Not only that, but redeem Louisiana, and, redeem this city, and place it in a position of prosperity that she has never achieved before. I have never felt despondent about this town. I have never felt otherwise, because we are lying here at the mouth of the most magnificent territory on the face of the earth. (Applause.)

We have only to stretch out our arms and we can reach Mexico, Central America, South America and Cuba—countries containing forty millions of people. When we come to the mouth of the Mississippi, upon which I can say to you the deepening of South Pass is a fixed fact, then we will have all the necessary facilities; we will attract from the State of Texas and all the other States the facilities of transfer of the products required by the great country that lies all around our shores.

If we do our duty and sustain the gentlemen who are willing to give their time, their money, their enterprise to the construction of the railway, we will have a prosperity unknown in any other city in the country. (Applause.) There are other gentlemen who have no doubt the ability to entertain you with facts and figures connected with the construction and the importance of this railway, and for that reason I shall not prolong my remarks to the length I would otherwise do.

But I desire, before closing, to urge upon you to make this a matter of as much importance as if the honor of this State was politically involved, or as if an invading army was about to march upon you. I know that if such was the case every citizen would arm himself to defend her honor and integrity in any shape, whether he was asked money or his life, as it has risen in the past, and as you did on memorable occasions in the past. (Applause.)

I don't believe, then, gentlemen, that you are going to permit one of the most important enterprises that has ever been presented to you to fail for want of personal energy. No man ought to be tolerated who will say that this enterprise will fail. The day of croaking is passed; victory hangs on our banners, and if we are determined we can go forward and relieve it.

Texas Conference.

The Texas Conference held its session at Brenham, December 8–13. Bishop Pierce, who presided, has sent us the minutes, minus the memoirs and statistics, which the secretary, H. V. Philpott, will forward. Three were admitted on trial, four into full connection; G. D. Parker readmitted, two received by transfer, two local preachers elected and ordained deacons; and J. W. Whipple elected elder; three traveling elected and ordained elders. M. G. Jenkins located; seven superannuated, two died. Collected for claimants, $707 87; for missions, $2,724 50. Next session at Huntsville, Texas.

Periodicals.

The Historical Church Register contains a complete register for Annual Conferences, pastor's record, record of baptisms, marriages, deaths and church members, and also ruled pages for keeping minutes of Church Conferences. It is altogether a very well arranged register, and the best we have seen. For our own use we should not care to have the minutes of the Church Conference in the same cover with the register, but many will doubtless be glad to have it so. The book is of good paper, well ruled and bound, 200 pages, letter size. Published by Logan D. Dameron, manager of the Southwestern Book and Publishing Company, St. Louis.

The Sanitarian for February has a very tempting table of contents. It is a valuable publication for lay as well as professional readers. M. DeVitt, Campbell & Co., publishers, New York. Price, $3 a year.

The St. Charles Avenue Church in New Orleans.

NEW ORLEANS, January 14, 1876.

MR. EDITOR: Our new brick church on St. Charles avenue was opened on Sunday before last. The opening services were a sermon in the morning and at night by the pastor, the Rev. Dr. W. E. Munsey, and a sacramental meeting in the afternoon, the several preachers of our city churches officiating. The collection added up some $2,400 from the morning and evening services; but a small part of the sum came from our own people.

This house is larger than Felicity Street, and not so large as Carondelet Street church. The relative capacity of the three houses is represented by the numbers 50, 28 and 52. Its audience-room, exclusive of vestibule, is 80x80; to this is to be added, at the front end, an ample gallery. The outside dimensions are 96x112. In the center of the front is a tower, the spire of which rises to 142 feet. A bell weighing 1,000 pounds, the gift of Mr. Mullen, rings out its glad summons from the belfry to all who need attend for worship. Three doors, one on each side, and one in the front of the tower, open into a tesselated room that leads to the vestibule. This constitutes a most imposing and beautiful entrance to the church. Some of the best houses, in other respects, fail at this point; the door lacks the breadth of those gospel gates that are supposed to stand open night and day. The door of the temple of Jerusalem was 120 feet high. So that a door, should be no mean feature in church architecture. The general style of the house is modern Gothic.

The ceiling is roof-shaped and made of wood, panneled in squares of one foot; the raised part painted white, the ground blue. Six ventilators are on each side of the ceiling, one opposite each window. The seats of the house are wide, roomy and well cushioned, not too high, and with the proper slant of the back; so that people who wish to sleep in church can do so comfortably; and those who wish to listen may do so without physical suffering. As the house is free-seated for the Lord's aristocracy—that is, the poor—it was thought best to make it as inviting to the laboring man as the most exclusive structures are to those who are able to pay well for Sunday as well as week-day luxuries. The cypress wood which was used in the inside work is merely varnished, and makes a very rich-looking pew and pulpit.

The front bank of seats is at right angles with the aisles, but the two side banks are at an angle which varies with the distance from the pulpit. By this arrangement the "amen corner" has been gradually extended down the whole side of the house, and has not, as a sharp-sighted Presbyterian brother rather quickly remarked, "entirely disappeared."

The aisles and altars are neatly carpeted. The altar rail and room within and about are ample enough for good service at protracted meetings and revival occasions, and yet the preacher is not removed far from the audience. The house is softly lighted from a starlight radiator in the ceiling and side brackets along the walls. This gets rid of the swinging chandelier between the pulpit and the gallery.

The whole cost of the building was some $75,000; probably the cheapest public structure ever built in the city. The lot cost $8,000; the seating, etc., $2,000 more. The contractor, Mr. James Cox, has skinned nothing. The architect, Mr. Hellger, has designed several churches in the city, and the Jewish temple, but this house is generally admitted to be the most imposing and harmonious expression he has yet given of his genius. The transition from the side wall to the roof of a house is always difficult to effect gracefully. By running up a Gothic triangular point above the eaves, directly over each window, this has been admirably accomplished. Then the transition from the square part of a tower to the octagonal spire is another awkward place at which most buildings fail. But he has made this passage so easily and satisfactorily that the eye runs along from base to finial with increasing pleasure. The house, the tower and the spire impress the eye not as so many parts, but as one church.

The most important thing yet remains to be told; that is the fact that in a time when Louisiana is overwhelmed with taxes and bad government, and when our churches have been reduced to the extremest point of poverty by the failure of some and the recent death of many noble members, the providence of God and his gracious Spirit have raised up for us one whose soul and mind are equal to so great a work, and whose hand has not withdrawn—no, not for an instant from the undertaking, which he began, continued, watched and consummated. Mr. Rayne has not faltered; although mysteriously enough his health became increasingly feeble, and his eyesight utterly failed, so that he has never seen more than the beginning of this house of God. Years have been spent by him in close application to business, and never more successfully than during the past ten years; but his heart, I am glad to believe, has never lost sight of the vows of his youth and manhood to give all his powers to the service of him who has so graciously redeemed and kept him.

This is a forward movement for the Methodist Episcopal Church South in this city, for which some of us have long waited and prayed; and is the only one in church extension for the past 18 or 20 years. How promptly should our people come up to the help of so true and liberal a friend! Only some $17,000 have been as yet subscribed toward the entire $33,000 which the enterprise cost. But by the favor of the good Lord we hope to see this all paid before the year ends, and so properly conclude an enterprise which will secure to the worship of God the most beautiful church in Southern Methodism, planted upon the best site in the city of New Orleans.

Yours truly, J. C. KEENER.

Recollections of the Past.

MR. EDITOR: In looking over the minutes of the last session of the Alabama Conference, and noting the place, my mind, quick as thought, fastened upon some of the incidents of my youth. In the year 1831 I was appointed to Cedar Creek circuit as the junior preacher, with Daniel Monehan in charge. Greenville was then embraced in this circuit. This was directly upon the heels of the secession of the Protestant Methodists, and there were quite a number of them in this region of country. My supposition then was that Father Monehan, as he was then called, was appointed to this work because of his adaptation to the then existing state of things. In some respects he was a remarkable man, about medium height, a little stoop-shouldered, dark skin, and black hair, a little tinged with gray, with a large dark-gray eye. The moment it lighted upon you it impressed you with some of the characteristics of the man. In his younger days he had been quite a pugilist, and his success in these contests gave him considerable reputation among his comrades. For quickness of apprehension, a readiness of utterance, a keenness of wit and rapidity of speech I have never seen his equal. He was a stranger in these parts, his home being in Marengo county. Crowds flocked to his appointments. He was sometimes pretty severe upon the Hard-shell Baptist brethren. In quoting Scripture he would sometimes proceed on this wise: "Add to your faith virtue and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge a bottle of whisky. Now, before going to temperance, my brethren." Again: "What do you see, Peter—a pond of water? No; I perceive that God is no respecter of persons," etc. His congregations alternately dangled and swept. He usually closed with a warm exhortation, telling them that his mother was a Baptist, and died happy and went to heaven, and upon his return all would be back again.

Cedar Creek circuit at that time contained about twenty-six appointments, stretching from Black's Bend, on the Alabama river, to some distance east of Greenville. We arranged the work in the form of a figure eight, so that every two weeks we could meet and spend a night together. This to me was very pleasant. As it was my first year, I needed all the instruction, counsel and encouragement I could get.

Greenville, according to my present recollection, had the appearance of an old, dilapidated village, scattered over a considerable space; contained very little wealth, and but few inhabitants. The church building was a pretty good-sized frame structure, not ceiled, and a good deal out of repair. The seats were torn to pieces. The pulpit was a large box, the floor of which was some four feet from the floor of the building, and the book-board nearly up to my armpits, as I was rather low of stature. One Sabbath, as I was attempting to preach, I had a very narrow escape. The floor of the pulpit was composed of about three planks, about a foot wide; they were loose, and as I stepped on the front plank the middle one dropped in, and operations were suspended until some good brother replaced it. If it had fallen when on it I should have been safe enough for awhile, for no vestige could have been seen of me.

From my recollections of Greenville and its surroundings, forty-four years since, I cannot see the basis of its present prosperity and proportions. Time and facilities, however, work wonderful changes in countries and localities. I presume there are but two now living who were in the Alabama Conference beside myself in 1830: T. S. Abernathy and A. S. Dickinson. Z. Dowling came in afterward.

Rev. Thomas Clinton.

The true itinerant's life is one of hardships, self-denial and cross-bearing, of physical and mental toil, of anxiety and privation, often of mortification and reproach; and yet no man hath forsaken all to follow him without receiving ample reward, even in this life. While the subject of this sketch bore his full share of the trials and sufferings, he partook largely of the joys and blessings to be found only in the path of duty. The confidence and love of his brethren, the companionship and sympathy of the devoted and helpful wife of his youth, his large family of children, all worthy to bear his name, cheered and comforted his declining years. His home was a lovely spot, favored by nature and grace. Mrs. Anne Hardee once said: "I would love to die at Uncle Clinton's. It seems nearer heaven than anywhere else on earth."

Yet it pleased his Master to try him, in his extreme old age, even as he tried his faithful Abraham. The messenger came once and again and called for his precious jewels. Martha, Allie, George, Benjamin, each in turn was summoned. They all died in peace, under the roof-tree of home, and the old patriarch answered: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord." A more bitter cup was still before him. The apple of his eye, the solace and support of his declining years—his darling Jimmy—is murdered in the woods, and left weltering in his gore, to die a lingering death, with no eye to pity. Yet in all this he sinned not, nor charged God foolishly. As he clasped the dead body of his murdered boy in his arms he exclaimed: "My son! my son! Would to God I could have died for thee!" You cannot return to me, but, thanks be to God, I can go to you." The night after the burial of this son, at family prayer, all present were heartbroken, and unable to divine how he could express his faith or where find consolation. But out of the depths profound his grand nature shone with all its purity and strength. He prayed in substance: "Our Father! the past few years thy aged servants have been called upon to pass through many sore afflictions. One after another of our children, around whom our earthly affections tenderly clustered, have been taken from us. But, oh, our Father, this last affliction has fallen upon us, in our extreme old age, with a deeper sorrow. The departure of our other children took place under our own roof—they were surrounded by those who loved them, and soothed and comforted them; but this our noble boy fell a victim to an unknown hand, in the dreary, wintry woods, with no loving mother's voice to soothe his dying moments, and no father's prayer to tell of coming hope. But as the refiner of gold subjects the metal to the fiercest test of fire to eliminate the dross, so thou hast subjected thy aged servants, in their last years, to these fearful trials to purify our souls and make them reflect more brightly thine image; and though thou slay me, yet will I trust in thee."

During this prayer his feeble voice rose up full and round, as in his early days. Not the fiercest fires of Smithfield, or the most exquisite tortures devised in the darkest recesses of the Inquisition, were a more crucial test of faith and trust. Nor did Latimer at the stake, or Anne Askew stretched upon the rack, abide the test more faithfully.

attested the truth and power of our holy religion more forcibly than tomes of theological disquisition.

The death of their son James determined the aged couple to break up their loved home and to spend the remnant of their days with their children. After spending several months with their daughter, Mrs. Ballard, at Beauregard, they went to Osyka, to the house of another daughter, Mrs. Louisa Thompson. The closing scenes of this grand Christian life cannot so well be told as in the words of that gifted lady:

"The last of July my father was more feeble than I had seen him for years. In a short time, however, his strength returned to such an extent as to enable him to be up and about the Master's work—his loved employ. His cheerful piety and kind words made him a welcome guest in any circle, whether of Jews, Catholics or our own people. Each day we could see he was growing more sanctified, living in the world, yet wearing it as a loose mantle, ready to be cast aside at the Master's bidding. He seemed to be a ripe shock only waiting to be garnered.

"The first Sabbath in August he went to the Episcopal church, and partook for the last time on earth of the Lord's Supper. It was indeed a feast to his soul. After this he told my mother that he knew life's last battle would soon be fought, and he wished to go near the old homestead, there to die and be buried with his children. They reached Uncle Pipkin's on the twelfth of August, and he was greatly cheered at the meeting with that beloved family; but very soon his age and infirmities seemed to bear heavily upon him, and a general giving away of the whole system took place. His sufferings were intense, yet no murmur escaped his lips. Nothing was left for him to do but suffer the will of the Lord, and wait the summons to come up higher. Oh, what a privilege to witness such peace and Christian triumph—forgetting self, still trying to comfort weeping friends and an almost heartbroken companion! A short time before the end came he said to my weeping mother: 'Don't grieve so. All is well. What more can you ask? Our separation won't be long. I will watch your coming and open the gate.' Sweet peace! All is light and glory. I soon shall be with my Savior and dear children, and Eliza Uncle Pipkin's first wife. They have already come; they wait around my bed; the room is filled with my angel friends.'

"The triumph was so complete that those present seemed to forget that the angel of death was hovering over us—everything was so calm; the place so hallowed by the presence of the heavenly host."

Thus, on the twenty-eighth of October, 1875, in the eighty-third year of his age and the fifty-sixth of his ministry, Rev. Thomas Clinton—shall we say died, ceased to exist, ended his career?—nay, verily—put off this mortal, that he might put on immortality; deserted this earthly house of his tabernacle to enter the building of God, the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens; left toil and pain to enter into rest and joy forever. The arguments of Christian philosophers convince our reason, and command our mental assent to the truths of religion; but "in the chamber where the good man meets his fate" we feel, we realize, we know the verity and power of the endless life. In the close, as in the beginning of Thomas Clinton's Christian career, we recognize his strong, realizing spiritual sense, his apprehension of heavenly and divine things with the same distinctness and actuality as of physical phenomena. As in his conversion the perception of the divine presence and power was so vivid and clear as to be almost palpable to his external sense, so in his dying hour he realized the glories of the heavenly world before the vail of the fleshly temple was rent.

We have occupied, it may be thought, a large space with this imperfect sketch—not too large if we have in any manner been able to "hold the mirror up" to a simple, spotless, useful Christian life and triumphant Christian death.

Women Preachers Once More.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE of January 14, 1876, Lorretta Crary Sadler makes her second appearance in advocacy of women preachers. But in this paper she first admits a doubt as to whether women preached at all. She says: "There are instructive lessons to be drawn from many other women of the Bible, who, if they did not preach, did something akin to preaching." Further on in her communication she fully gives up the cause she advocates. Hear her: "The women lawyers have 'infallible standard authority' for their calling, if the women preachers have not." This statement, in connection with what she said in her former communication, shows that she writes against her convictions of truth. In the former she says: "There is no call for women to lay aside the distaff or the sewing machine, or to leave the precious contents of the cradle and the binding duties of the household to 'an hireling,' and march into the pulpit." If there is no "authority" in "the infallible standard" for women preachers, and "no call for women" to preach, pray tell why it is that some of them have the boldness and presumption to enter such a calling?

The admissions and statements of Lorretta Crary Sadler sound the knell of all her fond hopes in the interest of women preachers. However it may not be amiss to review some of her Scripture facts for the sake of others, if not for herself. She shows that the only semblance of an argument that can be drawn from the Bible is found in the fact that there were women, in Bible times, called by the title of prophetess. And although she admits that "the word prophetess does not convey the idea of modern preaching," yet she clings to that very meaning in the case of "Anna, the prophetess," in order to make out a case of a preacher of her "band." Sister Sadler says she was "simple enough to think the word meant a person inspired by God to announce or foretell future events;" and then quotes the learned Dr. Clarke, whose definition upon the case in hand is in direct opposition to what she thought "the word meant." And she herself says, in her first paper, that "the word prophetess here in Hebrew means also a poetess."

The word "prophet" has many meanings as employed in the word of God; and its signification must always be determined by its connection and use. Its primary meaning is found in the case of Abraham, where it means to pray. Its secondary meaning is found in the case of Aaron, who was the "prophet" of Moses; which means to communicate that which was communicated by Moses. Its third meaning is found in the cases of all the true prophets whose writings and predictions are found in the Bible. These true prophets were "holy men of God." Its fourth meaning is found in the cases of persons, some of whom were holy and some unholy, whose utterances are found in "scraps" here and there in the Bible, as in the cases of Balaam, Caiaphas and others. Its fifth meaning is found in the "poetic" utterances of some good and some bad persons, both of men and women, as in the cases of Miriam, Deborah and others, and the persons referred to by St. Paul in Acts xvii, 28, and Titus i, 12. Its sixth meaning is found in those persons who "prophesy lies" in the name of God, referred to in Jeremiah xiv, 14, and Matthew vii, 22. Its seventh meaning is found in First Corinthians xiv, 1-5, etc.

In the application of these definitions the "record" settles some of them beyond doubt. In the instance of Miriam, she "answered them," the other women; "Sing ye to the Lord." Deborah said: "Awake, awake, Deborah; awake, awake, utter a song." Concerning "Huldah, the prophetess," the Book of Chronicles is not silent, but makes special mention of Jeremiah. It is very probable that Huldah was one of the chief singers; for it is written: "And Jeremiah lamented for Josiah; and all the singing men and the singing women spoke of Josiah in their lamentations." This quotation has a strange appearance when brought face to face with the statement of Sister Sadler. She says: "There was not a man there that had the brains to understand what it was to 'inquire of the Lord.'" Where was the faithful Jeremiah all this time? Why did they forsake the true old prophet and go to Huldah? Why? Was it because they had turned the ear from the truth? Besides, is it by "brains" mainly that we understand the Lord? If so, then the Tyndalls ought to understand the Lord.

But lastly, "Anna, a prophetess," is held to with an unflying grasp, because she is the last hope of a doubtful cause. Anna enters the temple, as faithful old Simeon, holding the child Jesus in his arms, was shouting and praising, and she joins in the triumphant shout, and "gave thanks likewise unto the Lord, and spoke of him to all them," that were present, "that looked for redemption in Jerusalem or in Israel." And because the good woman, in her eighty-fourth year, got shouting happy, behold Sister Sadler makes her a "traveling preacher," and sends the old lady, on foot, all over the kingdom of Israel. It seems that the women preachers' cause will not make much headway if it must be carried into completion by persons as old and feeble as Anna was. It, however, must be remembered that her shout of praise was, in part, the result of burning words of love and truth uttered by a man who did not claim to be a prophet.

There are several things essential as qualifications for the work of preaching the gospel: 1. Personal faith in Christ and regeneration by the Holy Spirit. 2. The right understanding of matters that pertain to human salvation. 3. The call of the divine Spirit to this high and holy vocation. 4. The call of the church to this blessed work. 5. Fruitfulness in this sacred calling. Whenever we find these five characteristics in any one person we take it as incontestable evidence that he is a preacher of the gospel of the Son of God. In addition to these five, one more is always important, and that is: this is to be his life-time work. Now can Sister Sadler, give an instance, meeting these points, out of all the holy women mentioned in the Bible? Can she mention a prophetess in all the Old Testament history who will meet the points? Can she mention one out of the New Testament?

Can Sister Sadler give an instance of a woman preacher, in the Bible, called of God to and sent forth in the work of saving souls? I know she says: "Deborah was 'sent' with Barak," etc. The record says, however: "Deborah arose and went with Barak to Kadesh;" and that not to save, but to destroy souls. She went with him to fight."

Don't refer us so much to bloodthirsty and bloodshedding preachers; but give us holy men—truth-loving, truth-telling, soul-saving, God-honoring men, and we are content.

BABY CLARE.

BY O. J. W.

[illegible]

On my breast with lily-like grace,
Sleeps my Baby Clare.
And like a halo round her face
Waves her sunny hair.
On my arm her bright head lies,
With its golden crown,
And like the dusk of evening skies
Her lashes are folded down.

Fairy feet and hands of a queen
Has my baby girl.
I never so pure a gem was seen
As this my little pearl.
On my bosom, fair and mild,
Sleeps my Baby Clare.
O God, protect and keep my child,
Pure as lambs are.

OBITUARIES.

REV. WILLIAM JAMES.

Although so long a time has elapsed since the death of this man of God, I am constrained to write some memorial regarding him, because of his usefulness, and because no notice of him has ever appeared in print—not even so much as to say that he died.

The Rev. William James was born in South Carolina about the year 1790, and lived there to within his own recollection. While he was yet a boy his father removed to the State of Mississippi, and settled on Percy's creek, Wilkinson county, while the hills that bound its valley were covered with their primeval forests. Those hills have since been worn to poverty and barrenness by the hand of cultivation. It was here he grew up to be a man, and died in the same county, perhaps without an enemy, loved by all who loved good men, and where a second generation grew up to call him blessed. His father was a Presbyterian much after the old Puritan style, and trained William up after the straitest sect of that order. His education was colored with the strongest prejudices against Methodism. Religion, he was taught to believe, consisted of faith without any knowledge of love or joy or peace, together with a round of religious duties most rigidly observed. He was still of this faith when he first married; and, true to his principles, he commenced housekeeping with family prayer. When about twenty-five years of age he attended, for the first time, a camp meeting held in the bounds of what is still Wilkinson circuit. The loud singing, praying and demonstrative hallelujahs so shocked his sense of propriety that the man left the place in utter disgust. During the following year he was brought into more personal contact with Methodist preachers and people, their religious services and their manner of life. He was convinced that they were in earnest about their souls' salvation. His ardent nature entered at once into a lively sympathy with this peculiar people, and before the time for holding another camp meeting he was one of them. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church when about twenty-six years of age, I think under the ministry of the Rev. B. Pipkin, then and now of the Mississippi Conference.

Soon after being received into the church he was appointed class leader, and conducted the first class meeting he ever attended. It was held in the only room of a dwelling-house. On arriving at the place he found the front yard full of people, and the room packed with a waiting audience. He commenced the exercises, not knowing how to conduct them, nor how he would conclude them. He commenced by reading the Holy Scriptures. He had read but a few verses when a power from God fell upon the congregation; the people, in doors and out, were stirred into great commotion. Long after commencing services he found himself out in the yard promiscuously circulating among the people, exhorting them and praising God. Never after this did he reprove the exercises of a camp meeting. Bro. James was licensed to preach when about twenty-seven years of age, and in due time was ordained deacon, and then elder. His religion was demonstrative, yet he commended it more by a beautiful consistency in all his daily walk and conversation. His family prayers were always occasions of earnest religious worship; his daily reading was to know more of God. In walking through the woods surrounding his dwelling, I know not how often I have disturbed him at his private prayers. He was never a very successful preacher, but in class meetings, prayer meetings, love-feasts and altar exercises he was a man of power. On such occasions he has often been known to forget to eat, and almost to sleep, seemingly oblivious to passing time. Souls were to be saved, and the work must be done. On occasions at camp meetings, when the interest had declined, mourners were discouraged, many of the laboring brethren had retired, and the singing had fagged to distress, as a last resort Bro. James was again called on to pray. The man so eloquent in prayer kneeled as if right at a throne of grace, and seemed looking into the face of the blessed God through the immortal Jesus, and began his earnest, fervent pleadings; his voice, gathering strength as he waxed warmer in his exercises, would roll its volume over the entire place, penetrating far into the surrounding forest. The conversing groups would be hushed into subdued tones. It laid its power on all, from the stand to the remotest cookyard, and every religious interest was centered at the altar. His pleadings and argument revolved round and round the passage: "The blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel." At length all unbelief would give way, the power of God would assert its presence, souls were converted, and the saints shouted aloud for joy.

Bro. James was married three times, and was the father of ten children. The children of his first wife, Miss Mary Reid, four in number, all died in infancy or childhood. He was married a second time, to Miss Margaret Scott, by whom he had six children. All lived to be grown. One died before the parent; two have died since; three are still living. The father lived to see all his children members of the church. His third marriage was with Miss Anna Taylor, who still survives him.

For many years Bro. James suffered from a spinal or kidney affection. It gradually wore upon his strength until he could no longer ride on horseback. Then he was confined to his room; then to his bed. He retained his mental faculties until late in the struggle, when his mind began to wander. He conceived himself in prayer meeting, in class meeting or in love-feast; sometimes he supposed himself among mourners at the altar. In all his decline he talked much of his Savior's love, and of his hopes of a heavenly inheritance. His last mortal strength was instructive of his Master's work. He breathed his last on the tenth of April, 1875, aged about seventy years.

D.

LOUISVILLE, MISS., January 26, 1876.

ALZIRA YOUNG was born in Marengo county, Ala., February 29, 1832, and died at the residence of her father, Robert Young, near DeSotoville, Choctaw county, Ala., September 22, 1875, aged forty-three years, six months and twenty-three days. We grieve, though not without bright hopes, to record the death of this estimable lady. In early womanhood she assumed the Christian vows and united with the Methodist Church, and to death was a worthy and exemplary member. Her life was the embodiment of exalted traits and sublime moral excellencies. In character she was positive, earnest, ingenuous, firm. With these characteristics were blended the Christian virtues of humility, forbearance and love. Her aspirations were ever toward the true, the good and the pure. Strong in her convictions of right, she possessed the moral courage to obey their dictates. By precept and example she was a light and power in all the spheres of her action. She was a laborer for the establishment of righteousness and truth. In the varied relations of life as friend, neighbor, child, etc., she ordered her steps by the oracles of revealed truth. The golden rule—"All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them"—was ever before her mind. Indeed in all her ways, like the psalmist of old, she could with emphasis say: "Judge me, O Lord, for I have walked in my integrity." A life so ordered must needs end gloriously; and so it did. Her sickness was comparatively brief, and her death was unexpected by all the family and by herself; but she was ready. She received the announcement that she must die with the utmost tranquility and resignation. She confidently, and with fervor serene, spoke of the bright home of the redeemed to which she was in a few moments to go. The only regret she seemed to manifest was to leave behind her aged, worthy and Christian father, around whom, with deathless devotion, her heart entwined itself. "O father, they tell me I must leave you," were almost the first words that escaped her lips on learning that her hours on earth were numbered. Just previous to her last moments the scene in the death-chamber was most serious and impressive. Calling the household, friends and neighbors present around her couch, she gave to each a loving adieu, linked with admonitions fit, and entreaties earnest, to meet her in heaven. How glorious the death of the righteous! "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."

C. B. DEBOSE.

ANOTHER grave is opened, another form is placed in the bosom of the earth, another mound is raised, and it covers the body of JOHN T. SALE, who was born June 9, 1845, and died near Robinson Springs, Ala., December 11, 1875, after a long and painful illness, occasioned by a malignant tumor on his thigh, which he bore with Christian fortitude and patience, frequently giving praises to God in his hours of deepest suffering; nay, even when a spasm convulsed his frame he shouted glory to God, saying: "Whom the Lord loveth he chastiseth." Calling his aged father-in-law to his bedside, he desired to hear his voice in prayer once more on earth; after which he clasped him to his bosom, exclaiming: "Now I am willing to go." With the death-throe upon him, he called his much-beloved wife, mother, sisters, brother and friends around him, and made them all promise to meet him in heaven. He then sang with touching sweetness the familiar old song "Farewell, my dear brethren; the time is at hand." When his voice died away, not a dry eye was in the room. His little daughter was brought to his bedside by his mother, at his request, and he taught her the little prayer beginning: "Now I lay me down to sleep," and told her never to forget to say it. "Lord, bless mamma and papa, and make me a good little girl." In his death the community has lost one of its best members, and his relatives and friends deeply mourn his loss; but we mourn not as those who have no hope, for we know he has gone to a brighter world.

AT the fourth Quarterly Conference of the North Warren circuit, Mississippi Conference, on motion W. R. Billingsley, L. R. Featherston and S. B. Dove were appointed a committee to draft suitable preamble and resolutions as a tribute of respect to the memory of W. E. Hollomay deceased. The committee reports the following:

Whereas, God in his wisdom has seen proper to remove from our midst Bro. W. E. Hollomon, a member of this Quarterly Conference; it is therefore, The righteous should be held in constant remembrance; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of our worthy brother this Conference has lost one of its ablest and best members—a man of deep piety, of strict integrity and great decision of character, the community one of sterling worth, and an exemplar for the young wherever he was known.

Resolved, That we tender to the bereaved family of the deceased our heartfelt sympathy, and may they realize that their loss is his eternal gain.

Resolved, That the foregoing preamble and resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the Conference, and that a copy be transmitted to the widow of the deceased, and to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

HOW THE WORLD IS CARED FOR. The subjoined statistics, showing the comparative proportion in different countries of the priesthood to the people, are of interest: In England and Wales there is 1 clergyman or minister to each 718 of the population; in the United States there is 1 to each 879. Neither England nor the United States, however, are nearly so well supplied with priests or parsons as are certain other countries. In Russia there is a priest to each 323 of the population, which is only another way of saying that the clerical army of the Czar numbers 253,081 men. In France there is a priest, monk, pastor or minister to each 235 of the population, or 153,628 in all; in Italy there is 1 to each 1,2[illegible] of the people, of about 190,000 in all; and in Spain most blessed of all lands!—there is a priest for each 1[illegible] of the population, or 315,777 in all. In Russia, France, Italy and Spain, however, the men in religious orders of all grades are included in these numbers. The whole number of clergymen and ministers of every kind in England and Wales is 31,[illegible]92; and in the United States it is 43,842.

The university at Berlin, in Prussia, had 1,190 students last year, of whom 470 were in the department of philosophy, and the rest pursuing the studies of medicine, theology and law. Yale College has in all 1,051 students this year, and had 1,051 last year.

CUDDLE DOON.

BY ALEX. ANDERSON.

The bairnies cuddle doon at nicht
Wi' mickle faucht an' din;
"O try and sleep, ye waukrife rogues,
Your father's comin' in."
They never heed a word I speak:
I try to gie a frown,
But aye I hap them up an' cry:
"O bairnies, cuddle doon."

Wee Jamie wi' the curly heid—
He aye sleeps next the wa'—
Bangs up an' cries: "I want a piece"—
The rascal starts them a'.
I rin an' fetch them pieces, drinks;
They stop awee the soun',
Then draw the blankets up an' cry
"Noo, weanies, cuddle doon."

But ere five minutes gang wee Rab
Cries out frae 'mang the claes:
"Mither, mak' Tam gie owre at once—
He's kittlin' wi' his taes."
The mischief's in that Tam for tricks—
He'd bother Sodger Hoon:
Behave I hap them up an' cry:
"O bairnies, cuddle doon."

At length they hear their father's fit,
An' as he steeks the door
They turn their faces to the wa',
While Tam pretends to snore.
"Hae a' the weans been gude?" he asks,
As he pits aff his spoon.
"The bairnies, John, are in their beds,
An' lang since cuddled doon."

An' just afore we hed oorsels
We look at our wee lambs.
Tam has his airm roun' wee Rab's neck
An' Rab his airm roun' Tam's.
I'll wee Jamie up the bed,
An' as I straik each croon
A whisper, through their denes, he hears:
"O bairnies, cuddle doon."

The bairnies cuddle doon at nicht
Wi' mirth that's dear to me;
But ance the big warl's cark an' care
Will quaten doon their glee.
Yet, come what will to Tam or me,
My Rab or Jamie John,
As we whisper, through their joys or baims,
"O bairnies, cuddle doon."

A Wonder in Japan.

By the last mail from Japan we have received the particulars of one of the most interesting and important events that has recently happened in that empire, namely, the opening, in Yedo, of a normal school for the education of girls. About one year ago the Empress became greatly interested in the future welfare of her country women, and having given a considerable amount of money to erect a suitable building for a large school, and the same having been finished and the teaching arrangements completed, the formal opening of the establishment took place on the thirtieth of November. Not less than eighty girls had already been admitted as pupils, and, while one foreigner had been appointed as a [illegible] adviser, the position of superintendent was given to a Japanese, Mr. Nakamura Masanawo, who is said to have become a convert to the Christian religion. The circumstances attending this event were quite as remarkable as the event itself, for the Empress, accompanied by Okubo, the minister of the interior, and other high dignitaries, presided on the occasion and actually read a brief address. The gate through which the imperial party had to pass on their way to the school was decorated with the chrysanthemum flower and national emblem, and they were escorted to the main hall by the vice minister of education. Here the superintendent read a congratulatory address, as follows:

"We humbly venture to think that the enlightenment of a country depends upon the excellence of its government, and that the excellence of its government depends upon the perfect nature of the regulations of families. Now the perfect nature of household regulations depends upon the integrity of thought, advance of intelligence, and chaste and upright action of women. Our land affords from olden days down to the present time numberless instances of virtuous women; but still, if we regard the matter in respect to the whole of our country, it must be allowed that the regulations for the education of women are exceedingly defective. At the present moment reform in enlightenment has gradually progressed, and it is a source of rejoicing to the myriads of our people that the Tokio Normal School for girls has been established, and that by her majesty's attendance to-day the ceremony of opening the school is favorably carried out. Our earnest desire is that those who may in after time complete their education here may become virtuous women, and so assist their husbands; virtuous mothers, and so instruct their children; and that by their giving birth to and rearing up a worthy population our country may become a prosperous and tranquil land."

After this the lists and the keys were delivered by the vice minister for education to the principal, who then presented the school regulations. The Empress replied:

"Upon hearing last year that this school was about to be established in order to foster the growth of education for girls, I was unable to contain my joy. Its construction has now been completed and the ceremony of its opening has been performed. My earnest desire is that this school may henceforth be prosperous, and that I may eventually see the beautiful fruit of female education appear in profusion throughout the whole of the land."

A brief address was also made by Tanaka, the vice minister of education. He said:

"The construction of the Tokio Normal School for girls having been completed, we have now come to the time for the commencement of its operations. We cannot but rejoice and offer congratulations with respect to this. How much the more, then, when our good and gracious Empress has been pleased to attend here, should we rejoice over and over again at the brilliant glory of this school! If we consider well the words of the Western proverb, that girls are the mothers of education, we sum up in a few words the reason why female education is so weighty a matter, and leave naught unsaid. Trust these words the idea is clearly apparent and easy of perception. Why should we attempt any superfluous explanation thereof? I content myself with merely making this one observation."

Other speeches were made, and several of the pupils read pieces and recited poems. One of the latter was as follows:

"The place of learning to-day
Founded shall, like the young plue-tree,
Flourish and exist for a thousand years." And again: "My father and mother will bedew their sleeves with tears on hearing of the joyful fact of my appearance to-day before the Empress."

The Empress afterward visited all the apartments of the building, made a present to all the pupils who had spoken, gave a sumptuous entertainment and returned to the palace, after which the public were admitted to examine the new building.

Compared with what is called the "woman question" in this country, the ceremony in Yedo may well put to the blush many people in this Christian land.—New York Evening Post.

A Wonderful Pastor.

An extraordinary instance of diversified ability, joined to unwearied industry, is presented by the life of Rev. Robert Walker, of Seathwaite, generally known as "Wonderful Walker."

Although he lived in obscurity, he found no less a biographer than the poet Wordsworth, who gives an interesting account of him in the notes to his "Sonnets of the Duddon." The parish priest so finely delineated in the "Excursion" is also a picture of Wonderful Walker. He was born in 1709, and was the son of a small statesman, who lived in Seathwaite. He was the youngest of twelve, and a weakly child, on which latter account his father gave him what schooling he could. At the age of seventeen he went to be schoolmaster at Gosforth, near Egremont, and remained there two years. He then removed to Buttermere, where he acted both as minister and schoolmaster, and received the usual small salary and "whittlegate." Before and after school hours he labored at manual occupation. He wrote his own sermons and did duty twice on Sundays. In summer he rose between three and four, and went to the fields—in hay-time with his scythe, in harvest-time with his sickle. He plowed, he planted, he tended sheep on the fells; at other times he clipped or salved—all for hire. When engaged in these employments he would be at work long before the regular laborers, and remain after they had finished their day's work. Nor was he less skillful than diligent. In all such labors he excelled. In winter he occupied himself in reading, writing his sermons, spinning and making his own clothes and those of his family (he was an excellent spinner), knitting, and mending his own shoes, the leather of which was of his own tanning. In his walks he never neglected to gather and bring home the wool from the hedges. He was the physician and lawyer of his parishioners. He drew up their will-conveyances, bonds, etc., wrote all their letters and settled their accounts, and frequently went to market with sheep or wool for the farmers. The next step in his career was his removal from Buttermere to Torver, on the banks of Coniston Lake, and, taking priest's orders, soon after which he married a respectable maid-servant, whose affections he had gained at Buttermere, and who brought him a fortune of £10, which he forthwith invested in the funds.

Shortly after his marriage he obtained the curacy of Seathwaite, where he lived and officiated for sixty-seven years. At the time of Wonderful Walker's appointment, and for many years later, Seathwaite church was without pews. He used it as a school-room, and is described as seated in his favorite place, near the communion table, wearing a cloak of his own making. His great-grandson tells us that when the family was in want of cloth Mr. Walker would take his spinning wheel with him to the school, where he also kept a cradle—of course of his own making. Not unfrequently the wheel, the cradle and the scholars claiming his attention at the same moment, taxed the ingenuity of even Wonderful Walker to keep them all going. The chapel was afterward pewed, and a new school built. To the already long catalogue of his attainments and pursuits must be added a knowledge of fossils and of plants, and a habit of observing the stars and winds. Indeed the atmosphere was one of his favorite studies. He made many experiments on its nature and properties. In summer he used to collect flies and insects, and by his entertaining descriptions of them amused and instruct his children. After a long and useful life, which extended over nearly the whole of the last century, he died on June 23, 1802, in the ninety-third year of his age. In the course of his long life he had, besides bringing up and settling in life a family of twelve children, amassed the sum of £2,000, the result of marvelous industry and self-denial. He was a hero in humble life a greater hero than many in whose honor monuments have been erected. Fraser's Magazine.

Coffee.

The oldest mention of coffee that can anywhere be found does not go further back than three hundred years. Nobody knows when it was first used in the East. There is nothing to go upon, except a tradition that the angel Gabriel invented coffee for the especial behoof of Mohammed in his old age, to enable him to renew his youth, and be happy in his loves. Whether it had this effect we are not told, but it is to be supposed that Gabriel did his best for the prophet. In any case, it is certain that coffee is incomparable as a stimulant, and will even make up for the want of food. Rossini used to say that it could keep him up for a fortnight, the time he required for the composition of an opera. There is no other stimulant that can sustain such a pitch. Opium is wonderfully sustaining, but it has bad effects, and it tends too much to dreamlessness, with a lack of concentration. Alcohol has a force of its own, as we all know; but it requires frequent renewal, and is too speedily followed by reaction and collapse. Tea comes nearest to the Arabian berry as a stimulant, but it often excites without invigorating. Coffee seems, while wakening up the brain, to make one, for a time at least, independent of food. It is, indeed, most enjoyed on short rations; and taken on a full stomach, as was pointed out, it neither pleases the palate nor refreshes the system. Nor is it always quite harmless. Brillat Savarin gave up coffee because he found that it turned his head into a mill whirling round, without ideas to grind. To some people it gives a shaking of the hand and a trembling of the knees. Stories are told of the people who have become cripples through excessive love of it; other stories of people who have become imbecile. Brillat Savarin is particularly earnest in forbidding it to children. It must be confessed that black tea is less dangerous, but it is much more of a feminine drink; it wants the masculine qualities of coffee. Balzac wrote a little treatise on modern stimulants full of his usual enthusiasm and minute analysis, in which he maintained that by a certain mode of preparation, chiefly by quick infusion, whatever is hurtful in coffee may be avoided. We do not pretend to decide. No two constitutions are alike, and according to the more or less of nervous excitability or bilious temperament which each of us possesses will depend the degree on which we can give our confidence to coffee as a sustaining and cheering force. When properly made there is nothing more delightful than its aroma; for it is not only agreeable in itself, but is also associated in our minds with the exhilaration it has often produced, and by force of habit the mere thought of it is almost enough to raise the spirits and clear the brow. Voltaire was a greater drinker of coffee than Johnson was of tea. He said that nothing raised his spirits so much as the smell of roasted coffee, and he had it roasted daily in his room. Perhaps this is too much of a good thing. There are not many people who would care to have their rooms incessantly perfumed by the smell of roasted coffee; but there is this to be said in its favor: that while coffee gives forth a powerful fragrance, it is also an admirable disinfectant by reason of the facility already mentioned, with which it takes to itself whatever lurks in the air.—World.

HINDOO SUPERSTITION.—Long before a Hindoo child is born the mother—who is treated with great kindliness—performs certain ceremonies [illegible] offspring. As soon as the father visits his new-born child he puts a little money into its hand, and all the relatives who accompany him follow his example. On the fifth day the mother bathes; on the sixth she worships the goddess Shasthi in the shed where the child had been born; and on the eighth, eight kinds of parched corn and rice, prepared in the house, are scattered in front of the door, and are eagerly picked up and eaten by poor children, who are always on the lookout for such windfalls. The original design of scattering this grain and rice seems to be an offering to the god. On the twenty-first day from the birth of the child all the women of the family assemble under a fig-tree, and worship the goddess Shasthi again. The woman, if her child is a male, is now regarded as pure; but if it is a female, then she must extend her period of non purification for a month. These ceremonies over, the child's nativity is cast by an astrologer, and its fortune told in that vague, mysterious, non-compromising language so much in force among this fraternity all the world over. A name is then bestowed on the infant. This is usually the mother's prerogative, and the name given is commonly one taken from their mythology, such as that of one of the gods; or sometimes, if the mother is of a sentimental turn of mind, the name of a flower or a tree is given to the child. Sometimes parents will give their children soft and harsh names alternately, hoping thereby to obviate the envy of their neighbors, and their consequent malice, if all the children had pleasant-sounding names.—From "The Races of Mankind."

THE MIDDLE AGES.—In the middle ages there were three great powers—the papal, the monastic and the feudal. Amid their constant combinations the monk ruled. No doubt there were among these men those of transcendent virtue, thought and intelligence; but that there were bad and unscrupulous men as well, and that they were in the majority, no one who has read the story of the richly-freighted middle ages can deny. Their wealth was boundless; their learning enormous and narrow; they were great in action, and wonderful as tools. They were masters of the ignorant feudal lords, and held them in the chains of a spiritual slavery which ruled Europe for a thousand years. They were grand when in Rome; they lived simple lives of self-denial, and forged the armor with which they afterward attacked idolatry, under the friendly shadow of imperial Jove, with the courage of Mars and with the cunning of Mercury. But were they grand when, in corrupted convents, they practiced an ignorant fanaticism, proud of an unnatural humility, fasting, praying, and living in idleness; repulsive and loathsome in their uncleanliness, thinking their unwashed bodies a mark of sanctity? Idleness and solitude became the causes of morbid poverty of intellect and of narrow-minded dissension. We do not need to turn to the corrupt pages of Rabelais for the sketch of a convent interior. Browning, in far nobler verse, has given us the little hatreds, the ignoble envy and jealousy, the crime and hidden sin which convent walls seem to foster instead of to shut out.—National Protestant.

A man finding it difficult to keep his footing on walking home from a convivial party, complained that he had just had his shoes soled, and they were slippery. "Yes," said his friend, "you had them fixed by a sherry cobbler."

Religious Intelligence.

—The Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church reports that the entire receipts of the year have been $450,718—$32,000 less than last year. The debt of the board, May 1, was $38,282.

—According to an official report the receipts of the Baptist Missionary Union for the first eight months of the financial year, up to December 1, were $52,348, against $53,219 during the corresponding period of last year.

—A society has recently been formed in England to bring about the suppression of the wicked, enforced opium trade with China. May it have grace to persevere until this foul blot upon the English name shall be wiped away.

—The Japanese minister of foreign affairs and the commissioner of education has granted permission to Rev. Joseph Nee Sima to teach Christianity in his school at Tokio, Japan, and to train native converts for the ministry, and all this has been done contrary to the law of the empire.

—At the meeting of the Royal Geographical Society of England, November 29, it was stated that the Church Missionary Society had that morning received £3,000, in addition to the sum of £5,000 already given to it, for the founding of a mission in the kingdom of King M'tesa, in Central Africa.

—A missionary from India relates the experience of a native Christian whom he was called to visit. Inquiring the state of her mind, she replied, "Happy, happy! I have Christ here!" laying her hand on the Bengalee Bible; "and Christ here!" pressing it to her heart; "and Christ there!" pointing heavenward.

—The Baptist brethren in France are meeting with encouraging success. In Paris, and in different localities to the north of that city, chapels, to the erection of which friends in America and England largely contributed, now supply the pastors with new advantages for evangelization, and the public with attractive and comfortable places of meeting.

—The first colored clergyman of the Reformed Episcopal Church was ordained by Bishop Cummins at Pineville, S. C., December 5. The newly ordained deacon, Frank C. Ferguson, has been a teacher of a large school. A school for the training of colored ministers will be opened by the Reformed Episcopalians in Charleston at the beginning of this year.

—The Free Church of Scotland received $200,000 last year for foreign missions. The work of this church among the heathen, and especially in India, is largely educational. Of the 278 agents employed by the committee 28 are ordained Europeans and 17 ordained native ministers. The native churches have a communicant membership of 2,387. During the past year 235 have been baptized or admitted on profession. In the schools there are 11,303 pupils under instruction, of whom 3,290 are girls.

LEVITICAL AT OXFORD, ENGLAND. The Lord has caused us to see his salvation very gloriously here during the past week. Mr. Varley has been greatly used of God in the salvation of sinners and the quickening of believers. He has given a series of Bible readings each week in the afternoon. Those on the "Personality and Power of the Holy Ghost," "Assurance" and "Atonement" were specially refreshing and helpful. His evening addresses have been accompanied by much spiritual power. Not one evening has passed without some testifying that they had received God's unspeakable gift.

—We learn from the Missionary Herald that the Southern Presbyterian Church has 19 ordained missionaries, 27 assistant missionaries, 8 ordained natives and 16 native helpers—in all 70 laborers. The missions are in China, Greece, Italy, a lady teacher is employed in connection with the Waldenses at Milan; Brazil, United States of Colombia, Mexico and Indian Territory. The mission churches are reported at between 15 and 20, and the communicants at more than 1,000. The receipts of the board for 1874-5 were $42,234, and the debt at the close of the year was $14,023. To meet this indebtedness, send out new laborers and pay current expenses the board calls for $80,000 during the present year.

—The Constitution of the Alliance of Presbyterian Churches throughout the world came to hand, says the Independent, just too late for report last week. The preamble recites the existence of various reformed churches organized on Presbyterian principles, and their wanted maintenance of close relations without any visible bond, and expresses the desire and intention of forming an alliance to meet in general council from time to time. Their fraternal relations with other bodies will be unchanged. Article 1 gives the name: "The Alliance of the Reformed Churches Throughout the World Holding the Presbyterian System." Article 2 defines terms of membership which include churches organized on Presbyterian principles and holding substantially the Reformed Confessions. Article 3 provides for a triennial council of the alliance. The council is to be composed of ministers and ruling elders, and is to have power with respect to the admission of churches to the alliance, to entertain topics regularly brought before it by the churches, but is not to interfere with the creed of any particular church. Its objects are to provide for the common defense and promote the general welfare of Presbyterianism, to gather and disseminate knowledge concerning the spread of Christianity, to commend the Presbyterian system to the world as scriptural and of universal adaptation; and, furthermore, to do whatever it can to further the evangelization of the world and diminish sin. Article 4 provides for changes in the constitution; for which last we are thankful; since Dr. Atwater has been declaiming that a change in the fundamental law of the Presbyterian Church might endanger property interests.

Our Young People.

THE NEW TESTAMENT.

We love the books of Matthew,
Of Mark and Luke and John;
The life of God our Savior
Is what they dwell upon.
The Acts and then the Romans
Two Corinthians you see;
Galatians and Ephesians
Bring Christ to you and me.

Philippians and Colossians
Are next in order here;
Thessalonians and Timothy,
In words they both appear.
Then Titus and Philemon
And Hebrew, Peter, John,
With James, and Jude's truth,
Instruct all age and youth.

John writes to little children,
And gives epistles three;
While Jude discourses plainly
Of what we all should be.
The last is Revelation,
To all the nations sent;
And thus we have completed
The whole New Testament.

From Our Little Friends.

MILLERSBURG, Miss., Jan. 17, 1876.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I heard the piece in the ADVOCATE read about the lady whose lien did so much for the church. So I thought I would get auntie to write for me—as I am a little boy, and can't write well enough—and tell you about two hens I have. Mine have not done so much for the church, but I think they are smarter than the lady's. One of them made a nest on the back gallery of the dwelling, and placed in it twelve pretty white eggs. We took them from her, and she went under the gallery and found another nest with twelve more, and took possession of it. The other had four guineas, and when they were old enough to roost in a tree one of them became very lame; and, as it couldn't get up to roost, she would take it regularly to the coop where they had been accustomed to staying with some little chickens, and then take the others to the tree.

This year I intend to sell my hens' eggs and give the money to Bro. Featherstun, who is our preacher, to send to the little heathen children, as I wish my hens to be useful as well as stuart.

Your little friend,

DANNIE DRAKE WILLIS.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I so love to read your children's corner. I thought I would write you, and may be some other little girl would read my letter. Grandpa Dr. H. V. Smith has been taking your paper so long that he could almost do as well without his slippers as without it; and grandma reads it through and through; but she loses her "specks" mighty often. Sister Annie (she's ten years old) thinks she is too big for the little folks' stories; but I caught her reading Grandpa Goodale's story. I wish Barney would milk the "bays' nest," and let us know what came of it. But my letter is growing too long for an eight-year-older, and I will close with a wish for a happy and prosperous year to you and the ADVOCATE. Yours, BYRD GUNTER.

VAZOO CITY, MISS., Jan. 15, 1876.

REV. DR. L. PARKER: I am a little girl almost ten years old. My papa is the preacher here. I read the little letters in the children's corner, and I thought I would try to write a short letter myself, and get papa to copy it and send it to you. I love the good ADVOCATE. I go to school and to Sunday school. We have a missionary society in our Sunday school. In two months last year our Sunday school raised $22 for missions.

Your little friend,

MAGGIE NORSWORTHY.

NORTHBOUND, La., Jan. 16, 1876.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: There are so many little girls and boys, from five to ten years old, writing to you that I thought I would write too. I love to read the Child's Corner, and I love the ADVOCATE also. I am living out here in the country, ten miles from any church, or Sunday school either, where there is scarcely any society at all.

Your friend,

G.

A Youthful Martyr.

In the first ages of the church of Christ, in the city of Antioch, a believer was carried forth to die as a martyr. "Ask any little child," said he, "whether it were better to worship one God, the Maker of heaven and earth, and one Savior, who is able to save us, or to worship the many false gods whom the heathen serve?"

Now it was so that a Christian mother had come to the spot, holding in her hand a little son, of about nine or ten years old, named Cyril. The heathen judge no sooner heard the martyr's words than his eyes rested on the child, and he desired the question to be put to him.

The question was asked; and, to the surprise of those who heard it, the boy replied: "God is one, and Jesus Christ is one with the Father!"

The judge was filled with rage. "Oh, base Christian!" he cried, "thou hast taught that child to answer thus." Then, turning to the boy, he said more mildly: "Tell me, child, how did you learn this faith?"

The boy looked lovingly in his mother's face and replied: "It was God's grace that taught it to my dear mother, and she taught it to me."

"Let us now see what the love of Christ can do for you," cried the cruel judge; and at a sign from him the officers, who stood ready with their wooden rods, of the fashion of the Romans, instantly seized the boy. Gladly would the mother have saved her timid dove, even at the cost of her own life, but she could not do so; yet she did whisper to him to trust in the love of Christ, and to speak the truth.

"What can the love of Christ do for him now?" asked the judge.

"It enables him to endure what his Master endured for him and for us all," was the reply. And again they smote the child.

"What can the love of Christ do for him?" And tears fell even from the eyes of the heathen as that mother, as much tortured as her son, answered: "It teaches him to forgive his persecutors."

The boy watched his mother's eyes as they rose up to heaven for him; and when his tormentors asked whether he would not now acknowledge the gods they served, and deny Christ, he still said: "No; there is no other God but one; and Jesus Christ is the Redeemer of the world. He loved me, and I love him for his love."

The poor boy now fainted beneath the repeated strokes, and they cast the bruised body into the mother's arms, crying: "See what the love of your Christ can do for him now!"

As the mother pressed her child gently to her own crushed heart she answered: "That love will take him from the wrath of man to the rest of heaven."

"Mother!" cried the dying boy, "give me a drop of water from our cool well upon my tongue."

The mother said: "Already, dearest, hast thou tasted of the well that springeth up to everlasting life—the grace which Christ gives to his little ones. Thou hast spoken the truth in love; arise now, for thy Savior calleth for thee. May he grant thy poor mother grace to follow in the bright path!"

The little martyr faintly raised his eyes and said again: "There is but one God, and Jesus Christ whom he has sent?" and so saying he gave up his life.—Golden Sayings for the Young.

THE BLIND BOY'S PATIENCE.—The other day I went to see a little blind boy. Scarlet fever had settled in his eyes, and for many months he had not seen at all. He used to be a sprightly little fellow—upon the run everywhere.

"Well, my dear boy," I said, "this is hard for you, is it not?"

He did not answer for a moment; then he said: "I don't know that I ought to say hard; God knows best;" but his lip quivered, and a little tear stole down his cheek.

"Yes, my child; you have a kind heavenly Father who loves you, and feels for you more even than your mother does."

"I know it, sir," said the little boy; "and it comforts me."

"I wish Jesus was here to cure Frank," said his little sister.

"Well," said I, "he will open little Frank's eyes to see what a good Savior he is. He will show him that a blinded heart is worse than blind eyes; and he will cure it, and make him see and enjoy beautiful heavenly things, so that he may sit here and be a thousand times happier than many children who are running about."

"I can't help wishing he could see," said Lizzie.

"I dare say; but I hope that you don't try to make Frank discontented."

"Frank isn't discontented," said Lizzie earnestly; "he loves God. And love sets everything right, and makes its own sunshine; does it not, Frank?"

"I don't feel cross now," said the little blind boy meekly. "When I'm alone I pray and sing my Sabbath school hymns, and slug and slug; and God is in the room, and it feels light, and—and—I forget I'm blind at all;" and a sweet light stole over his pale features as he spoke—it was, heavenly light, I was sure.—Young Reaper.

WHAT THE BIBLE IS LIKE.—1. It is like a large, beautiful tree, which bears sweet fruit for those that are hungry, and affords shelter and shade for pilgrims on their way to the kingdom of heaven.

2. It is like a cabinet of jewels and precious stones, which are not only to be looked at and admired, but used and worn.

3. It is like a telescope, which brings distant objects and far-off things of the world very near, so that we can see something of their beauty and importance.

4. It is like a treasure-house, storehouse of all sorts of valuable and useful things, and which are to be had without money and without price.

5. It is like a deep, broad, calm, flowing river, the banks of which are green and flowery, where birds sing and lambs play, and dear little children are loving and happy.

My dear, dear children, because I love you, I want you to love the Bible. If you attend to it it will make you, through God's blessing, wise, rich and happy forever and ever. It is God's book. It is a book for children. I hope you will learn it, and learn to sing, too, that beautiful hymn:

"Holy Bible, book divine,
Precious treasure, thou art mine;
[illegible]"

The wife of the late Prof. Agassiz arose one morning and proceeded, according to custom, to put on her stockings and shoes. At a certain stage of this process a little scream attracted Mr. Agassiz's attention, and, not having yet risen, he leaned forward anxiously upon his elbow, inquiring what was the matter. "Why, a little snake has just crawled out of my boot!" cried she. "Only one, my dear?" interrogated the professor, calmly lying down again; "there should have been three." He had put them there to keep them warm.

What we Shall Take with Us.

"Shall we take our memories with us into the other world?" Our correspondent might as well ask whether we shall take ourselves thither. That is a very dubious and modified immortality that strips us substantially of all conscious identity, denies the recognition of friends, and leaves us almost as ignorant of our past existence as if we had not lived in the present world. If we do not take our memories with us, what do we take with us? If our entrance into eternity be like our birth here, with no sense of pre-existence and with no felt relations to the past, what is there left of immortality worth the name?

We take ourselves into the world to come, and this means our souls, with such mental faculties and spiritual powers as we may have. With no recollection of the earthly life there would be no continuity of existence to us, and the notion of accountability would be an absurdity. "The things done in the body" are to be received in the judgment, and the whole process of reward and retribution implies the most vivid and complete remembrance. Death will not break the thread of mental and spiritual life. Consciousness may be momentarily suspended in the transition, but the spirit wakes in possession of all the attributes of its personal and intelligent nature. "Son, remember," were the words addressed to the rich man. They are at least significant as indicating the activity and uses of memory in the retribution of the wicked, and we may well suppose that this faculty will perform an important office in the blessedness of the glorified.

We shall leave many things behind us—our earthly friends, our temporal pursuits, our property. "We brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out." The miser must let go his money bags, the millionaire must give up his stocks, bonds, mortgages and real estate, the devotees of pleasure must part with their dissipations and revelry. The earthly work of the Christian ends with his life here, and the goods which his Lord delivered to him to be improved must be surrendered and accounted for. When we go away we take ourselves, the characters we have formed, the moral progress which has been developed, the principles which have been established, the habits of thought and feeling we have left, and the responsibilities we have incurred. The having misused the means of his fidelity and progress or left unused the monitions and bitterness of neglected opportunities. As the tree falleth, there it shall be. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

Death severs our relationships. It takes us away from our temporal enterprises, it dissolves our hopes in property, and separates us from the conditions of mercy which surround us here. But it makes no essential change in character. This goes with us, with all that character implies. Death does not destroy it, judgment only recognizes and defines it, and eternity affords scope for its development. What the outward circumstances of the other world may be are comparatively unimportant now. The great determining principle is in ourselves, what we are, and what our relations to the infinite and holy God. The pure in heart shall see God. Sowing to the flesh will surely be followed by a harvest of corruption.

It is well to ask what we shall carry with us, and then to live in view of the obvious answer. Let men make to themselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, let them lay up treasure in heaven, let them so use the temporal that they shall be rich eternally. "For where your treasure is there will your heart be also." If we make an idol of wealth, and live merely for selfish and worldly ends, we shall find ourselves poor indeed when the final hour comes. Conscience, memory, and all the endowments of intelligence, all the capacities of the soul, will only contribute to the supreme misery if the spiritual part has been neglected. The surprising thing in death to many will be that it has not touched their characters at all, and that it lands them on the eternal shore, as to their moral and spiritual natures, just as it overtook them amidst the pursuits of life.

A circumstance connected with our question, and to be seriously pondered, is the fact that the most die at a time unexpected by themselves. "For man also knoweth not his time: as the fishes that are taken in an evil net, and as the birds that are caught in the snare; so are the sons of men snared in an evil time, when it falleth suddenly upon them." This is true especially with the unconverted. They fall in the midst of their plans, and before they have given earnest attention to the interests of the soul. "Death took him by surprise" was the remark concerning a prominent citizen who died a few months ago. A surprise to his friends it was; but this did not matter; but to be surprised himself had to us a very solemn and startling meaning. How common this experience must be! Men, women, in their prime, and young people in the freshness of their years, falling sick, or by violence taken off. Unexpected blows of misfortune may fall upon us, but we can recover from the shock, but what is to come before we have thought about it, and to be suddenly confronted with the dread reality? Truly, what shall we take with us when the Son of Man comes as a thief in the night, and when without warning the soul, unprepared, is hurried into the spirit world?

Immaculate Conception of Mary

This was declared and made an article of faith in the Roman Church in 1854. The Pope (Pius the Ninth) called a large convocation (not a general council of cardinals, archbishops and bishops in 1854, and in November of that year almost a unanimous vote of the convocation adopted the doctrine as true and of God; whereupon the Pope issued the following decree to the Catholic world: "We declare, pronounce and define that the doctrine which holds that the blessed Virgin Mary, at the first instant of her conception, by a singular privilege and grace of the omnipotent God, in virtue of the merits of Jesus Christ, the Savior of mankind, was preserved immaculate from all stain of original sin, has been revealed by God, and therefore should firmly and constantly be believed by the faithful."

All the bells of all the churches in Rome gave forth their chimes, the cannon of the castle of St. Angelo their thunders, the multitudes applauded, and St. Peter's blazed with a magnificent illumination. Says one: "It was a grand pageant, befitting an idolatrous enthusiasm. Rome was intoxicated with joy. The populace hoped Mary would be more propitious in her intercessions, give plenty, peace, and crown Rome with higher honor and success."

Protestants, and some of the Romanists who have opposed this dogma of Rome, affirm:

1. That this doctrine lacks the evident support of Scripture. Indeed there are but two texts which Romanists quote, which, as they admit, bear directly on the question. They quote some other passages, intended to be confirmatory, of the two principal texts. The first passage is Genesis iii. 15: "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." Some of the copies of the received Vulgate, the Latin edition of the Bible (but not all), have "she" instead of "it shall bruise thy head." They attribute, with this reading, the bruising of the serpent's head to the woman rather than to the "seed of the woman." They hold that unless she was immaculately conceived, and free from the taint of depravity, she could not have bruised the serpent's head. Eminent biblical scholars and critics say that the Romanist rendering of the text is not the true rendering, and that it makes nothing for the doctrine. The Scriptures everywhere teach that Christ was manifested to destroy the works of the devil. Paul says to the church at Rome: "The God of peace shall bruise satan under your feet shortly." But the Pope has it: "Mary has crushed the serpent's head with her immaculate feet."

The next passage adduced is the angelic salutation, Luke i, 28: "Hail, thou that art highly favored;" then they add something from the thirtieth verse and something from the forty-second verse. In all which Mary is addressed, and her great happiness and honor as the divinely chosen mother of Jesus, the Savior, is mentioned. The Romanist writers assume that these expressions suppose that Mary must enjoy such a fullness of grace as to exempt her from all taint of depravity—that she must have been immaculately pure. To this Protestant critics and scholars say that this is uncritical, illogical and forced. These passages speak of the honor conferred on her, but nothing—not a word—about immaculate conception.

2. Protestants affirm that this doctrine lacks the authority of the early church; that the comparative novelty of the doctrine in theology is proved by history. There is not one great teacher of the Christian church who, before the breaking out of the controversy between Lyons and Bernard in A. D. 1140—that is, for the first eleven centuries of our era—was favorable to the doctrine as now propagated by the Church of Rome. The doctrine did not exist for them; they knew nothing of this specific doctrine; they speak in respect to original sin and the need of redemption in such a way as to prove that the immaculate conception of Mary could not have been any part of their creed. The doctrine was declared in A. D. 1140 by Bernard to be a novelty.

No better does the case fare in the church of the middle ages. The amount of the argument and the result of the testimony here are that the doctrine was first invented in the twelfth century, that it was opposed by the greatest and best of the scholastics, and that it made its way, in spite of opposition, through the force of popular superstition, and from the necessary working out of the inherent tendencies of a system of creature worship.

The doctrine of the immaculate conception is opposed to the scriptural doctrine of original sin.

The very necessity for a miraculous conception in the case of him who was to be without sin is in itself a proof that every person conceived in the natural way must be conceived in sin; and the Bible is too express and unmistakable on this point: that all are conceived in sin. The Romanist theory smacks of Pelagianism—that depravity consists in deprivation of original purity, negative rather than positive. The scriptural and Protestant theory is that depravity is positive, that "the carnal mind is enmity against God," and that depravity comes to us by descent; and, if so, Mary must have inherited a depraved nature.

The present pontiff declares that the doctrine of the immaculate conception is "revealed by God, and therefore should firmly and constantly be believed by the faithful." Perhaps no decree made by the Popes has been more directly antagonistic to the recently enunciated claim to papal infallibility. The Jansenist Launoy has collected the opinions of seven of the infallible successors of St. Peter, who are adverse to or irreconcilable with the decree of the present infallible Pope. Launoy cites from Leo, one of the greatest and most learned of the early bishops of Rome, who says: "Christ alone was innocent in his birth"—"free from original sin;" that "Christ received Mary's nature, but not her fault;" that "Mary obtained her sanctification through her conception of Christ." With these statements Innocent the Third, Innocent the Fifth, John the Twenty-Second, or Benedict the Twelfth, and Clement the Sixth substantially agree.

Thus the papacy, in committing itself to this new and idolatrous dogma, is in hostility to Scripture, to universal consent, and also to itself. It explains the sense of Scripture by tradition; and it explains the sense of tradition by an infallible expositor, and that infallible expositor contradicts himself. The new dogma makes the whole church to have been ignorant of a truth which is now declared to be necessary to the faith; it makes Leo, Innocent the Third, Innocent the Fifth and Clement the Fifth to have taught heresy; it puts the greatest scholastic divines under the ban; and, while doing this, it declares that what is now decreed has always been the faith of the church, and that it is a part of the revelation of God, given through Christ and the apostles, and handed down by constant succession and general consent. Such, then, is the doctrine of the immaculate conception, and its claims, on which the stupendous system of Mariolatry has been reared. W.

Romanism in America and England.

Romanism is, of course, a system that needs to be watched. The guiles and wiles of the Jesuits are tolerably well understood, and the plans and aims of the papal church in connection with the school question and politics are not disguised. Those alarmists, however, who are prone to exaggerate the actual strength and progress of Romanism will find some light in the following from the New York Methodist:

The Catholic leaders on the continent of Europe have consoled themselves—or, at least, tried to console their followers—by emphatic assertions of the prosperity of their cause in England and America. Even the Pope, in his occasional allocutions, has referred to these two Protestant countries as fields of victory, while acknowledging disaster and defeat in almost every other land. In Spain the old concordat is repudiated by the government and toleration allowed. In Italy, under the very eyes of the papacy, the old foundations are sliding away, and, as Garibaldi said in a late published letter, there is no place on earth where the Pope is less regarded than in Rome itself. If you cross the Alps you find popery everywhere dwindling; in Switzerland especially the government showing it no forbearance. In France it still has the countenance of the civil power, but France is its forlorn hope in her fallen condition. In Germany it has been suffering, gravely by a sort of self-defeat, the consequence of its Jesuitical attempts to interfere with the new imperial order there. Even in Bavaria, until lately its strongest German center, it is snubbed by the government. In Austria it has met with similar treatment. In Belgium alone has it shown any considerable vigor. No wonder, then, that its leaders look abroad to England and America for relieving news.

Its boasts respecting those two countries have been almost chanticleer, but authentic statistics show that they have been quite unfounded. The question in regard to our own country has been lately thoroughly discussed by the public journals, and two results have been demonstratively reached: First, that there are individual Protestant denominations which exceed the whole Romanism of the United States. The Baptists equal at least the papists in population; the Episcopal Methodists far exceed them, not including the eight or nine other branches of Methodism. The United States official census has long shown this Methodist superiority in respect to church force, ecclesiastical property, and church sittings; but as the Romanists make no report of communicants, a comparison of population could not be made from the census. Taking, however, the latest and highest statements of Romish authorities and comparing them with the Methodist official statistics, the calculation which gives the Methodists the superiority in population is readily and conclusively made. The European journals have lately recognized this surprising fact, and the Catholics have not, so far as we have observed, dared to question it.

But, secondly, it is proved that popery has seriously declined in America. That it grows here is, of course, unquestionable, for nearly everything grows in a new country; but that is not the logical question. As one of our exchanges remarks: "The true, the logical question is: Does popery grow here relatively?" Facts show that it does not; that (as a Cincinnati Catholic paper declares) it would now have nearly twice its present numerical strength had it retained the additions made to its population by immigration alone. By its own acknowledgment it has lost millions. Our Chicago cotemporary justly says that "this country is the biggest grave for popery yet dug on the earth." The children of the Romanists, somehow or other, get alienated from their church. The church knows well the fact, and this is the secret of its desperate hostility to our public schools. It can hope to save itself only by saving its children, and it can save them only by controlling their early education.

These are the facts regarding popery in America—facts well authenticated, and of late often reiterated in our journals. We have ourselves repeatedly given more or less of the data which verify them. Its boasts regarding England have been subjected to a similar statistical investigation and with a similar result. That it has increased in England within the present century nobody denies; but the only relevant question is: Has it relatively increased? And the answer to this question is a decided and indisputable negative. Its churches have multiplied everywhere, its ecclesiastics are seen everywhere, and it has appointed high and pretentious dignitaries in the main centers of population; but it must be borne in mind, first, that the population of England has advanced during this century at a greater rate than this apparent increase of popery; and, secondly, that the immigration of Irishmen into England, like the same immigration to America has simply transplanted a large amount of popery from the one island to the other; and yet this increase by transference bears no proportion to the increase of native Protestant population, so that there is actually now a less percentage of the British population papal than there was at the beginning of the century.

The question has been sifted by English statisticians, and, as an example of the well-ascertained results, we give the following extract from Robuste in's Denominational Statistics:

"There are now nearly a million Roman Catholics in England and Wales, and these are divided according to their nationality thus: English Roman Catholics, 179,001; foreigners, 32,000; Irish, 742,560. This is one side of the subject; now look at the other. In 1801 the population of Great Britain and Ireland was about 15,750,000, of whom 4,250,000 were Roman Catholics, or 27 per cent. of the whole population. Now the population is nearly 31,500,000, of whom little more than 5,500,000 are Roman Catholics, or only 18 per cent. of the whole population. In other words, while the Roman Catholics have increased at the rate of 28 per cent., the Protestants have increased at the rate of 120 per cent. Protestantism has therefore been advancing nearly five times faster than Romanism since the beginning of the present century."

Dr. Redford in Mississippi and Louisiana.

We quote as follows from a recent letter from Dr. Redford in the Nashville Christian Advocate:

My stay in Canton, though brief, was remarkably pleasant. Bro. Leith, my special friend, and I occupied the same room. Our home was at Mrs. Hill's, where we had everything to minister to our comfort that a Christian family could confer. Bros. Thompson and McLaurin were also entertained at the same house, with whom we took sweet counsel, while the preachers treated me with cordiality, and, book agent as I am, actually invited me to attend the next session of their Conference.

On Friday afternoon I took leave of the kind family whose hospitality I had shared, and took the train for New Orleans. At midnight I reached the city, and found Bro. Harp at the depot awaiting my arrival. At his house, which was my home while in New Orleans, I met Dr. Wiley, the president of Emory and Henry College. He had attended several of the Conferences in Texas, looking after the interest of the institution over which he so ably presides.

On Saturday morning I was introduced by Bishop McTyeire to the Louisiana Conference, and had the privilege of addressing them in behalf of the Publishing House at Nashville, and the Depository at New Orleans.

The New Orleans Depository, under the careful management of Bro. Harp, is doing well. The ordeal through which it has passed has been a trying one, owing to the depression in business circles, yet it has successfully weathered the storm, and now promises to be a great blessing to the church. This Depository is a great convenience to the Conferences contiguous to it, and the preachers and members of the church ought certainly to patronize it with increased liberality.

I did not have the privilege of hearing Bishop McTyeire preach on Sunday, but learn that the occasion was one of great interest to the church. New Orleans had since been his home. Here he had gathered around him a large circle of friends and admirers, and his presence in the city was an occasion of extraordinary interest.

The missionary anniversary was held in Carondelet Street church on Sunday evening. The audience was large and attentive, and the collection amounted to six hundred dollars.

The Conference mourned the death of the Rev. John Wilkinson, one of the most devoted and gifted members of the body. The memorial service was solemn and interesting. The life of this extraordinary man had left an impression for good upon the Conference and the church, and no cheek was dry as those who had been his companions in arms told of his chivalry and his sufferings in the cause of the Master. A beautiful and touching tribute to his memory was read by Dr. Walker, and then many of his fellow-laborers bore witness to the fruits of his life. His end was triumphant.

The Conference adjourned to-day after a delightful and harmonious session. To me it was especially pleasant. Like the Mississippi Conference, it was my first visit, and, like the Mississippi Conference, they invited me to visit them again. I knew but few of the members on Saturday morning, but now I know almost every one. Self-sacrificing, laborious and zealous, these men have achieved much in the Master's cause, and won trophies to the Redeemer in the fields they have occupied. They enter upon their new charges with an increased purpose to achieve success. May the great Shepherd watch over them.

My visit to New Orleans has been a delightful one. To the kind attention of Bro. and Sister Harp, no less than to the courtesy of the Conference, I am indebted for the happiness I have enjoyed.

The Ladies at Work.

The publisher informs us that he has lately received several lists of new subscribers obtained by ladies. This augurs well for the Advocate. If the Methodist ladies will put their shoulder to the wheel things are bound to move. They can do much in canvassing the neighborhoods in which they live, the Sunday schools and societies to which they belong, and in inducing their fathers, brothers and husbands to subscribe. We would most urgently bespeak their active exertions in this good work. It is a field in which womanly influence and tact can accomplish a vast deal of lasting good for the church and for the general welfare of the country. We trust that hundreds of our fair friends will take the matter in hand, and provoke the preachers and laymen to greater diligence by their devotion and enthusiasm. With the art of persuasion which they possess they can surely get every man who ought to take the paper, to subscribe, especially at the present rate of only two dollars a year, postage paid. The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, taking everything into the account, is about the cheapest paper in the country. Many of our subscribers say it is the best

Oregon Correspondence.

MR. EDITOR: The Columbia Conference embraces a large territory—the whole of the State of Oregon, and as much of Washington and Idaho Territories as we can occupy—and yet there are people beyond. East of the Cascade range there is a vast extent of country, mostly grazing, where vast herds of horses, cattle and sheep find the best of pasturage. Ochoco beef (the name of a large valley) surpasses in flavor anything of beef I ever ate, Texas not excepted. They have what is called "bunch grass," which grows luxuriantly and is almost inexhaustible. It dries up in the fall and makes an excellent self-cured hay, upon which cattle subsist well during the winter. The climate is said to be very dry and bracing. Timber is scarce, water plentiful. We have a scattered membership through all that country who are literally as "sheep without a shepherd." Bishop Kavanaugh sent three men over into that vast country east of the Cascade mountains, reaching to Idaho and into Washington Territory. We expect to hear a good report from these preachers. They are emphatically traveling preachers, as their circuits and districts are hundreds of miles in circumference. But souls are there who need the bread of life. There are some ministers of other denominations there, but the ground is not occupied, and there is much work for us to do. It takes men of nerve and pluck to do it; but, inspired by love for Jesus and souls, the itinerant can brave hardship and make sacrifices.

Willamette valley, with its beautiful streams, growing cities and well-improved farms, comprises but a small part of our territory, and yet as to church-houses, organized societies and preachers we are the most part of the Columbia Conference. Our work in this region is prosperous. I do not note any definite revival of religion, yet our preachers are all at their work, and their support is better than heretofore. Our worthy presiding elder, Bro. Skipworth, who filled the place so well in the Louisiana Conference, is on our district—has filled all his appointments acceptably, and is the "right man in the right place." He travels with facility, preaches with ease and power, and without notes presides with dignity, and is well posted in ecclesiastical law.

Pastoral work is as profitable here as in my old Conference. It is perhaps more difficult to perform, as people here are from every State and represent a contrariety of sentiment and doctrine. Individuality being strongly marked, there is a self-sufficiency among this people that renders them difficult to approach. Yet the faithful, loving, prayerful labors of the pastor are blessed and souls are saved. "Pastors after God's own heart," is the great need of the church to-day. O for faithful, devoted pastors in all our Zion! "Then will the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth!"

I would rejoice to mingle with you at your approaching Conference session, and can only pray God's blessings on you and the brethren. I rejoice at your revivals and successes. May they be more glorious! Amen.

Affectionately in Christ,

T. B. WHITE.

ALBANY, ORE., December 18, 1875.

A correspondent, sending a marriage notice, says: "This is the eighth wedding had at Mr. ——'s and no wines or intoxicating liquors of any kind used on either occasion. A worthy example!"

We hope the absence of intoxicating liquors on such occasions is the rule in Christian families. If there are exceptions the minister officiating should be careful to set a good example by abstaining himself, and by discountenancing the practice in every practicable way. Married life begun with wine-bibbing and revelry promises neither happiness nor prosperity.

Rev. John A. Ellis, presiding elder of the Meridian district, Mississippi Conference, spent several days in the city last week. Bro. Ellis represents the East Mississippi Female College, and we trust that his appeals for aid to that institution may receive liberal responses from our people. Bro. Ellis informed us that the college is improving in its prospects, and that under President Adkisson's administration it is doing a noble work. May it prosper more and more.

In the Christian warfare, to maintain the conflict is to gain the victory. The promise is made to him that endures to the end. The object of our spiritual adversaries is to prevent this. Every day which we are preserved from going back they sustain a defeat.—Payson.

Life of Bishop Andrew.

In response to a request from his children, I have consented to undertake the preparation of a Life of Bishop James O. Andrew. In doing so I shall desire to let as much of his own mind and heart appear in the book as possible.

For this purpose I am solicitous to collect letters written by him. No doubt many are preserved by those to whom they were written. No doubt many are mere brief answers to various calls. Such would be of no service. But any letters of the following descriptions will be gladly received:

1. Such as may refer to important passages of his own life and experience.

2. Such as were written to friends in season of temptation, bereavement or perplexity.

3. Such as may express his views upon religion or church polity.

4. Such as may have been written to young preachers for their encouragement or instruction.

5. Such as may have reference to the events of 1844.

6. Such as refer to the work of the church among the slaves of the South.

Beside these any letter that may be considered to be of interest will be gladly received. Those who may have them in possession will confer a favor by inclosing them to me at 2719 Lucas avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

Begin Early.

BRETHREN: We have received but of the moneys collected during the Conference year now closing. A number of the Annual Conferences have fallen below their assessments, which will leave the treasury empty before all the drafts drawn by the Bishops in favor of the missionaries already in the field shall have been paid. This deficiency must be provided for in due time. We therefore engage the brethren to take their collections early in the year and forward to the Treasurer at Nashville, who will return a receipt which is a voucher in the settlement of the Annual Conference Treasurers. Now is the time to begin the work of collecting for missions.

Not one gentle French preacher in a thousand ever gives a single dollar of his time to the [illegible] in his thoughts for a contribution. One nineteen out of every twenty will collect their entire assessment, and five out of every ten will exceed what has been allotted to their charges. The reports from various fields of missionary toil are encouraging. There is a loud call for more laborers. Send us the means, and the men will be ready.

Now, dear brother, don't lay down this appeal and forget the cause of Jesus; but we beseech you to go to work in earnest for the salvation of lost, dying millions. The calls are Moody and Sankey closed their three weeks' evangelistic services in Philadelphia January 20, in connection with the twenty-first anniversary of the Young Men's Christian Association. A collection of about $100,000 was raised as a thank offering, to enable the association to complete their new building in time for the Centennial celebration. The expenses of the evangelistic services, amounting to nearly $50,000, have all been met by voluntary contributions. Mr. John Wanamaker, who recently bought the depot, generously granted its use without charge. Mr. Moody started the next morning for Florida, to give his son the benefit of a milder climate. He will return immediately, and begin his labors in New York on February 1.—Independent.

FATHER BEHM AND HIS BIBLE.—The venerable Rev. Henry Behm, whose death in his one hundred and first year we recorded a few weeks ago, loved his Bible to the end. It was his habit to read it through at least once every year. His friends assure us that he read the Bible through over seventy times, and that when he died the book-mark was found at the first page, showing that he had just finished the year's reading, and was preparing to begin anew. At the funeral that Bible was significantly placed upon his coffin—a touching remembrance of his great love for the book of books.—Christian Advocate.

Princeton Theological Seminary has the names of 120 students upon its roll in the catalogue of the present year: Senior class, 32; middle class, 46; junior class, 33. Resident graduates 4, and representing 35 different universities or colleges, and 26 different States or countries. The Alumni Association holds its annual meeting on Tuesday, April 25.

A foreign cotemporary says: "In France one-fourth of the boys and two-thirds of the girls—altogether nearly one-half of the juvenile population—are being instructed by the nuns. The result is that more than thirty per cent. of the population are unable to read or write."

OUR readers are referred to the advertisement of Hasselman & Adams, on this page. We can assure all those who may have dealings with this house that they will be dealt with liberally.

HAIR DYE.—We call attention to the advertisement of Mr. Charles Furter, chemist. We are assured that Mr. Furter is a reliable gentleman and a good druggist.

DO YOU WANT MONEY?—Mr. J. Begon advertises in another column his loan office, corner of Hampshire and St. Louis streets.

SOARDS' CITY DIRECTORY for 1876 is now ready for delivery, and our citizens who have as yet not ordered a copy would do well to do so at once. We feel that it would be superfluous for us to commend this work to our readers, as the publishers are so well known and have gained so enviable a reputation during the last few years that they have published our City Directory. Thoroughly understanding the immensity of the work requisite in publishing a correct directory, Mr. Soards employs an army of assistants, and has no sooner completed one work than he commences to mature arrangements for the succeeding one. Attached to the directory of 1876 is a handsomely engraved map of the city, and it is probably the most complete and perfect that has ever been published.

GENERAL ENGRAVER.—The attention of the readers of the ADVOCATE is directed to the card of Mr. John A. Cairns, general engraver, 101 Canal street. There is no reason why your engraving may not be as well done here as in the North, and we think it will pay all to call on Mr. Cairns. He will satisfy you that it can be done as well here as in any other town or city in the country. Keep your money at home, and spend it to build up business here.

GOVERNMENT AWARD.—The Fairbanks scale-manufactory at Washington on Tuesday secured the patronage of the Postoffice Department for another year, quality, not price, is said to have settled the wordict in their favor, and the repeated approval of the United States Government must be very satisfactory to the Vermont scale-makers.—St. Johnsbury, Vermont, Republican.

WHOLESALE GROCERS.—Elsewhere will be found the card of Messrs. John F. Adams & Co., one of the old and best houses in New Orleans. Indeed, after an acquaintance with them for over twenty years, we gave the greatest pleasure in recommending them to our readers.

REAL ESTATE AGENT AND BROKER.—Mr. H. L. Michel, whose card appears elsewhere as a real estate agent and broker, is one to whose care business may be entrusted with the assurance that will be attended to promptly and faithfully. See his card.

HOME-MADE BOOTS AND SHOES, screwed, pegged, sewed, nailed or doweled can be found at Wolf & Eppler's, 23 Royal street, by the very extensive line of Wolf & Eppler. We have the largest stock to give the ladies a choice.

THE MYSTERY,
Or, Turner's Hair Tint;
HARMLESS! BEAUTIFUL! PERMANENT!

This preparation has received the unanimous approval of the people of the world, and wherever introduced has superseded all other preparations of the kind. No washing or coloring of the hair is necessary before using.

[illegible]

And its use saves both time and labor, as a few drops applied with a comb twice a month is all that is necessary to keep the hair or whiskers of the most beautiful shade from light brown to the deepest black. In the absence of that dry and burned appearance produced by other Hair Dyes. The [illegible] is applied to a single hair or spot that is not colored, and will not rest satisfactorily until the whole head is colored, and will not stain the hands, or anything else. Saving Wild Bees from the Woods.

Cut your trees between the last of March and the first of June. Place in your hive two sticks six inches apart, passing the same way through the gum, six inches from the head of the gum—the sticks let in with a half-inch auger.

After cutting your trees take four pieces of the comb that are the fullest of young bees, and fit them to your gum, running the two sticks through the comb, to hold them to their place in the gum. Nail on your head. Clear away all the other comb, and portions of the tree that the bees formerly built in. Set your gum down among the bees upon the ground. Shade it well from the sun, and go home. You will be certain to save the bees, for all bees will take care of their young.

OLIVER FLEMING.

Removing More Milk with the Cream.

It is the practice with some butter-makers, when skimming milk, to remove as little milk with the cream as may be practicable; while others prefer to take in bulk about as much milk as cream. C. L. Smith writes, in connection with other topics, that when the milk is put in the pans in a heated condition, and placed in a warm room, perhaps many of the butter globules were exploded by the heat, and that they mingle with the milk like alcohol with water, but to churn all the milk would be to get more butter. There are times when the milk sours before all the cream has risen; yet the milk must be nearly if not quite as good, from the same cow that is being fed the same feed, in a warm morning as it is in a cool morning. But we often get twice the amount of cream in the cool days that we do in warm days, and the quality is better. Take, for instance, a sultry day of August, when the cream will hardly pay for the labor. Now take a good, cool day, when the milk will yield a nice cream. Is it to be supposed that there is that difference in the milk produced from the same cows on those days, when the cows were fed in the same pasture, that there was in the amount of butter made from their milk by skimming the cream only? My judgment is that by churning only the cream, the dash of the churn must injure the butter globules and make the butter salvy, as the friction is more directly applied to them than would be the case if milk was mixed with the cream. From observation I believe too many butter-makers do not skim as deep or churn as much milk as they ought. I hear them often say that they don't like to get so much milk, or sour milk, in with the cream. It is a common practice for most butter-makers to have a skimmer that is perforated with holes, that the milk may pass through into the pan from which the cream is being taken.—Prairie Farmer.

MANURE FOR ORCHARDS.—Trees selected for the orchard, as a general thing, should be free growers, but some are not naturally so; and to these the art of culture is to be more particularly applied. If the soil is not already rich the young trees should be manured every year moderately in some way.

The compost of bone and ashes is excellent, supplying, as it does, potash, lime and other elements needed for fruit-producing trees. A compost of swamp muck and well-rotted barn-yard manure is also excellent to push young trees.

When an orchard begins to bear a compost of the following proportions is recommended by good authority: "To each barrel of dry ashes put two bushels of bone dust, eight quarts of common salt, and, if obtainable, four quarts of iron scale (peroxyd of iron). These ingredients should be well mixed, and the mass saturated with water in casks or tubs. Let it remain until well decomposed; then turn out, shovel over and mix with five times its bulk of good swamp muck, leaf-mold, road scrapings, or a mixture of these. A bushel or less of this mixture, according to the size of the trees, evenly spread around as far as the roots extend, will cause the production of the finest, high-colored, delicious fruit." This is especially intended for the apple-tree, but if judiciously applied will have a marked effect on the pear, peach and other fruit-trees.

Mulching newly-planted trees is very advantageous in case of drouth, and the mulch should be applied immediately after a good rain in June.—J. P. in American Farmer.

TO COOK CAULIFLOWER. Throw the heads into strong salt and water, and let them soak for two or three hours, to be sure that no insects infest them. The usual way of cooking them is to boil the heads from half to three-quarters of an hour, according to their size, and then serve them on a platter with melted butter, or what is usually called "drawn butter," turned over the whole dish.

But quite as good a way is to cut up the cauliflower heads into good-sized pieces, leaving to each sprig its portion of stalk, and to the outer ones a few of the green leaves; and as you cut them throw them into a dish of cold water with plenty of salt. Leave them in it an hour or more, and then put them into a large saucepan filled with boiling water, and boil them fast, with the lid off, until a fork will go through the stalk easily, which will be in about half an hour. Skim out the stalks into a dish, having a sauce made ready to pour over them.

A good sauce for this dish is made by taking a piece of butter the size of an egg, and a coffeecupful of boiling water; cut up the butter with a full teaspoonful of flour, and stir it gradually into the pot water. When it boils, stir in a dessertspoonful of vinegar, and a dust of pepper, with a little salt.

CUT-WORMS AMONG TOBACCO.—A York (Penn.) paper says: "Tobacco growers are troubled very much this year by the cut-worm. One man in Lancaster county put out two thousand seven hundred plants, and in twenty-four hours all but three were destroyed. A ring of wheat bran placed around each plant will protect it from the worm. The bran being sweet, the worm will eat it in preference to the tobacco. After eating, the worms become sick and many of them die, while the others can be easily killed."

POTATO BUGS.—A correspondent writes to the Country Gentleman: "Feed the potato bugs as soon as they begin to come; take old potatoes, large or small, slice them thin, dust them with Paris green, mixed with plaster or flour, one part green to ten of the latter; drop them about the fields or truck patches where the bugs are found; put out a few, and often. The bugs will go for the fresh-cut potatoes and eat them with a good deal of relish, and as a matter of course it will be their last meal."

"I find it to contain no acids or alkalies, on which account it will be entirely free from corrosive action when applied to paint or metallic surfaces. It contains no poisonous substances by which any accident or injury could happen while using it. The particles of the Powder are all angular, and not rounded, as in most kinds of sands and in many other polishing agents. The particles are extremely small and hard, which, with their angular shape, give it especial value as a rapid and fine polisher. Yours truly,

MEDICAL.

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP.

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound. Its well-established virtue and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Breast and Bowels is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at any length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all Inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Diarrhœa or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most efficacious in preventing that most awful scourge whenever timely resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure, this truly extraordinary medicine has, over most compounds of the same nature, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children, and it requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, not only because the bottle contains more syrup than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this Sirup will keep for years without fermenting, and it can be used in families whenever required by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Sirup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night may take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a good night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three to four hours. For sale by Scientific.

A NEW KIND OF FOOD.—It is "cattails"—the kind that grows in our swamps. Its scientific name is Typha latifolia. It is highly esteemed for food in some countries. In southern Russia the young shoots, when they push up in the spring, are cut and tied up, as asparagus for our markets, and sold in all the markets. Boiled as asparagus is boiled, and seasoned with salt and spice, it is pronounced quite delicious by those who have tried it.

—Scientific men in England have been putting their heads and their experiments together for several years, in the hope of finding some preventive of the potato disease, or else some disease-proof potatoes. To determine the value of the disease-proof potatoes which certain enterprising seedsmen advertised for sale, the Royal Agricultural Society of England, some time since, offered a prize of $500 for a really disease-proof potato. The conditions were that the potatoes should be tried in twenty different parts of the kingdom for three years. But the committee did not need to continue the experiment for three years; the results obtained in one season were decisive. None of the potatoes resisted the disease.

—The investigations made by Betchdolfer into the effect of air-proof fabrics show that such fabrics ought to have only a very limited use. In India rubber or gutta-percha textures the wearer feels highly uncomfortable when having to give off more heat than usual, or undergoing much exercise. They become inconvenient not because they stop the change of air entirely—which they cannot do, in fact, on account of the necessary openings in them—but only because they limit the universal exchange of air in the underlying garments. For protection against the wet from without they are, of course, well suited, but they produce another wet on the skin by impeding evaporation. They may be used with advantage and safety, therefore, in wet weather, when accompanied with cold or wind, but not, though wet, when it is warm or calm.

We have all heard of the enthusiastic Methodist brother who shouted "Amen, hit or miss," after having been warned not to interject his responses in the wrong place; but now comes the story of an exhortation in which the speaker, on saying, "This is perhaps the last time my voice will ever be heard in this house," was followed by a vigorous though thoughtless Amen!

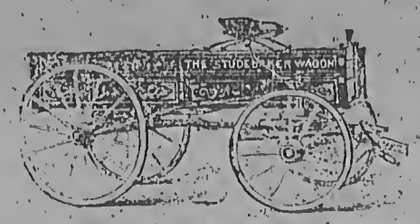
I HAVE RECENTLY ACCEPTED THE AGENCY OF THE CELEBRATED



STUDEBAKER WAGON
FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.
THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!
There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, and kept under shelter properly dried, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The workmanship is unsurpassed by the best improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of select iron, tested by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other. Thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLOPE SHOULDER SPOKES are used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally, hence the superiority of their work over all others.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The river is 5 feet below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending February 1:

Mississippi river and bayous	bales	15,203
Red river		2,725
Ouachita river		2,065
Railroads		2,000
Lake		191
Mobile		871
Texas		1,001
Arkansas river		2,462
Total		26,518

On Saturday the market opened with renewed inquiry, and although operations were restricted by the offerings being poorly assorted and buyers claiming concessions which factors were unwilling to grant, yet 2,000 bales changed hands during the morning, at steady prices for the better qualities, but irregular and easier for the lower grades, after which the movement became quite animated resulting in further sales of 9,300 bales, making a total for the day of 11,300 bales. On Monday the movement during the morning exhibited but little animation, buyers claiming concessions which factors were unwilling to grant; but later in the day, the 2.12 P. M. dispatch from New York reporting a further decline in spots of 1/16, while foreign exchange ruled still lower, parties came together more freely, and the entire business of the day summed up 6,856 bales. On Tuesday, under a further decline of 1/16, at Liverpool, buyers claimed concessions which factors were unwilling to grant, and the sales during the morning were comparatively of limited extent, but later in the day parties came together more freely, and the entire business summed up 7,000 bales, at irregular and generally easier prices, the closing rates showing a further partial decline of 1/16 in the better qualities, and a full 1/16 in the lower grades.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 25,156 bales, against 29,000 for the corresponding time last week and 28,000 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 925,193 bales, against 722,415 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 440,661 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 41,672— [illegible] against 201,85[illegible]. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 314,[illegible] bales to Great Britain, of [illegible] to France, and of 167,[illegible] to other foreign ports. Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

THE PRINTER'S HORNBLINDEN.

In seasons when our funds are low
Subscribers are provoking slow;
A few supplies keep up the flow
Of dimes departing rapidly.

But we shall see a sudden shift
When dues pour in from more than migo,
Commanding every sixpence bright
To be forked over speedily.

Our bonds and due bills are arrayed,
Each seal and signature displayed;
The holders vow they must be paid,
With threats of law and chancery.

Then to despair we're almost driven;
There's precious little use of "livin"
When our last copper's rudely riven
From hands that hold it lovingly.

But larger yet these dues shall grow
When interest's added on below,
Length'ning our chin a foot or so
When gazing at them hopelessly.

'Tis so that scarce we have breath
To plead for time upon a dun,
Before there comes another one,
Demanding pay forcelessly.

The prospect darkens. On ye brave
Who would our very backs save,
Waive, patrons, all your pretexts waive,
And pay the printer cheerfully.

A would yield us pleasure sweet
A few delinquents now to meet,
Assuring us a clear receipt
For papers taken regularly.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

INDIANAPOLIS, Feb. 1.—In reply to prisoners who pleaded wounds and faithful service in the army in extenuation and for modification of sentence, Judge Gresham admitted the unpleasantness of his duty, but said he could not allow sympathy to make him forget the crime they had committed. He knew there was a decided contrast between the officers of the government and the distillers—the former are trusted servants in the pay of the United States, while the latter are not trusted, but watched by government officers; therefore [illegible] punishment. He then announced that those officers who had betrayed their trust should have two years in either of the penitentiaries they might prefer, and pay a fine of $1,000 each. Then followed the case of J. Hill, deputy revenue collector. Hill protested his innocence before God and the world. The judge, in sentencing him to three years in the penitentiary and $1,000 fine, remarked that his crime was of a deeper dye because of his high position in the government service. In passing sentence on those who had been laboring about the distillery, the judge remarked the difference between their crime and that of government officers, and gave them three months in the Gibson county jail and $500 fine, with the exception of Thomas Dobb, distiller, whom he gave one year in jail.

LOUISVILLE, Feb. 2.—The thermometer fell forty degrees in twenty-four hours. The heaviest gale for years prevailed on the river.

WOONSOCKET, R. I., Feb. 2.—The new brick French Catholic church was blown down.

NEW YORK, Feb. 2.—A heavy northward wind prevails. Rate of the wind sixty-six miles per hour. No serious damage reported.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 2.—The towers of Agricultural Hall were considerably damaged by the gale.

ONEIDA, N. Y., Feb. 2.—St. Bernard's two hundred and twenty-five feet steeple, with a full set of chimes, fell across the railroad.

DETROIT, Feb. 2.—Thermometer twenty-five degrees below zero: terrific winds and snow prevail.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 2.—A tremendous gale prevails. The Metropolitan church steeple is frightfully out of plumb.

MOUNT VERNON, IND., Feb. 2.—Seven dwellings and one school-house were swept away. The occupants took refuge in the trees, and now suffer from frozen feet and ears. No one is lost.

LOUISVILLE, Feb. 3.—The Indiana whisky convicts, from Indianapolis, were replaced in the penitentiary here to-day. The prisoners, previous to their present trouble, occupied high positions and were numbered among the best citizens of Evansville. The sentences read "for hard labor" for their terms specified, for violation of revenue laws.

A Courier-Journal reporter succeeded in having a talk with the prisoners, after they arrived at the prison. Albert McGriff was sitting in a smoking lounge, his face buried in his hands; the picture of grief and despair. The reporter touched him gently on the shoulder, when he looked and raised his head. His face looked careworn and haggard, and his eyes were suffused with tears. He is sixty years old. He said: "My God; to think that I should ever come to a place like this! It will kill me. My heart is crushed within me." He spoke in a voice deep with emotion and was greatly agitated. He continued: "If it were not for my poor wife and son, I believe I could stand it; but to think of the disgrace brought upon them is more than I can bear. It will kill my wife. She is sick now, and this will finish her. But there is one consolation—she knows I am innocent of the charge. I swear to you that I am an innocent man."

He said that his wife was fifty-eight years old, and that he had been married thirty years. McGriff was well known and highly respected at Evansville, being for seven years the city clerk of that place and a leading member in the Presbyterian Church. He has the heart disease, and it is the general opinion among his friends that he will not long survive his imprisonment.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4.—The President has approved the act to amend the revised statutes relating to naturalization. It provides that the declaration of the intention to become a citizen of the United States may be made by an alien before the clerk of any Circuit or District Court, or District or Supreme Court of the Territories, or a court of record having common law jurisdiction. The act legalizes all such declarations heretofore made before any such clerk. The original statute required the oath to be made before the court.

OMAHA, Neb., Feb. 4.—The Union Pacific train due from the west today is twelve hours late. The late storm was unparalleled in severity. The Central Pacific is still blocked. It stormed so that the shovelers and plows had to abandon work.

RICHMOND, Va., Feb. 4.—Snow fell for six hours; is now six inches deep and has ceased. This is the first snow storm of the winter.

COLUMBUS, O., Feb. 1.—Gen. Sherman writes: "I never have been, am not now and never shall be a candidate for the high office of President of the United States, before any convention of the people."

He alludes favorably to Gov. Hayes. He says: "My wife and family are strong Catholics, but I am not; that, however, is nobody's business."

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 6.—Mr. Davis has written a letter to Hon. James Lyons, of Richmond, in answer to one from Lyons, commencing: "I beg you to answer Blaine." Mr. Davis, after reviewing the matter, concludes that natural respect is needful for the common interest, and essential to a friendly union; and when slander is promulgated from high places the truth should strip falsehood of its power for evil.

NEW YORK, Feb. 6.—Cable specials say that Cardinal Manning pronounces unfounded the report that he supports a scheme of union of Ritualist with the Roman Catholic Church.

FOREIGN.

BAYONNE, Feb. 2.—Many Spanish families are flying to France on account of the fighting. Contradictory reports state that the Carlists continue to spare San Sebastian.

SANTANDER, Feb. 2.—Gen. Burriel, military governor of Bilboa, who was summoned to Madrid to answer and account for the Virginius affair, departed on Monday.

The town is partially illuminated over the capture of Durango. Reinforcements have been sent thence to San Sebastian.

NAPLES, Feb. 2.—Great preparations are being made for the celebration of the carnival, the first since the overthrow of the Bourbons. One hundred thousand francs have been subscribed, and the names of members of the leading families and nobility are on the committee of arrangements.

It is feared that the chief of police will prohibit a ball at the San Carlos Theater on account of the danger of fire.

The indications of an eruption of Vesuvius increase.

MADRID, Feb. 4.—The government has advices that the Carlists have destroyed their cartridge manufactory at Vern, and many of them have fled to France.

LONDON, Feb. 5.—The Pall Mall Gazette's Berlin special says Prince Bismarck has sufficiently recovered to drive out in a close carriage. His parliamentary soirees will be resumed. When questioned about Cardinal Hohenlohe's visit to Rome, by some deputies who called upon him, the chancellor distinctly stated that whatever might be the cardinal's mission, or whether there be any mission at all, it is not authorized by him. He declared that so long as he remained at the helm, it is not the State which will make the first advance toward a reconciliation with the church.

MADRID, Feb. 7.—It is stated that the Biscayan and Navaresse provincial deputies have told Don Carlos not to expect any further aid from that quarter.

A heavy snow storm in Navarre and Guipuzcoa prevailed yesterday.

VIENNA, Feb. 7.—The warlike preparations of Roumania excite uneasiness. It is said that Prince Charles wishes to throw off the Turkish yoke. Roumania has one hundred and forty cannon and one hundred thousand chassepots coming from Prussia.

Russia is fomenting an insurrection in Bulgaria.

According to the State census of New York for the year 1875 there were 109 persons living in the State of the age of 100 years and upward. Of these, 10 were born in Ireland, 6 in Canada, 2 in England, 2 in the West Indies, 1 each in Scotland, Spain and at sea, while 35 are natives of the United States and 20 unrecorded. Twenty-nine of these centenarians live in New York city, 22 of these having been born in Ireland and only 2 in New York city. The oldest mentioned is Sarah Hicks, of Brooklyn, who is 114; while a resident of the same city, Isabella Simpson, and several others, reach 110. The gentler sex show the greatest degree of longevity, not only counting the oldest on their side, but numbering 27 more than the stronger sex. Mitchell Swearingen, of Franklin county, who is 101, has a wife who lacks only four years of the age necessary to secure the record of her name in this list. There are 12 colored persons and 2 Indians in the list.

A whimsical comparison, being made between a clock and a woman, Charles Fox observed that he thought the simile bad: "For," said he, "a clock serves to point out the hours, and a woman to make us forget them."

"My son," said an old man, "beware of prejudices. They are like ruts, and men's minds are like traps—prejudices get in easily, but it is doubtful if they ever get out."

Count Von Moltke on American Generalship.

"Don Piatt," the eccentric correspondent of the Washington Capital, has opened a campaign against the influence of West Point. He sends from Europe to his newspaper a summary of criticisms extracted from Count Von Moltke by an American visitor who has lately "interviewed" the "old hero" at Berlin. The count, it was alleged, has expressed an opinion that neither party during the American civil war had produced "a very distinguished general." The true reason of this, he said, was not a lack of military talent among Americans, but the limitation of the field of selection for officers. West Point monopolized all the higher commands on both sides. Naturally the North, retaining the Federal organization, clung to the great military school, while "the Southerners adopted the pernicious system of exclusiveness, as many of these West Point officers had joined their side, and their president had also been at the academy." "It was, perhaps," added Count Von Moltke, "fortunate for the North that the South did not seek for talent among the mass of the people. It is evident that the chance of obtaining a distinguished general increases as the field of selection widens and diminishes as it contracts." He went on to contrast the American with the Prussian system of choosing officers. "For the sake of example," he said, "and not binding ourselves to any exactness of figures, except that the one is very small and its opposite, with which it is compared, very large, let us suppose the number of West Point officers to be 500, and the number of Prussian soldiers 500,000. Evidently as we have a thousand times larger to draw upon to render the chances of obtaining a great general equal, each American must possess a thousand fold the talent of a Prussian, which is absurd." During the secession struggle, according to the Prussian strategist both sides pursued a mistaken policy. The Southern leaders "did not seem to comprehend the situation. Their advantage was the excess of military spirit; their disadvantage the lack of resources and the prestige of an established government. Their blows, therefore, should have been swift, sudden and aggressive. On the contrary, they acted on the defensive, thereby giving the government of the United States full time to develope its immense resources." But the Northern leaders went equally astray, for "instead of using the advantage tendered them by creating armies and calling to the front the military of the country they exhausted themselves by throwing armed mobs into the fields, so badly disciplined and drilled that their battles were fought by regiments and separate brigades. The one great axiom which directs the concentration of a heavy force against the weaker point of the enemy, that the side of the government had in its power to illustrate, was neglected and lost." The source from which this testimony comes is not above suspicion, but we are not aware that the German newspapers have yet impeached the genuineness of the report published in the Capital.

The New Orleans and Pacific Railroad.

The committee of citizens appointed by the great meeting held on the twenty-seventh of January to solicit subscriptions for this road will start upon their mission on Monday. They will make a thorough canvass of the city, dividing it for that purpose into districts. They will seek first to enlist the property holders, who are most prominently involved in the success of this enterprise, and who are the greatest sufferers from the loss of trade, the depreciation of real estate and the inability of tenants to pay remunerative rents. They are justly expected to set an example to the other classes of the community of the appreciation of the great importance of this work, as they will be the first to experience the benefit of the great enhancement in the value of their property. Let this advance follow, let our assessments be augmented by a half or a third, and the property holders will soon cease to clamor against even the present high rate of taxation. The other classes—the small proprietors, the mechanics, and trades people and their employees—will not be slow to follow the example of the property holders and landlords. All of them have a clear perception, a profound conviction of the urgent need of this road to reclaim and enlarge the trade we have lost with Texas and our northwestern parishes, which more active and energetic communities are making the most gigantic endeavors to withdraw from New Orleans. Let all—firstly and mainly our property holders—unite in the supreme effort which is now being made to defeat this purpose and re-establish the status and claim of New Orleans as the grand and favorite mart for the trade of the vast territory of Texas, with its incalculable future of development and wealth. This alone is needed to render New Orleans in the near future the second if, not the first commercial city of the continent, and the universally acknowledged metropolis of the Mississippi valley.—New Orleans Democrat, February 6.

The Gospel of Numbers.

NUMBER II.

We had intended in this paper to present a table of Conferences which have overgone their assessments, and of those which have reached their assessments; but on examination we find the reports too defective to make such a table with accuracy as yet. This week we give you a table of charges which have exceeded their assessments. Many others, we have no doubt, have done so, but we are only able to report those which have made us the report we have so often asked for. If this publication should lead others to send us reports, they will appear hereafter. We will give three tables. No. 1, excellent—paid assessments in full. No. 2, more excellent—overgone assessments. No. 3, most excellent—the charge which stands highest. We this week offer but two partial tables—No. 1, excellent, and No. 2, more excellent. The others will appear from time to time.

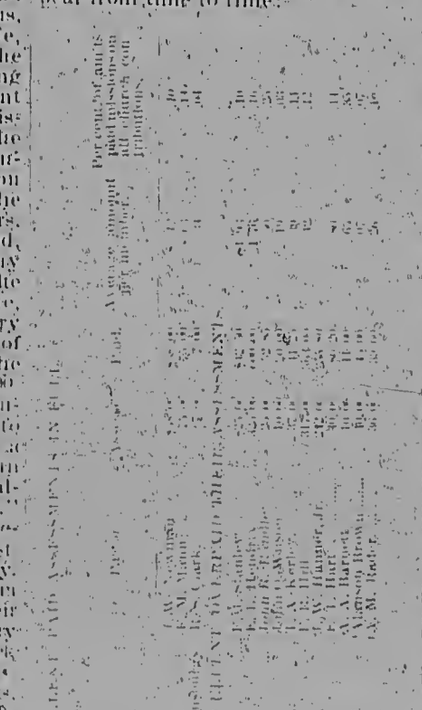

TABLE NO. II.—1875.—MORE EXCELLENT.

We have a number of reports which ought to go into this list, but there are attached to them no names, either of pastor, charge, district or Conference. The secretaries are desirous to have reports from all missionary organizations in our church, such as Women's Missionary Societies, Sunday School Missionary Societies, etc. We want them at an early day, as it is now time for the preparation of our annual report.

ORANGES.—Green oranges, the size of full-grown walnuts, are to be seen on the orange-trees in Lake Charles, La.

If this weather lasts two weeks longer wild turkeys will quit waiting for spring, and will commence the gobbling season at once.

The Man to Do It.

Whether or not we are to have a religious element incorporated into our politics rests wholly with the Roman Catholics. If they want it they can have it, and in all probability they will have it unless they present a change of front. The truth is, the Catholics themselves have produced this state of affairs. It is they who have been lobbying with the Legislatures in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and other States. It is they who rushed through our New York Legislature the infamous Gray Nuns bill—a bill that must be wiped out of our statute-books. It is the Catholics who, underrating public sentiment, made bold to attack our public school system. It is such papers as the Catholic Telegraph, the Freeman's Journal, the Tablet, the Catholic Columbian, together with the foolish utterances of such prelates as Bishops McQuade, Gilmour, Purcell, Father Stuck and others, that have unmistakably shown the animus of the papal church in America, and aroused the Protestant sentiment of the nation. There is liberty enough for us all in this Protestant country—much more liberty than any papal government in the world grants its Protestant subjects, as Protestants know to their cost.

The Tribune suggests to Senator Kernan, of this State, that he, more than any other man in Congress, can extinguish, before it gains headway, the flame of religious conflict in this country. We do not think so. Senator Kernan made a speech saying that our public schools should stand. Look at the result. No Catholic journal that we have seen indorses him, and most of them are as silent as the grave upon this matter. No; Senator Kernan, layman, is to the Catholic press and clergy only a drop in the sea. But there is one man who can stop this crazy, suicidal proceeding on the part of the Catholic clergy and the Catholic press if he will, and that is his eminence Cardinal McCloskey. One word—the making of a sign from that residence in Madison avenue—would "hush the noise and soothe to peace." We do not ask the cardinal to do this. But we may say that he will be wise to do something. The cardinal has returned to us—the reception is all over. The birretta, the skull-cap, the acolytes, the priests, the incense, the muttered ayes—all have done their part. Now, if the Roman prince would see peace for his church, let him, if he cannot put brains in papal heads, at least administer a portion of that discretion which, for the Romanists, is much the better part of valor. Cardinal McCloskey has had his play-spell; now let him devote a little time to good, earnest, beneficent work.

Among other things, he needs to put a check upon his newspapers, and a check upon his priests. Such electioneering partisans as the New Jersey priests, who made stump speeches from their pulpits, should also be attended to. Cardinal McCloskey is a man of pure life, and we believe his intentions are in the main good. But the cardinal just now needs to display Roman virtues of the earlier kind, and to exercise them. As a conservator of the peace and a controller of the turbulent, Cardinal McCloskey can do his church great good; as an idle spectator and a mere looker on, a Roman prince in this country is an expensive and quite superfluous ornament.—Christian Work.

Stick to Your Business.

There is nothing which should be more frequently impressed upon the minds of young men than the importance of steadily pursuing some one business. The frequent changing from one employment to another is one of the most common errors committed, and to it may be traced more than half the failures of men in business, and much of the discontent and disappointment that render life uncomfortable. It is a very common thing for a man to be dissatisfied with his business, and to desire to change it for some other, which, it seems to him, will prove a more lucrative employment; but in nine cases out of ten it is a mistake. Look round you, and you will find among your acquaintances abundant verification of our assertion.

Here is a young man who commenced life as a mechanic, but, from some cause imagined that he ought to have been a doctor; and after a hasty and shallow preparation he has taken up the saddlebags only to find that work is still work, and that his patients are no more profitable than his work bench, the occupation not a whit more agreeable.

Here are two young men, clerks; one of them is content, when his first term of service is over, to continue a clerk till he shall have saved enough to commence business on his own account; the other can't wait, but starts off without capital, and with a limited experience, and brings up, after a few years, in a court of insolvency, while his former comrade, by patient perseverance, comes out at last with a fortune. The young lawyer, who became disheartened because briefs and cases did not crowd upon him while he was yet redolent of calf-bound volumes, and had small use for red tape, who concluded he had mistaken his calling, and so plunged into politics, finally settled down into the character of a middling pettifogger, scrambling for his daily bread.

There is an honest farmer who has toiled a few years, got his farm paid for, but does not grow rich very rapidly, as much for lack of contentment mingled with his industry as anything, though he is not aware of it. He hears the wonderful stories of California, and how fortunes may be had for the trouble of picking them up; mortgages his farm to raise money, goes away to the land of gold, and, after many months of hard toil, comes home to commence again at the bottom of the hill for a more weary and less successful climbing up again.

Mark the men in every community who are notorious for never getting ahead, and you will usually find them to be those who never stick to any one business long, but are always forsaking their occupation just when it begins to be profitable.

Young man, stick to your business. It may be that you have mistaken your calling; if so, find it out as quick as possible, and change it; but don't let any uneasy desire to get along fast, or a dislike to your honest calling, lead you to abandon it. Have some honest occupation, and then stick to it. If you are sticking types, stick away; if you are selling oysters, keep on selling them; if you are at the law, hold fast to that profession. Pursue the business you have chosen, persistently, industriously and hopefully, and if there is anything in you it will appear and turn to account in that as well as or better than in any other calling; only, if you are a loafer, forsake that line as speedily as possible, for the longer you stick to it the worse it will "stick" to you.—Scientific American.

A Bit of Experience.

The papers are indebted to the Presbyterian for the following "Bit of Experience," now going the round of the press, and giving the people some idea of an editor's perplexities.

"Good-natured editing," says some wise man, "spoils half the papers in the United States." Yes, verily. "Will you please publish the poetry I send," says one; "it is my first effort," and some crude lines go in, to encourage budding genius. "Our church is in great peril," says another; "will you publish my appeal," and a long and dolorous idea is inserted. "My father took your paper for twenty years," writes another; "I think you ought to publish the resolutions passed by the session of Big Brake church when he died," and in go resolutions of no interest to a majority of the readers. "I am particularly anxious that the views I present should go before the church this week," and out go a covey of small, pithy contributions, to make room for three columns from a ponderous D. D. "There is an immediate necessity for the exposure of one who is a bitter enemy to the truth," writes another, as he sends an attack upon an antagonist which will fill an entire page. "I am about to publish a book, identifying the great image of brass, iron and clay, and I would be obliged to you to publish the advance sheets of the fifth chapter, which I herewith inclose to you." "Why do you not publish in full R——'s great speech in the General Assembly? It would increase your circulation largely." "If you will publish the sermon I transmit to you I will take eight extra copies!" "The church must be aroused on the subject of foreign missions," says a pastor, as he forwards the half of his last Sabbath's sermon. And the ladies—bless their sweet smiles and sweet voices—the good-natured editor surrenders to them at once, and they go away happy, utterly unconscious that they have helped to spoil the paper.

MINUTES OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—A note from the publisher informs me that the minutes will be out next week. The delay in publication has not been from any fault of mine. The stipulation was that they should be ready by the second week in January, and I put copy in the printer's hands the day after adjournment, but the bulk exceeded by several pages the quantity stipulated for. This was caused by unusual fullness in the memorial department. The funds on hand would not justify any further outlay, and I have been compelled to await the publisher's own time, who, I must say, does the work one-third cheaper than the lowest offer elsewhere.

A LOST ART RECOVERED.—The new houses of Parliament at London are to be painted with what is known as the Szerelmey paint, the invention of an Austrian officer of that name, appointed to investigate the decay of stone, and who claims to have discovered the lost art of hardening and protecting stone, iron, wood and other surfaces, upon which the permanency of many ancient buildings depended. The stone liquid and stone paint so fill up the pores and harden the surface of the cement, plaster or stone to which they are applied as to case-harden them, rendering them water-proof, and scarcely capable of being affected by the atmosphere or other influences which usually produce decay. The iron paint protects iron from oxydation, and, once well applied, would appear not to require renewal for a very long time. In preserving iron from rust, or as a priming upon any work, it is far more efficacious than white lead, a single coat carefully applied being better than two coats of the best oil paint. Its natural color is a rich chocolate.

Alabama Conference.

REMINISCENCES.

The sixty-first session of the Alabama Conference and the twenty-second of the Alabama Conference since the separation of the two Conferences, met in the Methodist church, Talladega, Ala., January 28, and he has been thirty-seven years in the ministry. His active days were given to the church work, circuits and missions. Randolph, Ashville and Maplesville were mission fields he served, preaching to the whites. These he now and then visited, for some time to come, on his circuits. Troy, Crawford, Dadeville, Jones Valley, Centreville and others were circuits that received his services.

A portion of his time was also spent on missions to the colored people, a work in which an important part of our itinerant work, in his early ministry, Dr. Roper was a preacher of considerable mental vigor and marked activity, evincing great fidelity to authority and old landmarks of Methodism. But none of the pastoral charges he was the instrument in the increase of the church's membership and the augmentation of its spiritual power. During the year 1844 he conducted some very successful revival meetings on the Alabama circuit. At one of these meetings, held in Indian Hill, near Prattville, two little girls, who were then seven and twelve, were converted, and ever after manifested a Christ-like life. Once there became the wife of a man who, for many years an exemplary and valuable member and local officer in the church, and who represented his district in the Annual Conference. Although she has passed from earth to the celestial home, the family circle still shows the impress of her early and genuine religious piety. The other became the wife of a traveling preacher, and for nearly a quarter of a century has shared with him the vicissitudes and trials of the Methodist itinerancy. Dr. Roper spent eighteen years right along in this ministry. When he was forced into a superannuated relation by blindness, but, recovering his sight, he was again for several years an effective preacher. He is now on the superannuated list, but is fully identified with the church and devoted to its interests. The writer was his presiding elder last year and found him possessed of the true spirit of a fellow-laborer in the kingdom and patience of Christ. His home is in Chilton county, Ala.

Hilliard J. Hunter entered the Alabama Conference in December, 1841, and has been in the traveling connection thirty-four years. At two different times he has been in the superannuated relation, but for twenty-seven years his name appears on the list of effective workers. He is descended from a true servant and prophet of God. His father, the Rev. John Hunter, was for nearly a half century an itinerant preacher in the Georgia, Alabama and Memphis Conferences, of whom your correspondent has an affectionate and tender recollection, as he received baptism and the vows of church membership at his hands, November 1, 1818.

Hilliard J. spent his active days in the circuit work, and in labors on missions to the colored people. Modest and unassuming, yet with much fidelity and great punctuality he attended to the work assigned him. Possessing a fondness for rural life, he was well adapted to the fields of labor he usually occupied. Visiting from house to house, he was almost unexampled in his usefulness and success in the pastoral work. His love of purity and loyalty to Christian vows made him decided and rigid in the enforcement of discipline. Although not exactly like an itinerant of olden time, who was in the habit of reporting, "—— expelled, and still the good work goes on," yet he thought it important to use the moral pruning knife in the Lord's vineyard. The writer was his presiding elder for three years, and can with pleasure bear testimony to his full consecration and devotion to the highest interests of Methodism. He is now superannuated, but ready to do all he can to promote the Master's cause. He has no home, but spent last year with relatives and friends in Elmore county, Ala. He and his excellent wife "are waiting at the river," and may God cross [illegible] this side of the [illegible]

J. W. SIMMS.

One of St. Paul's Causes of Joy.

MR. EDITOR: The church sometimes meets with great loss in carrying forward the benevolent purposes of the gospel. Many of those calls which St. Paul describes as the fostering of cares, the communicating with his afflictions, and in reference to an Elder "that immediately connected with church-like beneficiaries," the "Section for the saints."

If, as it is generally admitted, the preacher ought to be chief of the work, most assuredly as the performance of the work rent off from secular pursuits, seems to have material aid, whether administered by ravens or men. And it is also conceded that, in those extreme cases where he is compelled by unavoidable reasons to attend in part to secular affairs, he is governed by "the law of necessity."

The fact that St. Paul wrought with his own hands—being a tent-maker—cannot be considered as an argument for secularity; but, as he states it, "that he might not hinder the gospel of Christ." And even while he was thus nobly employed he delivers the precept, "Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things." And sustains it by the unanswerable argument: "If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing that we shall reap your carnal things?" and, "They which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar."

It is not my purpose to discuss this subject in its general bearing; but, as to remove an [illegible] idea which prevails in some places in reference to St. Paul, and the consequent application to the Christian ministry of his example: "Let them work, as St. Paul did." And this, too, notwithstanding the general confession already alluded to. This can only be esteemed as a very depreciating view taken by those who do not comprehend the self-sacrificing magnanimity of the apostle, and do not take into the account that his consent to the double task of physical toil and preaching, no doubt sustained by miraculous support, "in a hindering," he contributed largely to the extension of the Redeemer's Kingdom.

And, chiefly, attention is called to the contemplation of that most exalted trait of Christian character piety. The other became the wife of which constituted one of the causes of St. Paul's joy: "But I rejoiced in the Lord greatly, that now at the last your care of me hath flourished again." Some impediment had existed, but this was overcome, and now the care of the Philippian church for him had "flourished again."

So we have had our impediments—war and its train of evils, poverty, short crops, taxation, etc., and the changes have been rung on these by the unthoughtful, negligent and stingy members of the church for the last ten years as an excuse for not having a care for the comfort and support of those who have devoted all to the salvation of souls. To the command of God to give, the answer is: "We are too poor to give." To the Macedonian cry the response is made: "Our taxes and support of our families take all we make." There is some poetry in these responses, although they are so homely and commonplace. They have one essential feature of poetry—phantasia. It is a mere fancy which deceives them. Take an illustration: I know three churches; the worshipers in which spend annually $1,000 for tobacco, and yet the maximum of contributions to the gospel is $200. What a difference! I am not writing against the use of tobacco, nor do I say that the money so expended should be given to the church; but I ask, in the name of common sense, why should a person be converted into a poet when the claims of the church are presented? If nearly $20 a week goes for luxury, as in the case cited, surely the cry of "no money" and "hard times" should cease. It seems to me that the cause is the absence of that flourishing again of care.

Ought these persons any longer to make "no money" and "hard times" as excuses for not caring for those whose great work is to lead the world to the possession of an "enduring substance?" And yet it is done, and with such wonderful complacency, while the clouds of incense are rising to the god of pleasure from early dawn till late in the night.

Shall we ever have a change for the better? I do hope that our people will take this matter into serious and prayerful thought. Surely there are thousands more besides St. Paul who would "rejoice in the Lord greatly" if there were on the part of the church more of this flourishing of care and communicating with their afflictions; and less frequently the minister of Christ would enter into the pulpit and preach to a people who, he could but feel conscious, were unmerciful to himself, and forgetful of the solemn vows which they have made to "support the institutions of the church."

THOMAS PRICE.

The Preacher Welcomed.

DEAR FRIENDS: The time has come when our ministers will be coming to their new works. Let us all resolve to do all we can to make their new homes as pleasant as can be. They, with their wives and little ones, are once more called on to break up pleasant associations, and go they know not where. They are coming from conference reports all in want of something a loving welcome, at any rate. I hope every county has its parsonage. If not, dear friends, do not let another year pass without getting one; and make it comfortable. I know from experience that it will not cost any one much if all will help. Let one give something, and another, and so on till it has every home comfort.

Be sure your beds are all that the most fastidious would desire. If you have not bed clothes sufficient, get the young folks to help you. Get your Sabbath school interested. Let each class—even the smallest will help—make a quilt, each one making so many squares. Then let all get together, and have a quilting, or pay some one to do it for them. If you never tried this plan, do it now, and you will see how willing these young hands are to help. After the house is all comfortable—and it cannot be without two large, easy chairs—their turn to the larder. Do have that well filled. Almost every one can give something to this. Never rest till it is all you would have your own at home. The wood pile comes next. Do not stop at one load of wood; but get it as though you were determined to keep the fire going all winter. Then let the boys do their part by cutting and piling, all ready for use. Then when your minister with a smile, have the fire burning, and a good hot meal all ready for him, and he will feel that he has at last got home, and will be ready for the pulpit when the time comes.

I will say nothing about the opposites of all this. Too many, I fear, will be familiar with it. But, dear friends, do let us do all we can to stop such receptions. It is enough to chill their hearts. Their faith in God alone sustains them, and the knowledge of doing their Master's will is all the pleasure they will find in such a work. I am sorry for them, and will do all in my power to make their stay here a happy one.

MRS. S. J. B.

Giving to the Lord.

MR. EDITOR: Few there are, I fear, who rightly estimate this great privilege, and set aside a due portion of their income for the service of God. We regard it too much as a duty, and not as a privilege. What are we poor mortals, that the mighty God should so honor us as to consider the money given to his ministers, his church and his poor as offered to himself. From the infancy of the world sacrifices have been offered and accepted. Abel, Noah, Abraham and the patriarchs offered to the Lord. The Israelites gave, by the command of God, the tenth of all; besides which they gave the first fruits, the burnt offering, the drink offering, the meat offering, the sin offering and the peace offering. In the study of Leviticus we see that the Jews gave no small part of their income; and in giving were blessed, and in refusing to give lost many blessings. The prophet Malachi, reproving them when they became negligent in giving, speaks thus: "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse, for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in my house, and prove me now herewith, says the Lord of hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Is this applicable to our case? Have we robbed God by withholding our tithes? A large portion of the sacrifices offered by the Jews were for the maintenance of the priests. The Lord speaks to Aaron thus: "The meat offering, the trespass offering, the sin offering reserved from the fire, is for the priests; also the heave offering, the wave offering, the best of the oils, the best of the wine, and the first fruits offered." When the blessed Savior sent forth his disciples to preach his word he bade them "take no scrip, neither two coats, neither shoes nor staves, for the workman is worthy of his meat." The duty of ministerial support is thus so plainly written that "he who runs may read." Do we heed? Have we given to our minister what we could and should give? Have we given of our love, sympathy and money? Or have we withheld all these? Have we promised him $10, and given him $8; or perhaps nothing? If we must plead guilty here, we have robbed God, and cannot expect his blessing. Have we given to God's poor, or have we turned coldly away? Will it be said to us: "I was hungered and ye gave me no meat, I was thirsty and ye gave me no drink, I was a stranger and ye took me not in, naked and ye clothed me not, sick and in prison and ye visited me not?" Will we hear the fearful mandate: "Depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire?" Let us review the past, and mourn over our selfishness, and in future, by God's grace, give more liberally to our ministers, our church, the poor and all good causes, remembering that "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

E. W.

STAND BY THE SABBATH.—There is no institution of greater importance in this country than our Sabbath. And consequently there is none that ought to be guarded and defended with greater zeal and watchfulness than this. As a matter of mere physical economy and safety, every toiling and laboring citizen in the land should defend the Sabbath, and insist upon its strict observance as a day of rest; for no laboring man, under this simple view, can do without this rest. Both his mind and his body need this. And it has been already demonstrated, without the least doubt, that both the health and the continuance of human life largely depend upon the proper observance of the Sabbath.

But, higher considerations press the claims of this day upon us. We all need a day in every seven on which to reflect upon those great questions [illegible] and peace. We must bring ourselves to these questions, and without this day, and its sacred moments and means of grace, it is impossible to accomplish a work so very momentous.

There are just at this time many a tempted one encroaching upon the observance of religious institution, the Sabbath day. Some are striving to turn this rest into a day of sport and pastime, and others are disposed to make it a day of profit and gain. No such encroachments as these are should be allowed; for no one can ponder the fatal consequences of such an allowance. With the continued desecration of this day will come its total abolition. And this will surely be followed by its immediate overthrow. And if you destroy your Sabbath you undermine the Bible, the Christian church, the Sabbath school and the religion of Christ.—Christian World.

OBITUARIES.

ANN SOPHIA DIRKER was a native of the Island of Saint Bartholomew, in the West Indies. Born on the third of February, 1823, she died on the twenty-second of December, 1875. She was a sister of Rev. E. J. Halberg, of precious memory, and was married to George B. Dirker, who left her a widow in 1847. She joined the Moreau Street church on probation, May 19, 1844, and in due course was received into full connection. About eighteen years ago Sister Dirker was first attacked by the disease which finally caused her death. Since 1850 she was confined to her bed, being very often in great pain; and since about the close of the war she was unable either to move or feed herself. Before she was confined at home she was a regular attendant at church, her seat in God's house never being vacant on the Sabbath.

So complete was the spiritualizing effect of her prolonged and severe bodily affliction that she was always cheerful, and never known to murmur against God. She ever displayed the Christian graces of submission and patience, in very truth suffering unto the glory of her Maker. She added not either to her own burden, or to that of the loving hearts around her, by the least complaint; but rather, herself upheld, comforted and upborne by the sweet consolations of the Spirit and the delightful companionship of her Savior, she was an inspirer to all about her, encouraging, strengthening, blessing and making better all who came near her. It was interesting and profitable to God's people to note the gracious work of severe affliction as so gloriously displayed in the case of Sister Dirker; and it was their joy to converse with her, and learn of her wonderful testimony to the goodness and loving kindness of God. She had studied the Bible, and had so hid the word in her heart that the precious promises were glorious realities, and the source of much comfort and strength to her during the long years of her sickness. On one occasion, toward the last, she quoted to a dear friend by her bedside these words of utmost confidence: "I fear no evil." "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." Prayer meetings were often held in her sick-chamber, and they were always seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Ministers were in the habit of frequently visiting her, and their uniform experience was that they came away strengthened, encouraged, and the wiser in the ways of God toward his children. Religion never was seen to better advantage than in the case of Sister Dirker, and none could fail to recognize in her one in whom "patience had its perfect work." Having suffered the righteous will of God for long years of her life, in death she pillowed her head upon the Master's bosom, and passed from earth in the sure hope of the resurrection of the just. Beyond a doubt, hers is "the exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

DIED, in Amite City, La., January 22, 1876, Mrs. MARY KINCHEN, born Courtney, in the seventy-sixth year of her age. Her last illness was of short duration—five and a half days—during which she suffered much, but bore her sufferings with Christian fortitude and resignation, being more concerned for the comfort of those who waited upon her than for her own. She leaves three children, seventeen grandchildren and three great grandchildren, who mourn her departure, but not as those without hope.

Sister Kincher was a native of Mississippi, and for more than fifty years was an acceptable member of the Methodist Church, delighting in the ordinances of the house of God, and has left a precious example to her descendants. On the Sunday preceding her death she was in her place in the sanctuary, and remained after the services were over to attend a Church Conference, at which the [illegible] reviving prayer and class meetings came up, when she gave audible expression of the pleasure she felt at being permitted again to enjoy these precious means of grace, promising to attend whenever her health and strength would permit. But, alas! her fond, anticipations were never to be realized. The Master had said, "It is enough; come up higher;" and she returned to her home to die. The same night she was stricken with dis-ease, and on the following Saturday her immortal spirit, ransomed by the precious blood of a crucified Savior, winged its flight to realms of bliss and joy.

On the Thursday night before this, as her pastor, with some friends and some of her family, were about her bed, when they began to sing:

[illegible]

with the chorus,

[illegible]

She joined in the singing with much fervor, and sang as long as her strength would permit. When asked if all was well with her, she replied: "O yes, there is not a cloud on my pathway." Her pathway lay out before her, onward and upward, from earth to heaven. She has traveled it, and is now singing praises to God and to the Lamb.

C. S. S.

JOHN FELDER died on the twentieth of December, 1875, at his own pleasant home in Pike county, Miss. "And he died in a good old age, full of days, riches and honor." He was converted at the first camp meeting held near where Magnolia now stands, in 1811, then a wilderness. A consistent, pious, harmless, useful life for sixty-four years has resulted from that conversion, which he has often told the writer he never doubted. He was then eighteen years old on the seventh of May. In the year 1833 he moved to Topisaw, where he was known as one of the supporters of a camp meeting for fifteen years by many of our Methodist ministers, members and large congregations. He was a successful Christian, a model man, and was called the patriarch of the church. I alluded to him in the ADVOCATE of November 11, second page, under the heading, "The Summit District Camp Meeting and Fruit." Some two years since he told the writer that his stay with us would be short, and requested him to preach his funeral—that he was ready to go. His confidence was founded in Christ. Several times since, even while death was evidently approaching, he repeated the request to his kind, attentive children and relatives. He was the son of Peter Felder, who came to Mississippi in the year 1810, from South Carolina, landing his boat in Natchez. His son John and others of the boys came through the Indian nations, with the horses, to Tanglipahoa, about one and a half miles from Magnolia. From thence John Felder went to Natchez to meet the family. Reaching the city on his seventeenth birthday, he was about one week in suspense, when the boat hove in sight, with all safe. Now more than one hundred of his relatives are residing near the living, paying, prosperous church of which he was a member and exhorter. They are Methodists, and eternity will disclose the force and extent of John Felder's precept and example. May the present and future generations be like him.

E. R. STRICKLAND.

MINERVA J. DEPRIEST, wife of R. J. Carroll, was born in Lexington, Ky., on the tenth of June, 1815, and died in Franklin parish, La., on the third of May, 1875.

She moved with her parents to the State of Mississippi during her early childhood; thence to Tensas parish, La., where she was married to C. W. Kirke, May 1, 1862. Her first husband died in September, 1867, leaving two children. She then moved to Georgia, where she was married on the thirtieth of December, 1869, to R. J. Carroll. She then returned with her husband and children, and settled in Franklin parish, La., where she spent the remainder of her life. She united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the year 1867, from which time she lived the life of a consistent Christian.

Naturally of an amiable disposition, her adorning was that of a meek and quiet spirit. Her pathway in life was not strewn with flowers, but she was always resigned to the Master's will; and no doubt, when called upon to exchange the cross for the crown, she realized that to die is gain. In her last illness she said that she was "not afraid to die," for that her mother had taught her to love God when young, and she had never forgotten it. How much depends on a mother's early teaching! She left a husband to mourn her loss, and six children, in all, to need a mother's care and love. Her children, we believe, have found kind friends in some measure to supply a mother's place. These were her last words:

A. M. WALKER.

FRIEND after friend departs. Another that formed a part of the circle I was privileged to know and love twenty-four years ago has just left the church militant for the church triumphant—MARY HOWELL. She was a native of England, but when she came to America and to New Orleans I know not. When I came to this city she was a member of the Poydras Street church, and had been [illegible]. During all the years I was pastor at Carondelet she was a consistent, faithful Christian, punctual and constant in all her duties as a church member. She was a woman of more than average mind and mental culture. Fluent and sprightly in conversation, she was a pleasant companion. She was high-spirited and independent in her feelings and views. Though she was the subject of much affliction, and her lot was somewhat a lonely one, I never heard her complain. She accepted her situation in life with uncomplaining cheerfulness and resignation. Her life was such as to command the respect and esteem of all who knew her. Spiritually she habitually wore the wedding garment and kept bright her lamp, and met her latter end in faith and hope. She died January 10, 1876.

J. B. WALKER.

DIED, at Bogue Chitto, December 8, 1875, Mrs. M. L. CELESTINE SASSER, daughter of R. B. and Ann Willard, aged twenty-one years, two months and one day. She was born October 7, 1854. She was married on the twenty-fifth of November, 1874, to Mr. James Sasser.

Her sickness was of long duration and great suffering, all of which she bore with Christian fortitude. She seemed to be well aware that death was near, and was resigned to the will of God. She was a strict member of the Baptist Church, and lived up to all its rules and requirements. She was truly a meek and pious lady, and beloved by all her acquaintances. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord; for they cease from their labors, and their works do follow them."

DIED, in Waterproof, La., January 16, 1876, of typhoid fever, KATIE ELLA HORNBERGER, last surviving child of Jacob and Aurora Hornberger, aged four years. The Master has taken home his own lovely flower.

B. C.

When faith gets a view of the unsearchable riches of God's grace in and by and through Jesus Christ, then the believer longs to be in heaven to behold the Fountain-head of all grace and glory. Faith longs to cease to be faith. This is a strange and strong act of faith, a strange desire in a believer. O when shall I cease to be a believer and become a seer? When shall Time's glass be done away, and the full-eyed vision of glory succeed? When shall both faith and hope cease, and love fill their room?—Traill.

A little Aberdeen girl, two years old, brought her father's pen back to him and said she "wanted some [illegible] put into it."

THUNDER AT MIDNIGHT.

BY CARL D. HAYNE.

night wakeneth, Through my startled brain sudden thunder crashed a chord of pain, and awe-struck, hearkened! Overhead, one long, loud, reverberant peal of dread,

possessed it called, till, as a sea of fire,
sullen clamor gathered, must wave by wave retire;

half reluctant, up the heights of space repellent thunder subsided into grace;

angry, harsh menace changed to murmurs low
the lost south wind's troubled in the snow, ading through a hisperous echoes less and less,

the last echo sleeps in gentleness.

so calmed am I of that law of old,
called down the slopes of awful Sinai rolled, men with judgment terrors; yet, at last sightening flame and mystic tumult passed, passed down the ways, echoing less and less heaven's wrath, till, changed to tenderness, vengeful law, which once man's faith sacrificed, into mercy on the heart of Christ.

The Aboriginal Races of Eastern Asia.

In the countries of Southern and Eastern Asia there are aboriginal races which have been driven from their ancient holdings by the pressure of stronger races, and who now for the most part occupy the fastnesses of the hills, or the least productive regions of the lowlands. Each of these aboriginal tribes as yet has had the gospel made known to them have shown a greater readiness to receive it than the civilized races who have been indoctrinated in and are under the power of Brahminism or Buddhism. There has been a very remarkable turning to Christianity on the part of the aboriginal Kols, the Shanars and Santhals of India, and the Karens of Burmah, and it is hoped that missionary labors which are about to be begun among the aboriginal tribes of China and Japan will prove equally successful.

THE WILD TRIBES OF CHINA.

There are no less than forty-one of these wild tribes occupying the mountainous districts of the southwestern provinces of China. The name Miau is used by the Chinese as a general term for all these uncivilized dwellers on the mountains, but it is not applied to every tribe by the people themselves. They speak several dialects, and differ among themselves in customs, government and dress. Their language differs entirely from the Chinese, but too little is known of it to ascertain its analogies to other tongues. They worry arms, and are inclined to live at peace with the Chinese, but resist every attempt to penetrate into their fastnesses.

THEIR RELIGIOUS RITES.

Their religious rites consist of various sacrifices of an ox, a tiger or a dog, alleged sometimes to the great ancestor or founder of their race, and sometimes to avert sickness or death, or to propitiate the powers that rule the weather. The majority of them are not idolaters, strictly speaking—that is to say, they do not worship images—still they have little or no knowledge of the one and true living God, even as revealed in nature, and they know nothing at all of him as revealed in his word, and in the person and work of the Lord Jesus Christ. This, we trust, however, will not much longer continue, for two English missionaries have been appointed to go to one of the provinces (Yun-nan) in which they are found, via Burmah, and they have already reached the latter country. They are to go up the Irrawaddy as far as Bhamo, on the Burman frontier; and then, as soon as they consider it at all safe, to make their way into the Yun-nan province. It was in this region that Mr. Margary, the English consul, was killed, and the other members of his exploring expedition were attacked, with the connivance and encouragement, it is believed, of the Chinese military authorities. But the action of the English government in the matter, we hope, will make it comparatively safe for the missionaries to enter this field.

THE ABORIGINES OF JAPAN.

In the northern part of the Island of Yezzo there is a remnant, numbering from twenty to thirty thousand, of the Ainos, the aborigines of the Japanese islands. They have been kept in a condition of degraded subjection. They live mainly by the chase, aided by rice which they receive from the Japanese in return for game. Money, it is said, they are not allowed to employ as a medium of exchange. The heavy bearded faces of the men, and the tattooed faces of the women make them foreign-looking even to the Japanese. They speak a language quite different from their masters. By Lathau they have been assigned to the eastern branch of the Esquimaux. Their creed also is very different from the Japanese, if, indeed, a few vague regions notions may be considered to constitute a creed. They are a race hitherto untouched by the influences of the gospel of Christ; but the Rev. Mr. Dening, of the English Missionary Society, and a native assistant have recently gone to this island, and we hope they may have opportunities of bringing the gospel to bear upon this long-despised and downtrodden race.—At Home and Abroad.

Geologic Time Must be Limited.

It is by no means a difficult operation to cause life to disappear from any mass of protoplasmic matter which we may take in hand; but one has as yet to learn that science has worked the problem the other way. Given a living body, to reduce it to elements is not difficult; given the elements to produce life is something science has not done, and is something to which it seems to have made as yet no approach. Life only comes from life; and one form of life only comes from a previous form of the same kind. Life has hitherto appeared only in fixed forms. And no selection of man, nor natural selection, as far as science has shown, has been able to transmute one form into another, or, if translated, to render the new form permanent.

It is getting fashionable now (and fashion has a great power in scientific speculation, as in other matters) to assume the existence of a primordial germ—how that germ arrived is a problem which admits of a wide solution—and from that germ, to derive by evolution, through the reciprocal interchange of organism and environment during countless ages, all the teeming forms of life with which this earth is now peopled. Somehow life made a beginning—perhaps borne by some aerolite which survived the convulsion which tore into tatters some former world, and, after many wanderings through a homeless space, at last found refuge in this earth of ours, bearing with it the seeds of life. Science gravely assures us that somehow life began to be. And then, through a method of trial of error—through exhausting all possible ways, until failures were somehow eliminated, and the right relation between the organism and its environment was stumbled on—through this curious path life traveled to the manifold forms in which it is now embodied, and all the different kinds of living things began to be, and were perpetuated. Now it is freely admitted that this is quite a legitimate conjecture on the part of science; for, as such, science is neither theistic nor anti-theistic. It is quite entitled to pursue its own path, and to disregard all consequences, theological or philosophical, which may seem to follow as results from its investigations and discoveries. It has its own proper work to do, and no intelligent man will quarrel with it for doing that work. But while it is granted that Darwinism has an unassailable position simply as a scientific conjecture, which may or may not be true, and as yet is in a state awaiting proof and verification, it is rather rapid work, we must submit, to assume it as true, and on it as a foundation to build a vast superstructure—so vast as in no part to leave any room for creative intelligence or providential purpose. When, on the assumption of the truth of Darwinism, all opposing notions are contemptuously set aside, it is time seriously to demur, and to remind its advocates of the principles they themselves advocate in other fields of knowledge as the condition of scientific proof. There is, it appears to me, no one condition of strict inductive generalization so urged to the method of Darwinian proof. The followers of Mr. Darwin tell us that they take their time from geology. Following Sir Charles Lyell, they think they have immeasured time to deal with. No limit can be set, they say, to the countless ages through which the forces which prevail now have been working on the globe on which we live. Granted time enough, and geology can account, it says, for all changes on the earth's surface. Now it is and theology which here steps in, to say to geology and Darwinians that infinite time cannot be granted. One section of science sternly confronts another, and natural philosophy lays down as its unanswerable dictum that from many converging lines of proof—proofs drawn from the well-known laws of the conduction and radiation of heat—from the expenditure of the energy of the sun, and from other things, the duration of the earth's existence in the past as a place fit for life is limited, and cannot have extended beyond a certain time. Sir William Thomson, in his profoundly scientific papers read before the Geological Society of Glasgow in 1868-9, has laid an imperative necessity on geology, and consequently on Darwinism, to quicken the march of events within its province. As soon as any limit is laid on time—and such a limit is ingenuously laid on it by Sir William Thomson—the theory of evolution expires for lack of breathing space. Given the present progress of evolution, and the present stability of fixed forms of life, what time would be required for the evolution of all forms of life from one germ? The greater the antiquity of man, or any other present form of life, the worse for the theory of evolution."—British and Foreign Evangelical Review.

Egypt.

ITS POSITION IN RELIGIOUS HISTORY.

Looking down from the Pyramids upon Egypt, it was impossible not to be struck with its unique position in the religious history of the world. From the earliest times, down through that long series of ages in which a divine revelation was being given to the world through the medium of the chosen people, Egypt stands forth in history as the chief antagonistic and unchanging enemy of the church of God. We except the period when Jacob and his family found a sunny refuge in Goshen; but how few generations elapsed before their house of refuge became their house of bondage, and Israel in the brick-kilns became the most cruelly oppressed and downtrodden of slaves! Egypt, in consequence, became the vast theater on which the more awful attributes of God were manifested, just as Palestine became the selected scene in which the wonders of his grace should be revealed. Those ten plagues in which the whole nation was punished, and shame put upon their false divinities, through the very form of the miraculous judgment, awfully culminating in the death of every first-born in the land, and in the destruction of the proud Pharaoh and his armed charioteers in the Red sea, were unapproached in their terrible scale of retribution in any of the other nations of the world; and yet this long line of ever-darkening and deepening judgments taught the guilty people and their rulers no lesson of repentance. All through the centuries of the Jewish Church and the period of the prophetic revelation Egypt appears either as the tempter or as the persecutor of Israel, dividing the guilt, in this respect, with the Babylonian and Assyrian monarchies to the east of the sacred land.

No burden, therefore, reads more darkly in the books of the prophets than that of Egypt. There is a minuteness of detail, a graphic picturing and intensity of coloring, an adaptation to the characteristic features of Egyptian scenery, in such elaborate predictions as those in the nineteenth chapter of Isaiah, and in certain passages of Ezekiel, that cannot be exceeded. These were stroked and placed on record when Egypt was still in the meridian of her power, and contending with the great monarchies on the banks of the Euphrates and the Tigris for the supremacy of the nations. And yet they were all fulfilled. With Gibbon and Volney as involuntary witnesses, and modern Egypt looked down upon by its from the Pyramids, we behold events corresponding not only to every line, but to every letter of the inspired oracles. The harmony is startling. When we read in those prophets that Egypt should "become the basest of nations;" that "there should no more be a prince of the land of Egypt;" that the country should become "destitute of that whereof it was full;" and when we place side by side with these oracles the facts that during the long ages of the Mameluke supremacy her rulers were imported strangers and slaves; that for two thousand years no native prince has ever sat upon her throne, but its sovereignty has often been sold to the highest bidder; that the papyrus and the flax, and the manufacture of fine linen, which were once her glory, have now vanished, and the last which was once, with Sicily, the granary of the Roman empire, is scarcely able to supply bread for its own inhabitants, it would be madness to call such things as these accidental coincidences.—Dr. Andrew Thomson.

ARTIFICIAL SERMONS.—Sermons are meant to be heard, not read. This fact must rule not only their style, but the treatment of subjects. Each statement, sentence and word is spoken but once, heard but once, and must be apprehended by the listener immediately or be lost. That what is said may be apprehended it must, therefore, be so said that all who hear may readily entertain on the wing. But to exhibit truth in this way takes time. A good marksman will hit a flying dove, but if the dove were compressed into the size of a humming-bird he would find his skill baffled. Microscopic condensations have their value, but it requires microscopic eyes to see them.

No topic can be chosen for every sermon is pertinent—illustrations. Of this the gospel sketches of the parables of our Lord, and the brief outlines or Acts of some sermons of the apostles, furnish both rules and models. Skill in illustration is the secret of success in the wise of every effective preacher. But such illustrations require time. And, we may safely assert, when they are appropriate and well managed a congregation will always gladly allow time for them. People will not grudgingly count the minutes while the preacher is presenting the truth to them "like apples of gold in pictures of silver"—literally, like golden-richly yellow apples offered in silver baskets.—The Reformed Church Monthly.

THE ETTRICK SHEPHERD.—Lockhart tells a very interesting anecdote of Hogg's first visit to Scott's residence. Shortly after the first meeting of the two poets Hogg came to Edinburg with a flock of sheep for sale. Scott invited him to dinner. He went, and when he entered the drawing-room he found Mrs. Scott, who was then in ill health, reclining on a sofa. The shepherd, after being presented, and making his best bow, forthwith took possession of another sofa placed opposite hers, and stretched himself at full length upon it; for, he said afterward, "I thought I could never do wrong to copy the lady of the house." He was dressed "precisely as an ordinary herdsman who attends cattle to market," and his hands and shoes bore unmistakable evidence of his vocation. As will be readily supposed, the lady of the house did not observe with perfect equanimity the destruction of her chintz-covered furniture; but of this Hogg remarked nothing—dined heartily, and drank freely, and afforded plenty of merriment for the company (which was a rather large one) by jest, anecdote and song. As the liquor operated he grew familiar; from "Mr. Scott" he advanced to "Sherra," thence to "Walter" and "Wattie," until at supper he fairly convulsed the whole party by addressing Mrs. Scott as "Charlotte."

CLOSE QUESTIONS.—Your tempers. How are they? Do you become impatient under trial; fretful when chided or crossed; angry, revengeful when injured; vain when flattered; proud when prospered; complaining when chastened; unbelieving when seemingly forsaken; unkind when neglected? Are you subject to discontent, to ambition, to selfishness? Are you worldly? Covetous of riches, of vain pomp and parade, of indolence, of honor, of ease? Are you unfeeling, contemptuous of others, seeking your own, boasters, proud, lovers of your own selves? Beware! These are the sediments of the old nature! Nay, if they exist in you, in however small a degree, they are demonstrative that the old man of sin is not dead. It will be a sad mistake if you detect these evils within, and yet close your eyes to them and continue to make professions of holiness. These are not infirmities—they are indications of want of grace.—Bishop Foster.

A gentleman who was sending away his Irish butler for no exemplary conduct, but who, like most masters, was willing to make the best of him when he was going to plague somebody else, made this parting speech: "I have said you were honest, John, with a good conscience, but I have stretched a point in saying you are sober." "Sure, your honor, could you not stretch another point, then, and say I am frequently sober?"

Religious Intelligence.

—The annual returns from the district meetings of the Methodist Church in Ireland show an increase in membership of 242 during the last year. The total number of members is 29,010.

—The eighth biennial conference of the "Friends' First-Day School Association of North America" was held recently in Philadelphia. There were reported 32,841 scholars, with an average attendance of 19,768, and 2,895 officers and teachers.

—Among the Mohammedan converts received by the Presbyterian missionaries in Persia was a soldier, who stated that two hundred men in the army thought as he did, and were holding secret meetings in regard to the Christian religion.

—Nine Methodist missionaries are under appointment for foreign fields and will shortly sail for their respective missions. One goes to South America, one to Bulgaria, four will join the Bombay, Bengal and Madras missions, and two are for the India mission.

—Not many are as much interested in missionary intelligence as was John Gossner, the founder of the German society bearing his name. When over seventy years of age he learned the English language that he might find out more about the state of the missionary work.

—The receipts of the largest five foreign missionary societies in England during the year 1875 were as follows: Wesleyan Missionary Society, $899,739; Church Missionary Society, $879,175; Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, $771,131; London Missionary Society, $417,765; Baptist Missionary Society, $240,695.

Rev. O. Gibson reports in the California Advocate, as a new and interesting feature in the Chinese chapel service on Jackson street, San Francisco, the fact that heathen Chinamen remain after the meeting is dismissed to "wrangle" with the preachers, asking questions, and urging objections to the doctrine preached. The congregations crowd the chapel every day.

—At the late meeting of the London Religious Tract Society its chairman said that he owed a great deal to a tract. It was a narrative tract which a relative had placed in a box of novels and sent out to him in the Crimea. He had read the novels through more than once, and was at last compelled to turn to the tract. This, aided by the prayers of many, began a good work in him, which he was persuaded God would perform until the day of Jesus Christ.

Dr. Brown, of the American Baptist mission in Assam, reports February 16 the disastrous loss of the mission chapel, in a fire occurring ten days previously, which swept over six or eight acres of houses. This scatters temporarily the school, and interferes with the Sabbath worship. The leaders had gradually increased from six to thirty, and the school had been opened with the most encouraging prospects. The parables of Christ have been printed in Japanese. The Scripture manual had been well received and highly commended.

The Santhals in India are greatly addicted to the use of intoxicating drinks, and their country is studded over with places for the sale of liquors. When these people, however, are converted every Santhal understands at once that he is no more to touch the accursed thing. All the Christians among them are total abstainers. There is another gratifying feature in their conversion. As soon as they have found forgiveness they feel themselves constrained to tell the gospel to others. In this way the number of converts is very rapidly increasing.

—Dr. Mullens, returning from Madagascar, testifies that there, in a spot which had never previously been visited by a missionary, and which was unknown to geographers, he had found Christian churches, with all the signs of true Christian vitality, which had grown up solely through the reading and study of the Bible by those simple people. A year or two ago Sir Bartle Frere bore similar testimony. Such evidence is of the deepest interest and greatest value, and must be taken into account in all discussions with those who reject the book which we regard as the word of God.

Rev. D. Vaughan, a well-known laborer of twenty years' standing in the Church Missionary Society, illustrated the change which has come over the Hindoos with regard to their religion by drawing a contrast between the manner in which Calcutta street preachers were received twenty years ago and are received now. Then it was necessary to direct heavy blows against Hindoo idolatry, and the missionary was often obliged to endure the roughest treatment. Now, if he seriously attacks the Hindoo gods and the popular creed, the likelihood is that some one in the crowd will say: "We don't want to hear any more about that. We know it as well as you can tell us. That sort of thing has passed away. Tell us something new."

—The foreign missions of the Free Church of Scotland are carried on in India and South Africa. There are 89 stations, with 28 European and 7 native missionaries, 20 European and 135 native teachers, and 88 catechists and colporteurs, making a total of 278 laborers. The native churches have 2,387 communicants and 1,930 baptized adherents. During the past year 236 communicants were received. The schools for which the Scotch missions are, since Dr. Duff's day, famous, number 159, with 11,393 scholars (3,290 girls.) The station most favored during the year with spiritual blessing was Lovedale, in Caffraria, where a remarkable revival has taken place, especially among the scholars of the Lovedale Institution. The receipts of the Mission Board were larger than in any previous year, the total amount being $294,420. This, however, includes $73,055 received from the English government for the support of schools.

BABY'S PRAYER.

BY MRS. S. M. WALSH.

When the children kneel down by their bed at night,
Three bowish heads all in a row,
With a flutter of locks, in her right hand spread all white,
The baby comes last, meeting them so.

She bows her bright face on the side of the bed,
And mumbles her sweet little prayer,
Funny words, you would think, could not be to be what she said,
For we none of us know but the fairy.

But sometimes I think, when she raises her face,
With so much delight in her eyes,
Perhaps the dear Savior knows just what she said,
And her prayer in his heart finds a place.

For Our Dumb Animals.

The Little Man.

Bobbie's ticket for the day was marked TRUE. Oh, how angry he was!—angry with his good, kind aunt, who taught him, and who was almost as sorry to give him this ticket as he was to receive it. And yet, as he rushed out into the yard his fair forehead was drawn into an ugly frown, and his pretty lips were pushed out into a shocked pout.

"She had no right to do it, when she knows that I had my book in my hand all the morning. Paper will be so soiled with me when I show it to Mint, and then I shan't have the prize he promised me;" and he threw himself down under a large tree. Presently, as he grew calmer, he said: "I know I didn't study as hard as ever I could, but I studied some, and she might have given me a Good ticket, when she knows I want to get the prize. She is a mean thing, and I don't love her a bit, and I'll tell papa—" But Bobbie began to feel very stupid just then, and his last sentence was not finished.

After a while—it seemed hardly a second to Bobbie—he felt a light tap on his shoulder. He looked around, and there stood a little man not more than a foot high. He had bright black eyes, red lips curled up at the corners, little black "duck-tails" kinked over his round head, and plump cheeks that looked as if a rose had kissed each of them. He wore a little blue jacket fashioned up with big brass buttons, yellow knee-breeches, and high, red-top boots, like those Bobbie's father had just given him. But what engaged Bobbie's attention most was a pair of wings sticking out from his shoulders; they looked like the wings of the pigeons at grandpa's. Bobbie looked to see how they got out of his jacket, and found that it had holes cut in it for the wings to grow through.

Bobbie saw all this while the little man was making a polite bow, before saying:

"Good evening, Bobbie. Sorry to see you in a bad humor. Why, ha! ha! you don't seem to know me!" laughing such a merry little laugh that Bobbie could not help joining in it.

"No; I never saw you in my life."

"Didn't you? Why I belong to you, and am with you all the time." Bobbie was more astonished than ever. At last a bright thought struck him. "Oh, you are Santa Claus!" said he; "but I didn't know you came for the summer!"

The little stranger shook his head with another laugh.

"Well, you must be a fairy."

"No, no; I am not a fairy, though I sometimes think I am slightly related to them. But I will tell you who I am. I am one of your best friends. I try to help you to be good. Do you see my spear?"

For the first time Bobbie noticed in his hand what looked like a long needle with a handle.

"Well," continued the little man, "when you are not good I stick you with my spear, to let you know that you are doing wrong. Now you know, Bobbie, that you were idle to-day; so you should not have been angry with your aunt; you know with what pleasure she gives you a Good ticket to show to mamma and papa when you are a good boy. I pricked you when I saw you dallying over your books, but you did not seem to notice me; and when you got angry I pricked you again, and my little spear will hurt you until you ask God's forgiveness, and apologize to your aunt for your naughty behavior. Whenever you do wrong acknowledge it immediately, and it will be much better for you. Now if you would like to know my name, you shall have it. It is Conscience. Now I will pierce you again for being so naughty to-day," and he plunged his spear into Bobbie's breast.

Bobbie sprang up and looked around; then he rubbed his eyes and peeped behind the tree, and up into its thick branches, but nowhere could he find the little man. He still felt the pain Conscience's spear had given him, so he thought he must have flown into the bright cloud above him; but he wished he had seen him as he was going up. Then he remembered what Conscience had told him, and, falling on his knees under the tree, he asked God to forgive him. Then he ran home and found auntie, and begged her pardon, and when he had gained it he was surprised to find the pain all gone, and he felt happy again.

At the dinner table Bobbie told all about the little man, named Conscience, he had seen. All laughed at his story, and his papa said: "You must have been asleep, Bob, for nowhere but in dreamland could you have seen such a comical figure as that."

"No, indeed, papa, I was wide awake, and I declare I saw him. I will never do wrong again, for Conscience hurts so bad."

I cannot tell you that he kept his promise, but it is certain that he tried to be a better boy. I think he succeeded. RUTH.

From Our Little Friends.

BOX CREEK, MISS., January 23, 1876.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I have not seen a notice of our Sunday-school in your paper, so I have seated myself in my cozy little chamber this morning to tell you about it, and how well it is flourishing. Dr. T. C. Austin is our superintendent, and his wife is our teacher. We have thirty-one scholars when they attend regularly. Our Sunday school has been organized for some time, but we have never been able to furnish our library with books sufficient to interest our pupils, and we would be glad if some Sunday school would contribute to our library some of the books that they have laid aside. Our city would overflow with joy if the hand of Providence would direct some kind and generous-hearted Sunday school to send us a nice box of books, directed to the care of Dr. T. C. Austin, superintendent of the Methodist Sunday school, at Oak Hill, Clinton, Miss.

Last year Mr. Tusk preached for us the first Sunday in every month, and Mr. Smylie the third Sunday. Mr. Tusk lived in the neighborhood of Oak Hill. They were the first gardens one morgans to the river that grows by the throne of God. They have gone to other fields to preach this year. Mr. Dillehay takes their place in our pulpit.

JULIET.

BOX CREEK, MISS., January 26, 1876.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: Although I am a little girl scarcely seven years old, I have teased my pa to write you a letter for me as I cannot write well enough myself. I love to hear my pa and sisters read the children's letters in your welcome and good paper. I am going to school, and hope I will soon be able to write you a nice little letter myself.

We have a new preacher this year. He has been to see us once, and I think I will like him very much. Last year Father Strickland preached for us, and oh! how I do love him. I hope, Mr. Editor, this letter will not find its way into the waste basket, as may be it deserves; and, if it should not, when I get older I will write you a better one. Good-by.

ANNIE BELL THOMSON.

BOX CREEK, MISS., January 31, 1876.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: You have not let us know how Barney milked the days' nest. I am so anxious to know. But I think, like one of your little correspondents, that Barney is an Irish name. Milk is to take the honey from the hive. Bays' nest means bee-hive. Please tell me if I am right.

We have such a nice preacher this year. We all like him so much, and I hope he may be an instrument, in God's hands, in converting many souls. Our Sabbath school is prospering. I will close by hoping to hear the end of Barney soon.

From your little friend,

FANNIE.

"EVERY FELLOW."—A minister was asked to go and visit a boy who was considered to be dying. Upon entering the room the little sufferer looked up in the minister's face and said: "I want to ask you a question: Did Jesus die to save every fellow?"

"O yes," replied the minister, "Jesus died to save every fellow."

"And will Jesus save every fellow that asks him?"

"O yes," answered the minister, "Jesus will save every fellow that asks him."

"Well, then," continued the boy, "he will save me, because I have asked him." The minister, who had turned round to wipe the tears from his eyes, looked again at the bed, but the little boy had gone to be with that Jesus who died to save every fellow."

The secret mysteries of a divine life, of a new nature, of Christ formed in our hearts—they cannot be written or spoken. A painter can paint would draw a rose, though he may furnish some likeness of it in figure and color, yet he can never paint the scent and fragrancy; or if he would draw a flame, he cannot put a constant heat into his colors; he cannot make his pencil drop a sound. Neither are we able to inclose in words and letters the life, soul and essence of any spiritual truths, and, as it were, to incorporate it in them.—Cudworth.

Learning to Pray

The request of the disciples, "Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples," was evidently suggested by the Savior's prayer which they had just heard. It was as he was praying in a certain place, when he ceased, that they asked to be taught. The prayer on that occasion seems to have convinced them that they were ignorant of this most solemn and important duty. They were not ignorant of what John had enjoined: the forms prescribed by Jewish doctors and teachers were familiar to them. More than their acquaintance with these was their knowledge of the prayers recorded in the Old Testament Scriptures. We might suppose that the disciples had enough instruction on the subject with the psalms before them, with some forms of prayer, public and private, which they had probably used from their childhood, and having already been with the Master for two or three years. Then if this was a second discovery of the Lord's Prayer, they had heard prayer explained and enforced, and the form given in the sermon on the mount, perhaps not more than a twelve month before.

What was there in this particular prayer of Jesus that apparently for the first time awakened in them the conviction that, as yet, they knew not how to pray? When we have heard a truly great and admirable sermon we have gone away with the feeling that we could not preach at all, and we have had similar humiliating confessions to make about prayer when we have been led at the throne of grace by some one specially anointed and qualified for this most spiritual exercise. Something akin to this must have been the thoughts of those who were with Christ and heard that memorable prayer. There was nothing in David or Isaiah that excited in them the sense of their ignorance and destitution, or that aroused in them aspirations for the excellent gift. All their lives they had been praying, and praying well as they supposed, but there was something in this prayer of Christ that revealed the feebleness and poverty of their souls, and their utter lack of that grasp of faith and communion with God which Christ exhibited.

There is no method anywhere that the disciples asked their Master to teach them how to preach. This he did by example and precept, looking forward to the gift of the Holy Ghost as the most essential and complete enlowment for this work. But we do not find that the feeling of insufficiency ever so came upon them during the ministry of Christ that they greatly and urgently asked to be taught to preach. With the Savior's incomparable discourses fresh in their minds they might have questioned whether they or any other could ever fittingly proclaim the gospel; but this duty was, as yet, at a distance, and until after the Savior's resurrection they probably thought little about it. At any rate, the thing they asked for was how to pray. However poorly qualified to preach, they felt themselves still worse off in the duty of prayer, and they may have thought that if they only could pray aright the preaching would be assured in its own time, and when the occasion came.

Besides the sense of spiritual want and the need of a stronger faith there was the conviction that this new dispensation demanded an order of prayer in accord with its superior light and privileges. The prayers of the Old Testament, to be used now, must be vivified and illuminated by the spirit of the New. Compare the prayers of Christ and Paul with those of Moses and David, and the later prophets, and the difference is apparent. Praying under the gospel and in the dispensation of the Spirit is as superior to the conditions of grace and opportunity under which we live. On this occasion the Savior gave the prayer previously enjoined, and with amplifications and illustrations. The friend and the three loaves. The son that asks for bread, the condition of asking, seeking, knocking, and then that promise of promises: "How much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?" are in the sequel. This is prayer in the new dispensation. God's fatherhood is prominent, the sonship of believers is embraced, the gift of the Holy Spirit emphasized. The disciples coin the teachings and still more from the prayer of Jesus, saw that their praying must be adjusted to the new and happier conditions of the gospel law of liberty, and that, should love, faith and spiritual life not find expression in forms adapted to the clearness and completeness of the gospel. John's twilight prayers would not answer, and the inspired supplications of the Old Testament must receive the interpretations of the new and more exalted Christian life. In substance the request was: Lord, teach us to pray as thy disciples as Christians.

There is no literal repetition of the Lord's Prayer in the gospel of John, nor in the Epistles, but we can see, in the writings of Paul especially, how the nature and spirit of Christian prayer had been learned. The letter of Christ's teaching was completed and vitalized by the Holy Spirit. The Epistles abound in examples of prayer, and are abundant in precept, and the Spirit's office is emphatically recognized. We are to pray in the Holy Ghost, and his aid is specially declared: "Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered."

Prayer is something to be learned. The request of the disciples should be that of all who are sincerely bent on serving their Lord. The formula of the Lord's Prayer, repeated from infancy, does not meet the requirement. The fluency and ease of extempore prayer may amount to a singular gift, and the petitions framed in secret as a religious habit may be continually offered, and we may not know how to pray. We can teach prayers to our children, but God must teach them to pray. It is to be learned of Christ in his word and Spirit must guide us. True Christian prayer that looks to a risen and interceding Savior and to the Spirit poured out, that embraces the fatherhood of God and aspires to adoption, that sinks into perfect submission to the divine will, and rejoices in the divine fellowship—must be taught us by God himself.

And when we think of the power of prayer—that it is, after all, the supreme instrument—how essential that it should be learned! Every other aspect of the art of doing good is subordinate to this, and yet it is that of which we are most ignorant. And this ignorance is not always the first to be felt. We may not know how to preach, how to train our children, how to lead our friends to Christ, but do we suspect that our most lamentable defect is in not knowing how to pray? The simplest thing in the world, yet the most difficult. Something that seminaries cannot impart, and that archangels cannot help us to attain, the very loftiest reach of wisdom and grace. Lord, teach us to pray.

Dr. Whedon on Unconditional Fraternity.

I think it was in last November I have not the paper at hand that I called attention, through the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, to a false issue raised by the Southern advocates of unconditional fraternity. Their argument is to the effect that slavery is extinct the war is over, Northern and Southern citizens are, as such, putting away their animosities "shaking hands over the bloody chasm," generous souls in the North are giving money in aid of Southern enterprises, the Centennial year has come, and Boston and Charleston are interchanging courtesies, etc., and therefore the Methodist Episcopal Church South should, without any conditions as to the Plan of Separation, meet the advances of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and settle down into permanent fraternal relations, no matter what discount the latter body puts upon the former by its interpretation and repudiation of that document. I urged—I think successfully—that all their arguments were out of place in considering a settlement of the prime difficulty between the two churches—that this would have been just what it is, had slavery been abolished by the spontaneous action and universal consent of the South, and if the amity between the North and the South had never been disturbed by war.

My opinions are only confirmed by the ground taken by the Northern allies of their brethren who favor unconditional fraternity. Dr. Whedon, editor of the Methodist Quarterly Review, cries out with them most lustily: "Let bygones be bygones." He even does what, I am sure, must be a gross injustice to some of these brethren whom he names as "cordially and with an entirely independent spirit reciprocating the feeling of" his church. We cannot believe that those he mentions can ever stand on his platform, or that between such men and himself there can ever be a "true and honoring fraternity." He heads a sub-section of an article reviewing Dr. Myer's "Disruption," etc., "Rescission of the Plan an Insulting Proposal," which must have been written by some curious sort of "heterophemy" for "the proposal of the Church South to the Methodist Episcopal Church to rescind the action of 1848, repudiating the plan, an insulting proposal." These brethren would scarce take his position here; though, while he "scouts" "the proposal" as not to be considered, they perhaps would not press it on him. And when Dr. Whedon says, "We are willing to shake hands in silent oblivion over the past," they may agree with him; but when he adds, "We are willing, with them, to kneel down before God, while each prays forgiveness for his share of the common sin," perhaps Bishop Kavanaugh, Drs. McFerrin, Abbey, Clark, Rosser and Anderson whom he names will ask him, before they pray, what this "common sin" is, of and for which they are to confess, repent, and seek forgiveness. Dr. Whedon tells of some sin, and he more than intimates that some in the "North yielded to or aided its aggressions," and "were partakers in the sin." This is slavery, that "had no right to exist; that, whether legalized or not, was a sin and crime; the laws that established it are criminal laws; the 'politics' under which it was sheltered were criminal and sinful 'politics.'" Is this the "common sin" for which the Northern "abetters" and Southern brethren who "reciprocate" his "feeling," are now together to ask forgiveness? No doubt if they ever "kneel together," in that act of penitence.

But the matter grows more difficult as Dr. Whedon enlarges on this "insulting proposal." He says the proposition that the maintainers of freedom and government must apologize to the assailants of both for such maintenance is a reverse of the tables altogether ludicrous. It is too much like the culprit expecting the judge to beg pardon for hanging him. Mark the ground taken in the words I have italicised. This is an echo from Dr. Whedon's "clients" in the North of the cry for unconditional fraternity in the South. The political "maintainers of freedom and government" are making peace very forgivingly with the political "assailants of both;" and shall the Church South now "these" assailants of freedom and government" insult their "maintainers for such maintenance" by asking the Methodist Episcopal Church to revise its repudiation, in 1848, of the plan of 1844? As well may the "culprit expect the judge to beg pardon for hanging him!"

Now I am sure the honored men whom Dr. Whedon names can never look upon the proposal of the Church South, which Dr. Whedon esteems an insult, as the culprit's demand for pardon from the judge who is hanging him: and yet the illustration is a fair one whenever slavery, the war, the peace, the attitude of the two sections, or the pacification in progress between the citizens and the politicians on both sides, are brought into this purely ecclesiastical question between the two churches a question older than the war or the peace, than the assault on the "government" or its issues. And these brethren may as well consider, first as last, that the only method of settling the difficulties between the two churches is to throw overboard every other question with regard to them all if they will, to be "bygones be bygones"—except that one question which arose in 1844 1848, and abides yet the only living issue.

It arose in 1844, in the adoption of the Plan of Separation. In 1846 the Southern Conferences, acting upon its provisions in good faith, established a new General Conference jurisdiction, as the Methodist Episcopal Church South. In 1848 that church sought "fraternity" with the Methodist Episcopal Church, which was denied it, and its representative said it would not renew the offer; but it would entertain a reciprocal offer, whenever made as to a legitimate Methodism, predicating "its legitimacy on said plan, which notice was met by a repudiation of the plan in toto—which, if maintained, must always authorize them to say of us as Dr. Whedon does: "Their secession and new church were both illegal and revolutionary."

This our church denies; and it is hardly probable that Dr Whedon and the Northern and Southern brethren who participated in the acts of 1844 will ever kneel together and ask forgiveness for that "common sin." This "insulting proposal," then, had its origin with Dr. Pierce in 1848. It was sustained by our General Conference in 1850. The insult, if it be one, was renewed when Dr. Whedon's Bishops visited our Bishops to propose "union" in 1866; again renewed when Bishop Janes and Dr. Harris visited our General Conference, only semi-officially, in 1870; and, notwithstanding it had been so often repeated, our patient and long-suffering Northern brethren in 1872 counted—now officially—a repetition of the same insult, unless the South was prepared to "eat its words," uttered for the past thirty years. Which of these alternatives did Dr. Whedon and his clients expect—the eating or the insult? If the insult was renewed, who is responsible for it?

And again: how can this demand be tortured into anything like a proposition that the maintainers of freedom and government must apologize to the assailants of both for such maintenance," unless the Methodist Episcopal Church runs the United States government, and supposes the Church South was the Confederacy—neither of which is true? The Church South is no "culprit;" and if the other is the "judge that hanged him," the judge acted wholly beyond his jurisdiction and committed a grievous wrong—to call it by no worse name—against truth and equity, and Christian principle towards its victim.

And so I believe these brethren with whom Dr. Whedon is ready to fraternize will say, though some of them may be so Christian as to forgive the wrong without any retraction, or even to say with Dr. Abbey: "A fig for the Plan of Separation!"

And if it were a matter of mere feeling, others of us might consent to let this nullifying act of 1848 pass away among the "bygones." But it is a matter of fixed principle not to permit our church to be tainted a "secession," or to allow that we hold all the property acquired in the division in 1844 without moral or legal right. The act of 1848 denies to us both. The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States confirmed our legal rights. The repudiation unrescinded is a perpetual denial of our moral rights, and is a standing protest against the justice of that decision. Its morals are necessarily dearer to a Christian community than its legal rights. Dr. Whedon is surprised that "keen-sighted men" do not see that "the rescission of said plan more heterophemy would have no effect upon the property question." He speaks of a division in 1844 "referred to the Annual Conferences, which they refused." He knows well enough that this "division" had reference only to Book Concern property, and the right to our houses of worship, etc., was conferred by the plan—now denied by the repudiation, which is only a legal right even "if the Supreme Court has settled that question forever"—the moral right still being denied. But it has been threatened, time and again, that the legal right will if opportunity offer, be again brought in issue before the Supreme Court: and we are told, I believe slanderously, that its political complexion will determine its judicial decisions, and reverse those of a former bench. And "the rescission (the repudiation) of the plan" could have an "effect on our property rights," as I will show.

For by an old law of Methodism 1812, while each Annual Conference was authorized to conform church deeds to the laws of different States, yet it was "so as to secure the premises firmly by deed and permanently to the Methodist Episcopal Church," for the use of ministers and preachers duly authorized by the General Conference; or by the "Annual Conferences authorized by the General Conference" of said Methodist Episcopal Church. This made the houses of worship trust property, the proper use to be determined ultimately by the General Conference, and its distribution effected through the Annual Conferences authorized by it. If, therefore, it has never "authorized the Annual Conferences" as now related to the Church South, its general trusteeship has never been vacated: and to rescind the repudiation of the Plan of Separation would be to do what Dr. Whedon now says he would "hope our (his) General Conference would be ready to adopt"—namely: "whatever legal action may be necessary" to place "the question of property beyond revival." If this be done, it will not be for me to suggest whether or not this be exercising a power which, according to Dr. Whedon, the General Conference of 1844 "did not pretend to possess—the power to divide the property"—and doing what he says the Plan of Separation did not do. It would, in any event, be a recognition of the moral right of the Church South to hold this property by the consent of those heretofore denying this right, and protesting against the decision that confirmed our legal rights. And some shrewd persons might infer that if the General Conference of 1876 can do all this legally, the Supreme Court was not very far wrong when it decided that the General Conference of 1844 had already done it legally.

Perhaps the truth will be seen at last. Even the justice—or, if one will, only the kindness—the Methodist Episcopal Church would wish to do the South can be done only by recognizing that the Plan of Separation nominally—i. e., the Southern Conferences so electing—divided the Methodist Episcopal Church between two independent and coördinate General Conference jurisdictions, and allowed those Conferences separating themselves by consent from the original jurisdiction the same rights over the property held in trust by the original church as it held before the separation. And what Dr. Whedon would do to settle the property question amounts to a disguised confession of the fact.

Why not, then, come out manfully and say it? The decision of the Supreme Court, rendered since 1844, will give the Conference of 1876 a basis for review, at the request of the Church South, and involve no humiliation, unless a church humiliates itself by reviewing hasty decisions in the light of calm reason, and by retreating from a false position, which, held, greatly wrongs a sister church.

Pardon me, Mr. Editor, for seeming to get away so far from my starting-point. But I am not so very far. I began with the false issues on which the South is urged to accord unconditional fraternity to the North, and showed that Dr. Whedon, wishing to secure it in the same unconditional way, rather than acknowledge an error in judgment, seeks to array all the evil passions of the last fifteen years of sectional politics, strife, and of a disastrous war, as an argument for not abrogating an error of thirty years' standing. Beginning there, I have sought to keep before both parties the true issue, which must be met and settled, or else between the two churches there can never be what we all desire—a true, cordial, permanent FRATERNITY.

Our City Churches.

St. Charles Avenue church is now completely organized, and well under way. There is a weekly prayer meeting and a class meeting, and the Sunday school is doing well. The membership of the Cadiz Street church has been merged into the new church, and, with additions since the opening, the present membership is something over one hundred. The congregations have been uniformly good, and Dr. Mounsey's preaching is awakening a profound and increasing interest.

Carondelet, Felicity and Moreau are having excellent congregations this winter, and the prayer meetings are unusually well attended, and manifest a deep and growing spiritual prosperity.

At the Cadiz Street church the afternoon mission school is kept up, and is reported to be in a flourishing condition. The Louisiana Avenue church keeps up two Sunday schools, and is holding its own in the way of membership and church attendance. Our church in Algiers is being temporarily supplied by local preachers, a good Sunday school maintained, and the regular services are kept up and pretty well attended.

On the whole, our churches in this city are doing fairly. Class meetings and love-feasts are well kept up, and there is peace in our borders. Within an impoverished and declining population the removals are nearly equal to the accessions of members, and there is no money for extending and building up. Our church property, including the Book Depository, is out of debt.

Time is like a ship which never anchors; while I am on board I had better do those things that may profit me at my landing than practice such as shall cause my commitment when I come ashore.—Feltham.

Evils of Spiritualism.

Under this heading a contributor to the Southwestern Presbyterian writes us as follows:

One evening last week the writer was suddenly summoned to the house of an acquaintance, expecting to attend a case of serious bodily illness. On the contrary, however, he found a person in great mental distress, who was not in a condition to receive the pure word of truth.

In the course of the conversation he boldly denied the existence of satan, and said it was impossible for God to have a rival.

To this it was replied that throughout the whole Scriptures the fact of satan's existence is clearly implied, and this fact could not be denied without rejecting the plainest statements of revealed truth.

It was further alleged by the individual in question that there were some things in Paul's Epistles which Paul himself has since denied. The writer said: "How do you know this?" The reply was: "Paul, in my presence, has denied certain things ascribed to him in the Epistles."

This revealed the whole perversion of the man's mind. He confessed that he was under the control and direction of invisible spirits, with whom he communicated.

The writer boldly denounced the act of seeking for such communications as the very greatest sin in the sight of God, as implying a rejection of his revealed truth, and as leading the soul to inevitable ruin.

The visitor then asked for a Bible, and, after protesting in the very strongest terms against the great sin involved in seeking converse with spirits, said: "Now, my friend, I wish to show you from this blessed book, the only infallible rule of our faith and practice, what God says on the subject in question. The sin into which you both have fallen, has existed from the very earliest period of the world's history. It prevailed among the Canaanites before God's people entered into that land. And now, in view of their subjection to it, I wish to show you what God said to his people just before entering into that land. From the eighteenth chapter of Deuteronomy, beginning at the ninth verse, the following passage was read:

"When thou art come into the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of those nations. There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or daughter pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch, or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer. For all that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord; and because of these abominations the Lord thy God doth drive them out from before thee."

"Now," continued the writer, "this plain declaration from God himself is as authoritative and applicable to us to-day, in combatting the evil of sin, of necromancy, as it was then, and the man who, in the face of this plain word of God, yields to the beguiling and delusive manifestations of spiritualism, is certain to bring upon himself and his family the greatest evils that God ever suffers to befall his creatures in this world." Instances were cited of persons of bright intellects and happy lives, whose reason had been dethroned and whose peace was forever destroyed by the effects of this sin.

To the astonishment of the writer his wife, who had hitherto coincided with him, responded with considerable emotion: "Sir, you are exactly right in your views. I would give anything in this world if I had never known anything of spiritualism. There is my daughter—as pure a woman as ever lived—who is so constantly molested by the influence of evil spirits that she has no rest day or night. To save her life she could not sleep in a dark room, and cannot rest well with lights burning all night. Day and night she is so annoyed by their presence that her happiness is gone. What can she do, sir, to get rid of this intolerable vexation?"

The writer replied: "Abandon at once the whole thing as a fearful delusion!" Her reply was: "She has tried to do so, and finds it impossible. She has done all in her power to bring herself from under their influence, and failed."

The writer then observed: "I am exceedingly sorry that any human being should be placed in a condition so dreadful; but surely it is an awful illustration of the effects of the practice in which you have indulged. Whether your account of the matter is correct or not, I know of no remedy, madam, except to go at once by faith to him who came to destroy the works of the devil, and beseech him to do the same work for her that he did for Mary Magdalene and for the wretched man that dwelt among the tombs. If that compassionate Redeemer does not proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound, I know of no one else in the universe who can accomplish this work."

The writer then retired, followed down the stairway by the lady, who entreated him to use all possible influence over her husband to turn his mind away from the fatal delusion.

NEW ORLEANS, TEXAS AND PACIFIC RAILROAD.—The notice of the appointment of committees to represent the claims of the above-named road will be found in another column. This road is of vital and paramount importance to the growth of our city, and self-preservation demands action at once—prompt, vigorous and liberal. The officers and directors are in earnest, they are practical men, they are our own people, they have no more interest at stake than we have, and they are worthy of our hearty co-operation.

Patience is the panacea; but where does it grow, or who can swallow it?—Shenstone.

Safe Arrival of Our Missionaries in China.

The mail has just brought us the glad intelligence of the safe arrival of Bro. Parker, Sister Lambuth and Willie, at Shanghai, but the sad news of the impaired health of our faithful superintendent, Bro. Lambuth. Let all the church join in prayer that he may be given yet a little longer to the work he has earnestly carried forward.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM BRO. PARKER.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, Dec. 7, 1875.

REV. DR. D. C. KELLEY—Dear Brother: I arrived at this place, in company with Mrs. Lambuth and Willie, the first day of this month—last Wednesday—making a little over twenty-nine days from San Francisco. We had considerable stormy weather, both on the Pacific and the Yellow Sea. But, thanks to a kind Providence, no damage was done to the ships, and no lives were lost."

We make only a short extract this week from a letter from Bro. Lambuth; we will give more next week, as well as an earnest note from Sister Lambuth to the friends who promised aid while she was in the United States. Bro. Lambuth says: "Two days after their arrival in Shanghai two or three steamers came in from Japan, with wheelhouses torn away, and capstans and cabins swept from the decks. One of the steamers was badly damaged. 'My family arrived just in time to escape this fearful storm. We feel that we cannot be too thankful to our heavenly Father for his protective care."

D. C. K.

According to an intimation in our last issue, says the Nashville Christian Advocate of February 5, "The Blind Man Eloquent"—the sobriquet well becomes Mr. Milburn—has been lecturing in Nashville, under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association. His lectures were indeed eloquent. He has all the elements of a finished, masterful orator. His grandium to the lecture on 'What a Blind Man Saw in Paris' is an exquisite philosophical analysis of the imperial faculty of vision, through which, during the first five or six years of a person's life, he receives such impressions of the visible universe as enable him to form an ideal universe, if, as in his case, at that early age his soul, like Samson's, should be

"Shorn from outward light
To incorporate with gloomy night."

In his impressive sermon on Sunday afternoon in the Vanderbilt chapel, on "The Light of the Body the Eye," he gave a minute description of glaucoma and amaurosis, the former disease of the eye he represented as curable, if taken in time, but the latter as incurable, as involves a paralysis of the organ, employing the analogy with singular skill and great force to set forth the mental condition of one to whom the vitalizing light of faith has never disclosed the wonders and glories of the divine world!

Periodicals.

—N. Ebbinghaus & Sons, 37 Park Row, New York, have published a new book of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's late great evangelistic, with the choicest thoughts and discourses of Mr. Moody, and portraits on steel. The advantage of this edition is that it has been carefully edited, indexed and numbered, which gives easy reference to the thoughts and illustrations. Sixty cents per copy. Agents wanted. Address publishers.

—Appleton's Railway and Steam Navigation Guide for February has been received. It is a valuable manual for travelers and business men.

—The Traveler's Official Guide of the Railway and Steam Navigation Lines in the United States and Canada is a very voluminous and complete work, published by the National Railway Publication Company, Philadelphia. We cannot imagine any information concerning steam and inland steam navigation routes and railways that is not to be found in this work. We have received the number for October. Price, per annum.

—From the above publishers the National Railway Publication Company we have received Official Time-Tables, February, 1876. A convenient and useful work, and apparently prepared with accuracy and care.

—We have received from A. S. Barnes & Co., New York, some specimen pages of their magnificent forthcoming work, "One Hundred Years of American Independence." It is elegantly and profusely illustrated, eschews all sectionalism, sectarianism, and everything else not befitting a "Centennial history." It will be a royal octavo volume of 1000 pages, sold only by subscription, at $3 or $10, according to style.

—The Aldine, part 3, just received, unrivaled for the number and finish of its engravings. Among the illustrations in the present number: Entrance to the Highlands, Hudson River, Of Noble Birth, New, from Fort Putnam, West Point, Anthony's Nose, Heidelberg, Published by the Aldine Company, New York.

—We have received Storrs, Harrison & Co.'s Spring Catalogue of New and Rare Plants, including greenhouse and bedding plants; Painesville, O.

—We have received a handsome promo view of the North Missouri State Normal School.

BISHOP FOSTER IN SAVANNAH.—We learn that Dr. E. H. Myers, hearing that Bishop Foster, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was about to visit Florida, and wishing to reciprocate courtesies received from him in other years in New York, wrote, inviting the Bishop to the hospitalities of his home and to his pulpit, should he take Savannah in his route. The invitation was accepted, and on Sunday, January 23, Bishop Foster preached two very able sermons in Trinity church, to the edification of large congregations. The intercourse, we learn, between the Bishop and our pastors in Savannah and the members who saw him, during his brief visit, was of the most pleasant character. He visited Wesley Monumental church—on which the workmen are placing the roof—and expressed great satisfaction with its progress, and much interest in its completion, as a tribute of the Methodism of all names to John Wesley.—Southern Christian Advocate.

CITIZENS' BANK OF LOUISIANA.—We direct the attention of our readers to the last statement of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana, in another column. The Citizens' Bank has been of incalculable benefit to the business community [illegible] its [illegible] bank, and has been managed by the president and valued citizen [illegible] more for the benefit of those from whom it derives its support than for speculative purposes. Tradesmen and dealers, as well as factors, will find this old and valued bank a good place to keep their accounts. They will find Mr. Gaines, the president, a fair specimen of the gentleman after the manner of society, and as a business merchant, as well as banker, they will find him largely identified with the interests, either [illegible] and [illegible] commonwealth. We are glad to observe the [illegible] the Citizens' Bank has [illegible] general confidence, but of the [illegible]

A NEW FIRM.—Messrs. Randolph & Dennick have formed [illegible] partnership, and will [illegible] Magazine street as general commission merchants. These gentlemen are [illegible] and favorably known in New Orleans. Mr. Randolph is a merchant of [illegible] years' standing in New Orleans and St. Louis, and Mr. Dennick has been [illegible] business for [illegible] years. The [illegible] will, therefore, be [illegible] and [illegible] and as a business merchant, as well as banker, they will find them in [illegible] with the interests, either [illegible] commonwealth. We are glad to observe the [illegible] the Citizens' Bank has [illegible] general confidence, but of the [illegible]

SUGAR PLANTERS, TAKE NOTICE!—Messrs. F. Walsh & Co., No. 1 Front street, New Orleans, are the most extensive manufacturers of sugar machinery in the South, especially the Stage Evaporator, of which they have sold a large number, and which is well known. Those who wish to make engagements for the coming season for wood hogsheads and barrels, for any purpose, will do well to see Mr. Walsh. See the advertisement in another column.

FANCY DRY GOODS.—There is at the Jackson Store, corner of Chartres and St. Ann streets, a most full and attractive assortment of fresh fancy dry goods of foreign and domestic manufacture, silks, linen embroideries, hosiery, etc., also mattings, rugs and carpets. Do not fail to read their advertisement in another column.

PAPER PATTERNS.—Ladies who wish to dress themselves of the cheapest and improved garment by graceful taste, should avail themselves of the use of Butterick & Co.'s patterns, are referred to the advertisement of the Singer Manufacturing Company in another column. They guarantee a very perfect fit.

LAGRANGE FEMALE COLLEGE.—We direct attention to the events most of the above named most excellent institution, favorably located for health, in a community of great refinement and a liberal moral tone of sentiment. The teachers are competent, and the [illegible] drunk.

STAPLE AND FANCY DRY GOODS.—Messrs. Lee, Ross & Co. [illegible] demands of the times, and prepare to supply the wants of a large number of custom tailors who want first class goods. Their city [illegible] Spring and Summer advertisement [illegible] Magazine street.

COAL.—Messrs. H. & C. Tyler, No. [illegible] Carondelet street, which is [illegible] dealers in coal, and offer extensive capital, and handle coal to good advantage. Those who need coal for family or steam purposes will do well to see them. They are [illegible]

FLAGS, TENTS, AWNINGS AND SAILS.—Mr. J. C. Miller, late of Cassidy & Miller, has opened at 107 Poydras street, and invites customers to call and consult his prices of [illegible] and work. Mr. Miller is well known as a good workman.

BOOTS, SHOES AND TRUNKS.—The old customers of H. Mimmie, Esq., at No. [illegible] Magazine street, speak in very high terms of that gentleman, and of his stock of shoes, boots and trunks. His advertisement will be found elsewhere.

WOOD AND COAL.—William Velden, corner of Philip and Prytania streets, keeps excellent wood and good coal, and sells as cheap as any body. See advertisement in another column.

FOR dry goods our friends in the city or country cannot do better than [illegible] Brisselman & Adams, whose advertisement will be found on this page.

BURNETT'S COCOAINE for the hair is advertised under the head of Business Notices.

MEDICAL.

I MUST own that your Simmons' Liver Regulator fully deserves the popularity it has obtained. As a family medicine it has no equal. It cured my wife of a malady I had counted incurable. That world-fame of our American people, Dyspepsia. She desires that all nations and people might know the virtues of this God given remedy. Hoping that the above will appear in your Almanac of 1876, and be of some use in extolling the virtues of your excellent medicine, is the wish of Your humble servant,

A. E. F. ALBERT,
Professor in Nicholas Public School,
Parish of Terrebonne, La.

I have used Simmons' Liver Regulator for two years, and recommend it as a very superior medicine for Dyspepsia and Liver Disease.

GEORGE W. SMITH,
Kentucky Conference,
Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Your valuable medicine (Simmons' Regulator) has saved me doctors' bills often. I use it for everything that it is recommended for, and never knew it to fail. I have used it in Colic and Grubs with my mules and horses, giving them about half a bottle at a time. I have not lost one that I gave it to. You can recommend it to every one that has stock as being the best medicine known for all complaints that horse flesh is heir to.

F. T. TAYLOR,
Agent for Grangers of Georgia.

Is Hamilton's Mock Balsam.

Simmons' Liver Regulator doubtless is one of the best medicines ever compounded from the great botanic garden of nature, and contains no life-destroying component hidden under some technical name, but is a purifier, rejuvenator and regulator not only of the Liver, but of the whole system.

Gravel as a Mulch.

In the spring of 1871 I had the superintendence of planting some two hundred trees of various kinds in and around our public grounds. The spring and succeeding summer was one of unusual and excessive drouth. About eighty of these trees—white elm, soft maple, American linden, catalpa, etc.—were planted on the sidewalks for street trees; they were, on an average ten and fourteen feet high. They were planted in a rather poor clay soil mixed in planting with a rich, black sandy loam, and within a few inches of the curbstone, the gutters being shallow and well bowldered. The walk was covered with about four inches of gravel. Every one of these trees grew finely, many of them making a growth of branches two or more feet in length. Some of these elms when planted seemed almost dead, but they stayed and grew well. None of them were watered artificially. The same kind of trees planted within the inclosures in much better soil, but without the gravel mulch, grew very little; many of them, probably half, died, notwithstanding constant care in watering, deep and well-drained soil, skirmishing in, mulching with grass and litter, etc. The same fate attended more than half the trees planted by others all over the country. Hence I conclude that gravel and small stones are unsurpassed as a mulch. They allow the rains to readily penetrate the soil, retain moisture, ward off heat and equalize the temperature. The practicability of gravel as a mulch, where it can be easily procured, should be tested by all tree planters. It will not injure heavy clay soils, at least, but will be beneficial.—Horticulturist.

ABOUT BOILING POTATOES.—Potatoes form a staple article of diet in all homes. They require as careful cooking as anything does, to bring them to perfect eating condition, yet as a rule they are not carefully cooked, indeed I may say they are exceedingly carelessly treated, and yet expected always to be good. They are generally put into hot water and boiled until soft, and many housekeepers think this is all that is needful, or that can be done. If they are water-soaked, or rank to the taste, it is the fault of the potatoes, it is argued when often the fault is in the cook.

To begin with, old potatoes, if wanted for breakfast, should be pared the night previous, and put to soak in cold water. In the morning they should be taken out and put into boiling water, plenty of it, and care must be had to see that the water is kept boiling, or begins boiling speedily again after they are put in. Salt may be put in the boiling water before the potatoes are put in, or any time afterward before the boiling is finished, but should not be omitted. When the potatoes are done the water should be carefully drained off, and they should be set on the back of the stove to dry.

Thus soaking in cold water is absolutely essential for old potatoes, and will not make them heavy, as some might suppose. If wanted for dinner they should be put to soak at least two hours before time to set about it.

I am aware that many cooks boil potatoes with the skins on; but this, I think, ought never to be done, unless the potatoes are actually nice. I should never attempt it, any more than I would stew or steam apples with the skins on.—Mrs. P. G. Fisk.

SOWING GRASS AND CLOVER WITH GRAIN.—One great cause of failure with grass in the South has been the seeding of the crop with the small grains. This is a common practice at the North, and we were formerly inclined to favor it, but later experiments force us to the conclusion that, in our climate at least, the practice is a bad one, and that it is far more profitable to sow each by itself. If sown immediately when not already in, grass and clover will, on suitable soil, attain such a growth, before the hot weather of next season sets in, as will insure them against injury, without the shade of the grain, which will be injured by the clover and grass, while injuring them in return. In any case the land for clover and the grasses should be rich and thoroughly prepared by deep, close plowing, followed by harrowing, previous to which a good dressing of superphosphate may be applied with advantage. Brush lightly to cover, and, except on heavy soils, by all means roll the fields with a tolerably heavy roller. This last is an important and too generally neglected process. If you are to sow both clover and the grasses on the same field, it is best to sow the clover by itself, as the seed does not mix well with the grass seed. The various kinds of grass seed may be mixed before sowing.—Rural Carolinian.

TRY NAILS.—We have taken the trouble, in extensive trips over the country, to make some inquiries about certain fruit-trees which attracted attention on account of their thrift and fruit-bearing qualities. They were fresh and vigorous, while all around the other trees were decayed or dead. In nearly every case it turned out that ten-penny nails had been driven in the body as near the ground as possible. Trees selected at random, and treated in this way, always turned out to be healthy, vigorous and excellent fruit-bearers, producing the most luscious fruit. The reason why the worm will not attack the tree is because the oxydation or rusting of the iron by the sap involves ammonia, which, as the sap arises, will of course impregnate every part of the foliage, and prove too drastic a dose for the delicate palates of intruding insects. The salt of iron afforded by the nails is extremely offensive to the worms, while it is not only harmless but beneficial to the foliage and fruit of the tree.—Rural Carolinian.

PICKING OFF POTATO BLOSSOMS.—We observe some discussion in the papers on the practical utility of picking the blossoms off from growing potato plants to increase the growth of the tubers. According to theory, this would be the result, the formation of seed always tending to exhaust more or less the vitality of the plant. Many years ago a statement came from Europe on this subject, and we were told that the crops would be increased one-third by carefully removing all the blossoms. We gave it a careful test in rows side by side, but ordinary measuring did not indicate the slightest difference, which must have been very small, if any, probably requiring more refined weighing to distinguish it, and of no consequence whatever in common practice.—Country Gentleman.

SOFTENING HARD WATER.—This is usually done with sal soda, but the effect is to hurt the clothes that are washed in the water thus prepared, and the hands also. It is because there is an excess of the soda, more than unites with the acid of the water, which makes it hard. The remedy is easy: Use enough of the salt to take up the acid, and no more. In this way both acid and soda disappear, leaving a neutral salt which is harmless. The water will be soft. To a certain amount of water, beginning with a very little soda, and adding more if you find you need it. With our own spring water, which is hard, a heap of soda the size of a large pea to a pint of water is about the right proportion. Of course the amount of the salt should be according to the degree of hardness of the water.

A GOOD REPLY.—When the English fleet under Lord Nelson was steering down upon the French ships anchored in Aboukir Bay, just before the ever-memorable battle of the Nile, the captain of one of the British vessels addressed his crew at considerable length, and, having exhorted them to remember their duty, and what their country required at their hands, he turned to the captain of the marines and said: "Now, sir, you have heard what I have said to the ship's company, it may be as well for you to say something to the men more particularly under you." Upon which the marine officer commanded "attention," and addressed them in the following pithy and laconic manner: "My lads, do you see that land?" pointing to the shore which they were rapidly nearing. "That," said he, "is the land of Egypt, and if you don't fight you'll soon be in the house of bondage." The ship was cleared.

Theodore Cuyler well says that the world's worst want today is more Christ-like men and women; the preaching it needs is sermons in shoes.

Scientific.

We observe a note from Dr. A. Packard to the effect that specimens of the "hateful grasshopper" (Oedipoda spectica,) lately received from California, Oregon, have occurred at Amherst, Mass.

How popular terms are is exhibited by the increasing number of books reporting to them. Mr. John Gould, for many years Curator of the New Carolina museum, one of the leaders in ornithology, has just issued another good work of 420 pages, under the title of "Historia Felina." And Dr. Newman has just given us a fifth "Series" of "History of British Birds."

Wendland and Drude have lately published a synopsis of the palms of Australia. They find twenty-six species. On Lord Howe's Island are four species. The headquarters for palms are in Anthem's Land. Twenty-two species are scattered over the mainland. Livistona australis is one of the finest species, and reaches a height of about eighty feet. Most of them seem to prefer the vicinity of the sea.

The power of gunpowder is shown by a recent writer in the Boston News. The velocity of a shell is 1,200 feet per second. The height from which the body would have to fall to acquire this is 22,500 feet; consequently the power of the powder is equal to 22,500 foot-pounds. The heat evolved by the combustion of 11.4 pounds of powder is equal to 340.7 calories. The mechanical work of this amount of heat is 1,063,000 foot-pounds.

The Lahumma, known in our colonies as the "Gold Chain," seems to be a dangerous beauty. The British Medical Journal reports that twenty-eight school boys, decoyed by the similarity of the taste and smell of the liquorice-root of the shrubs, ate a considerable quantity of it and took sick. Their sickness, however, took only the form of satisfaction. Two of them were only with extreme difficulty restrained from walking about the yard for ten days as they would still fall asleep on the slightest cessation. It is stated that upon careful inquiry it was found that these boys could not have chewed more than half an ounce of the root"—these boys probably meaning the two worst cases.

Mr. Henry S. Sandford, of New Haven, Conn., has invented an automatic fire extinguisher, which has been satisfactorily tested. It consists of sprinklers attached to the water pipes in a building in such a manner that the water from them will entirely cover the ceiling and floor. Over each sprinkler is placed a metallic cap, which is fastened in position by solder, fusible at 155° of heat. The theory is that, in case of fire, as soon as the heat reaches that height the cap, the solder will melt, when the force of the water will throw off the cap and for nearly two hundred seconds rain on the fire, and exactly where the fire is, and how close, as no sprinkler can be opened except by the fire. There is attached to the supply pipe a valve which opens as the water rushes through the pipe and sounds an alarm by a steam whistle, if there be a boiler on the premises, or by striking a bell.

The structure of [illegible]. The asserted presence of [illegible] bacteria forms, has been examined by Prof. E. R. Lankester, who [illegible] of his results only on [illegible] the Lingula's valve. The [illegible] of the pharynx was found to [illegible] Stieda. A [illegible] cavity or [illegible], distinct from the third chamber, was shown at first and to attain a large development in the post-abdominal region. A pair of ramified canals, supposed to represent the sexual organs of vertebrates in a degenerate or rudimentary condition, were described. J. Müller's [illegible] of the lateral canal were shown to be hyoid slits leading into the pharynx. The attachments of the pharyngeal bars to the wall of the atrium by a series of pharyngo-pleural septa was described; and it was further shown that the marginal ridges of the ventral surface are hollow, containing a lymph-space, and that they, as well as the plates of the entire integument, disappear when the atrial chamber is largely distended with the sexual products.

It will be remembered that some time ago Prof. Hofmann announced the discovery by two of his assistants of a method of preparing vanillin by synthesis from pine trees. The manufacture is now carried on commercially, and, as vanilla sells at a good price, with considerable profit, it has been recently pointed out that paper-makers, using wood pulp for the purpose of their manufacture, after casting, or, at all events, not utilizing the substances from which the vanilla is prepared. In treating the wood for making paper a solution of caustic soda is used, and among the other soda-salts there should be the [illegible] salt of vanillin; and, as a matter of fact, the odor of vanilla becomes apparent in a few days after treating the liquor in which the wood was boiled with acid. It is possible that a method of obtaining crystals of vanillin will soon be devised, and another waste product become more valuable than the product for the manufacture of which it has been used. The process described by Dr. Hofmann has been patented, and is undoubtedly a valuable discovery to the patentees.

Somebody has been shown from the reports of the Bureau of Education that there are no fewer than 228 universities and colleges in our favored country, which conferred last year 720 degrees in course, and 411 honorary degrees. This was quite independent of the 35 agricultural colleges, with their 362 degrees; the 5 women's colleges, with their 563 degrees; the 81 medical schools, with their 2,815 degrees; the 59 divinity schools, with their 630 degrees; and, in fine, a total of 8,858 degrees in course.

The misery felt by the child who couldn't go to the picnic is nothing to that of the one who has been to it.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The river is 5 feet 7 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending January 25:

	bales.
Mississippi river and bayous	15,305
Red river	2,225
Ouachita river	3,935
Railroads	6,510
Lake	97
Mobile	415
Texas	1,196
Florida	4
Arkansas river	1,408
Total	35,695

On Saturday the market opened with only a moderate inquiry, but the demand subsequently became more active, and factors met it freely, at least for the general run of the offerings. The sales summed up 14,300 bales, which is within 100 bales of the largest reported this season—14,400 bales on the fifth ultimo. On Monday the movement was almost entirely suspended during the morning by unusually dark and rainy weather, and although there was rather more done subsequently, yet the entire sales were confined to 3,750 bales. Good staple kinds and the higher grades continued steady; but other descriptions exhibited increased irregularity, with a general tendency in favor of buyers, occasional sales being made at less than our inside figures. On Tuesday, with a return of fine weather, buyers came forward with renewed spirit and took fully 3,500 bales during the morning, after which, as factors met the demand freely, especially for the medium and lower grades, the movement continued quite animated, resulting in further transactions to the extent of 8,000 bales, making a total for the day of 11,500 bales. The general tendency of the market was in favor of buyers, but with no quotable variation, except in the grades below strict low middling, which, as noted in our preliminary remarks, sold at an irregular decline of a partial ⅛c.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 29,550 bales, against 25,300 for the corresponding time last week and 29,000 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 994,761 bales, against 764,177 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 174,744 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 160,-253—3,171,801 against 3,012,548; the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 70,417 bales to Great Britain, of 70,701 to France, and of 180,-452 to other foreign ports. SUGAR.—The receipts are light and the demand is only fair, and the supplies sold as received at slightly weaker prices. The receipts on Saturday comprised 1,742 hhds., and were mostly sold at 5⅝@5¾c. for inferior to common, 6@6¼c. for common to good common, 6⅜@6⅝c. for fair to good fair, 6¾@6⅞c. for fully fair, 7@7⅛c. for prime, 7⅜c. for strictly prime, 7⅝@8c. for gray clarified, 8c. for yellow clarified, 8⅛@8¼c. for off-white clarified, and 9½@9⅝c. for choice white clarified. On Tuesday only 104 hhds. came in and sold at the above prices. Arrived during the past three days, 2,464 hhds., 24 bbls.

MOLASSES.—The supplies continue light, and consist mostly of poor quality, fermenting and reboiled. The demand is good, and the supplies on Saturday and Monday, comprising 2,866 bbls. and 41 half bbls., sold at previous prices: 35@38c. for fair fermenting, 40@42c. for prime fermenting, 43@45c. for strictly prime fermenting, cistern bottom 46@50c., as in quality, prime reboiled 48@50c., choice reboiled 51c., choice not fermenting 52c. ₱ gallon. On Tuesday the receipts were confined to 50 bbls. The market was dull and the supplies sold slowly at the above prices. Arrived during the past three days, 4,119 bbls.

RICE.—The market is ¼c. ₱ lb. higher, with a good demand. Prime and choice is scarce and in request. The sales last week reached nearly 10,000 bbls. We quote Louisiana No. 2, 2½@3c., common 4½@4¾c., ordinary 4¾@5c., fair 5¼@5⅝c., good 6@6¼c., prime 6¾@6¾c., choice 7@7c. ₱ lb. Arrived during the past three days, 1,404 bbls.

TALLOW.—Sells soon as received. The last sales were at 8¼c. ₱ lb.

PECANS.—Light supply and moderate demand. Texas are quoted at $10@12 ₱ bbl.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 112¼@113, against 112, at New York, and after a limited business closed at the opening rates in both markets.

The financial situation is marked by a continuing accumulation of currency in excess of the commercial demand, which, however, slightly improved on Monday, since which it has subsided. The present indications are that the spring trade will be late in opening, and the prospect does not seem encouraging.

Weekly Review of the Cotton Market.—We have received the following circular from Messrs. Hubbard Bros. & Co., bankers and cotton brokers, 72 Broadway, New York, dated February 5th, 1876:

"The last of our letters bearing the date and figure of Wednesday in the several States, with a few additional items now from Texas, as we do not guarantee the correctness of any figures received after the publication of our letters.

"The week's receipts at the ports and interior towns have been 160,253 bales, against 160,-253 bales last year, making the total receipts since the 1st September, 3,171,801 bales, against 3,012,548 bales for the same period of 1874-5, showing an increase this year of 159,253 bales.

"The exports for the week have been 70,417 bales, making the total exports since the 1st September, 1,874,404 bales, against 1,803,703 bales for the same period of last year, showing an increase this year of 70,701 bales.

"The stock at the ports and interior towns is 393,600 bales, against 349,976 bales last year, showing an increase this year of 43,624 bales.

"The stock at Liverpool is 1,143,000 bales, against 1,067,000 bales last year, showing an increase this year of 76,000 bales.

"The total stock in both countries is 1,536,600 bales, against 1,416,976 bales last year, showing an increase this year of 119,624 bales.

"The weekly receipts have been 35,695 bales, against 29,000 bales last year, showing an increase this year of 6,695 bales.

"The weekly exports have been 28,200 bales, against 28,000 bales last year, showing an increase this year of 200 bales.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

VOL. 22. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1876. NO. 7.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

St. Louis, Feb. 8.—Capt. Eads has just received a dispatch from Col. Andrews, contractor for the jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi river, announcing thirteen feet of water through the crest of the levee at South Pass, being an increase of three feet for the past eight days. Seven feet additional of water will entitle Capt. Eads to the first payment, by the terms of his grant from Congress.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.—It is stated that Senator Brice (colored,) of Mississippi, in executive session today, pronounced himself as opposed to Grant and a third term. He was quite emphatic; said he thought Grant did not care for the South. He will not support him if nominated. He further stated that the colored people had better make terms with the resident whites of the South.

The Senate remained in executive session from about half-past four until half-past six this evening, engaged in the continued discussion of the confirmation of the nominations of E. C. Billings to be United States district judge for Louisiana, vice Durell, resigned. After an animated debate the nomination was confirmed by a majority of four, in a very slim Senate.

JACKSON, Feb. 10.—The committee appointed to investigate the case of Lieut.-Gov. Davis reported to-day that he is guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors, and for the specification, charge that Davis, in June, 1875, accepted a bribe of $500 for the pardon of Thomas H. Ballentine, charged with the murder of Ann Thomas, in Lowndes county. The committee offered a resolution that Davis be impeached for crimes and misdemeanors, which was made the special order for Monday. The bill repealing the act loaning the school funds to the Vicksburg and Nashville railroad passed the House. The Senate defeated the bill exempting manufactories from taxation.

MEMPHIS, Feb. 11.—The river rises to a stand to-day at about thirty-four feet by gauge, which is the danger mark, and although the riverage of high water is high, and will not fall low enough during the flood of last August; which is the highest reached the same point, yet little danger is reported, and should the levees show more strength than they did last summer, the present flood is apprehended in the country tributary to Memphis.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—Hon. Reverdy Johnson had argued a case in court, and was unusually brilliant at dinner with Gov. Carroll, whose guest he was. He took one glass of Madeira during dinner. After dinner he went to the parlor, while Gov. Carroll and the other guests went to another room to smoke. It was supposed Mr. Johnson was taking his habitual sleep after dinner.

Presently a servant beckoned the Governor out. Mr. Johnson had fallen in the carriage way, which passes under the porch of the mansion. He was dead, and bled profusely from a wound on the right side of head and face. His skull was fractured, and a finger dislocated. There were bruises and cuts on the arms and legs. He was born in 1796.

HARPER'S FERRY, Feb. 12.—The fears that the Hudson river ice gorge will be an utter failure to-day are hourly. Contrary to reports, much ice has been let over from last year. The extraordinary mild weather has again started the ice at many places between here and Poughkeepsie. All the ferryboats are running. Not over a hundred thousand tons have been gathered thus far. The average crop is over two millions.

MEMPHIS, Feb. 12.—Gen. Gideon J. Pillow has filed a petition in bankruptcy, assigning, among other causes in his petition, the fact that he is held responsible personally for acts as a major general in the late war.

The Avalanche's Jackson (Miss.) special says: "The investigating committee, on alleged outrages in Pike and Amite counties report that after diligent inquiry they find no obstruction in the performance of the collector's duties; no resistance offered to the authority of the Federal official. Collector Redmond was advised on the eve of the election to leave the county, but the hostility to him was personal, and not by reason of his office, and there was no fear; that the mayor of Summit was drunk when he signed the dispatch for troops, and concludes that the charges were false, and there was no occasion for troops."

BALTIMORE, Feb. 13.—The funeral of Reverdy Johnson took place this afternoon from the family residence on Park street. Ten thousand persons were present. Attorney General Pierrepont, Chief Justice Waite and associate justices of the Supreme Court, and President of the Senate Ferry, and a large number of members of both houses of Congress, were in attendance. State officers, including Gov. Carroll, were present in large numbers. Nearly all the prominent members of the bar in the State were also present.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—It is reported to-night that Bristow had resigned at the request of the President, the resignation to take effect on the first of March. The authenticity of the report, however, cannot be ascertained to-night.

The Mississippi levee committee to-day agreed, on motion of Mr. Morey, of Louisiana, to ask permission for the appointment of a subcommittee to visit the portion of the Mississippi valley subject to inundation, without expense to the government, for the purpose of obtaining information to determine the necessity and amount of appropriation to rebuild the levees; also authorizing the chairman of the committee to ask permission to move an amendment in the river and harbor bill an item appropriating such amount as the committee may hereafter determine upon to repair and rebuild the Mississippi levees. It is believed both requests will be granted.

The House committee on elections and privileges agreed to-day to report in favor of Haralson, of Alabama (colored,) whose seat is contested by Bromberg. The report condemns, without qualification the manner of securing the election, but concedes the legality of Haralson's claim.

FOREIGN.

HAVANA, Feb. 7.—The steamer City of Mexico, from Vera Cruz, brings the following:

City of Mexico, Feb. 1.—Manifestoes have appeared, signed by Gens. Diaz and Garcia, at Guanajuato. Their purpose is to begin a revolution, with the ultimate object of defeating Lerdo de Tejada and placing Porfirio Diaz in the presidency. Few persons are disposed to deny the authenticity of the documents, and fear of a revolution is general. The Two Republics comments on the manifestoes and concludes that Lerdo's re-election means war. Business is sorely afflicted.

The whereabouts of Diaz is unknown. It is reported that Gen. Murguiz, a chief of notoriety during the empire, will lead a revolution of church and party against President Lerdo. He may possibly unite with Diaz. Gen. Murguiz has left Havana.

The Trait d'Union, referring to the application made by the American minister some time ago, declares that Mexico cannot allow American troops to pursue marauders into Mexican territory. While the governments are now friendly, the bandits on both sides are protected by their respective nations on account of their nationality. Neither government is sufficiently strong to suppress the scandal. The only remedy is for both to organize special corps independent of the army, having jurisdiction to the Rio Grande and the border, and which should be placed under direction of a mixed commission.

It is said that Mexico will demand indemnity of the United States for damage caused by the late raid on the Rio Grande.

Gen. Cortina has been permitted to walk in the streets, accompanied by prison officials.

President Lerdo has given a dinner in honor of Minister Foster since his return to Mexico.

The minister of war has disapproved of the conduct of an army officer, who sentenced a doctor to service in the regular army, but this was unjust.

A mob recently stoned the Protestant church in the plaza of San Fernando, in this city. In Acapulco the Protestants are rapidly increasing in numbers since the assassination of Richardson.

LONDON, Feb. 8.—The Daily News' Rome special says: the inaugural meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society was held at the American church in Via Quadatte yesterday. English, Scotch and American Protestants participated.

CUNO, an old friend of Garibaldi, recently died at Florence without receiving extreme unction. The clergy consequently refused to perform Christian burial services. Garibaldi therefore writes, advising cremation.

HENDAYE, Feb. 9.—Many Carlist families are flying into France. Great discouragement prevails among the immediate followers of Don Carlos. Several leaders are charged with treason.

The Carlist council of war at Tolosa decided to mass troops in Navarre and Guipuzcoa.

The Alfonsists have occupied Zugarramendi.

MADRID, Feb. 9.—After opening the Cortes the King, with the ministers of war and marine, will go to headquarters of the army of the north.

HENDAYE, Feb. 9.—The Carlists have assumed the offensive against the Alfonsist positions at Ayatzuri.

MADRID, Feb. 11.—The minister of foreign affairs has sent a memorandum, dated February 3, to the Spanish representatives abroad, instructing them to read it to foreign ministers, or to leave a copy, if requested. The memorandum, after pointing out that the Cuban insurrection was no longer led by natives of the island, but by foreign adventurers, continues: Negroes, mulattoes, Chinese and deserters form the bulk of the insurgent forces; their army contains scarcely eight hundred white Cubans, while more than forty thousand of the latter are serving with the royal volunteers. Spain cannot come to any terms with such elements; she can only, after having obtained complete victory, grant to Cuba all the liberties which, but for the insurrection, she would already possess, and which the neighboring island of Porto Rico, where slavery has been entirely abolished, fully enjoys.

Reinforcements numbering twenty-eight thousand men have been dispatched to Cuba within twelve months. The duration of the insurrection is in consequence of the difficulties of the country. Notwithstanding the insurrection, trade in Cuba has doubled during ten years, the more fertile part of the island is untouched by the insurrection, and only a few districts have suffered from it. All foreigners sustaining losses will be indemnified, and the embargo on foreign goods will be raised. The memorandum is considered as an indirect reply to the last note from the United States.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Feb. 11.—The Sultan yesterday signed a decree granting the Andrassy reforms to the people of the insurgent provinces.

The embassadors of the six powers were notified, and Ottoman representatives abroad were telegraphed.

The question of expenditure in Bosnia and Herzegovinia, of direct taxes will be referred to a mixed commission.

Southwestern Bible Society.

We have received a copy of the twenty-sixth annual report of the Southwestern Bible Society. We give an extract from the report of A. H. Nelson, corresponding secretary:

That so small a proportion of the families found destitute have been supplied has been mainly owing, in the case of the whites, to the tacit, if not avowed, prejudices against the Protestant Bible forbade their acceptance of it, and, in the case of the blacks, that their illiteracy prevented their reading the sacred volume, had it been given to them.

How lamentable the ignorance which these figures suggest! If from the intelligent center of city territory a visitation of 12,775 families reveals the fact that 3,511, or nearly one fourth of that number are without a copy of the Bible, we are safe in the assumption that in the more remote and sparsely settled portions of our field the destitution is proportionately greater.

Upon such a basis of calculation among the 1,050,000 whites and blacks inhabiting Louisiana and that part of Mississippi embraced within our limits, representing families, we have more than 100,000 households as yet unilluminated by the light of the glorious gospel of the blessed God. The work, however, which we plan to undertake during 1876, in placing Bibles in Louisiana and the neighboring counties of Mississippi, revealed the fact that nearly one-fourth of all the families visited by our colporteurs are without Bibles, and as we have reason to hear that a large part of our own State is equally benighted, it is to might the Southwestern Bible Society claims to appeal on behalf of such families where God's word is not found, the picture presented is not darker than the facts will warrant.

Shall this vast throng of souls around our very doors perish for lack of that bread upon which our existence daily feeds?

To supply in any considerable measure this famishing multitude the regular ministry of our churches are powerless, and yet to the fact that it hath pleased God, by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe, the same inspiration attests the double query: "How shall they hear without a preacher, and how shall they preach except they be sent?" Churches and Sunday schools we may not be able to plant in every hamlet and at every crossroad throughout the Southwest, but we can, and will, keep a company of colporteurs constantly traveling along our highways, and visiting our cities, towns, and plantations, who shall everywhere leave behind them that wondrous book whose leaves, like those of the tree planted on the banks of the River of Life, are for the healing of the nations. Without the voice of the living preacher its searching queries and startling revelations will often prove sharper than a two edged sword, that will "cut deep and make alive."

Through our persistent efforts attractively-bound copies of the Old and New Testament, in two volumes each, have been furnished to the New Orleans, St. Louis and Chicago Lotteries for the supply of each passenger coach and car operated on their trains.

Morgan's Louisiana and Texas line is furnished in the same way, while as regards the other two leads running through our territory, though they have long since promised to provide the racks necessary for a similar high stung of the tracts, those promises are as yet unredeemed.

Through the zealous advocacy of our present agent the Bible cause has been presented in various ecclesiastical conventions during this year, but without in any instance eliciting an encouraging response.

Our current expenses are kept, so far, within the sum received from sales, and the rental of the upper stories of the Bible House, that we are able to continue our semi annual remittances to the American Bible Society, and thereby our only debt is being gradually reduced. The business of the Bible House for the year ending December 1, 1875, is as follows:

The Centennial.

OFFICE OF THE WOMEN'S CENTENNIAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, No. 903 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, 1876.

The Women's Centennial Executive Committee has appointed a subcommittee of their number to obtain information concerning the various forms of religious, philanthropic and patriotic work organized or conducted by women in America and in foreign countries.

This is done to enable them to give a bird's eye view of women's work in these directions at the international exhibition, and to illustrate the fact that a large proportion of the charities of the world are now conducted by women.

It will comprehend within its scope homes and asylums of all sorts, mission work in its broadest sense, in our cities, country and foreign lands, industrial schools and sisterhoods, the temperance cause, and every other organized form of benevolence.

It is proposed, as far as possible, to have a printed report of the rise and progress of such good works accompanied by a lithograph or other representation in the case of an institution or school.

The committee earnestly asks the co-operation of persons or associations having charge of any of the forms of benevolence contained in the subjoined list. They invite them to send to the address of Mrs. M. C. Lilienthal, member of Women's Centennial Executive Committee for Louisiana, St. Charles Hotel, New Orleans, a short history of their work, a picture, where it can be illustrated, or, at the least, one or more yearly reports.

The committee also ask the daily, weekly and religious press throughout the country to call the attention of women engaged in benevolent works to this matter, and also kindly to insert this circular in their columns.

It is important that these reports should reach the committee as early a date as possible.

They therefore recommend that every charitable association of the city hold a meeting, take measures for this work now and forward to headquarters immediately.

The Women's Centennial Committee hope to have the co-operation of the women of the South, to take part in the Women's Department, that there may be a full representation of the handicraft of the hands of our beloved country, they may gain new strength and hope to continue women's best work.

Central office of the Committee. Mrs. Aubrey H. Smith, chairman, Lake Pine street; Mrs. Matthew Simpson, 1st, Mount Vernon street; Mrs. Theodore Cuyler, 1826 S. Rittenhouse Square.

Homes.—Homes for Aged and Infirm, Homes for Widows and Single Women, Homes for Children, Orphans, Homes for the Blind, Homes for the Deaf and Dumb, Convalescent Homes, Boarding Homes for Young Women, Magdalene Homes and Hospitals, Soldiers' Orphans' Homes, Nurseries for Children.

Hospitals.—Lying-in Hospitals, Foundling Hospitals, Cripples' Hospitals.

Women's Foreign Missions in the various religious bodies, Women's Home Missions, Tract Societies and Bible Readers, Female Tract Societies, Sunday Schools and Bible Classes, Hebrews Benevolent Associations, Hebrew Hospitals, Hebrew Homes.

Sisterhoods, Industrial Organizations, Nurses' Training Schools, Funds, Depositories, Sewing Schools, Women's Societies for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

I am instructed by the Women's Centennial Executive Committee at Philadelphia to collect and receive the above mentioned reports, and when the number is complete to transmit them to headquarters to the department at Philadelphia. It is expedient for the completion of the work, within the prescribed time, that the reports should be sent me by the first of March, or as soon thereafter as possible.

M. C. LILIENTHAL,
St. Charles Hotel, New Orleans.

The Nashville American of January 29 says: "The examination in the Intermediate Department of Vanderbilt University has just concluded. The second term will begin February 1. New students are arriving every day, and there is a most encouraging outlook for the future. Prof. Lipscomb begins a series of lectures upon Job's letters and English criticism. The university grounds have all been sodded, thus giving them a much improved appearance. The two debating societies are waxing hot with the weekly discussions. The membership of each is quite large. The students are greatly pleased with the Sunday evening services."

The Rev. B. P. Keasberry, a faithful missionary of the London Missionary Society, stationed at Singapore, fell dead while preaching in his pulpit in that city, September 6. He had preached in Ceylon for thirty-six years.

A village pedagogue, in despair with a stupid boy, pointed to the letter A and asked him if he knew it. "Yes, sir." "Well, what is it?" "I know him, very well by sight, sir; but rat me if I can remember his name."

The Great Carrollton Debate.

DEBATE FUND.

Mr. Ditzler has demanded $500 in payment for his quotations and corrections for the book. Our Baptist brethren everywhere said: "Give it to him. Do not let him out. Make any sacrifice to publish. We will raise the money." We have acted on these suggestions. We pay Mr. Ditzler $300 for the manuscripts when they are ready for the press, and $200 more when he reads the proof and admits that the type have reported what he said. We write this to ask that our brethren in the South make up a like sum to pay Bro. Graves for his part of the work. He has done a great work, and is certainly entitled to some little remuneration. There are one hundred men, we are sure, who, in order to the publication of this debate, will contribute $10 each, or twice the number who will contribute a cent. If we have to pay Elder Ditzler for getting thrashed, let us pay Bro. Graves for doing the work. All who are willing that their contributions for this purpose shall be equally divided between Dr. Graves and Ditzler may send their money to me, and it will be acknowledged under this head. And do we want an agent right now to sell the debate in every county in the United States. Send a stamp for circular.

W. D. MAYFIELD,
Manager S. B. P. Society.

The above appeared in the Baptist, published at Memphis, of January 29, 1876. The plain English of the note is that Dr. Ditzler is so sensible of his mortifying defeat at Carrollton that he is unwilling for the debate to be published and his speeches to go out to the world. In other issues of the same paper since the debate Dr. Graves has rather plaintively reiterated the above insinuation, rejoicing in the laurels of a supposed victory, he seeks to create the impression that Dr. Ditzler acknowledged his defeat, and by his fear or refusal to publish he accorded to him the mastery. Now, it is plain that such a construction of Dr. Ditzler's relation to the proposed publication is unjust and untrue. His work is no compensation for his brains and time to make a book for the Baptists to sell, and make money out of, is to the last simple justice and practical sense. Their demand is, first, to prepare his speeches, correct proof, etc., for the mere privilege of contributing to the support of the Baptist Publication Society, is the rankest presumption. And because, forsooth, he will not obey their command he is afraid to publish the acknowledgment of his defeat. But for a full refutation of this most unjust insinuation read the following extract from the "Notes of the Debate," by Bro. Horn, published in the St. Louis Christian Advocate. He is pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in Carrollton, Mo., heard the whole discussion, was with Dr. Ditzler constantly, and knows whereof he affirms.

In this connection I must mention another matter. I learn by letter, and by town talk that Baptists are saying that Dr. Ditzler "went back on the Disciple," and also that he refuses to let his manuscripts go into the publisher's hands. Both are false. Dr. Graves put his wild construction on the Discipline, and Dr. Ditzler refused to indorse that, of course. He at no time contradicted the Disciple. As to the other, Dr. Ditzler is eager to have the whole debate published. His written speeches are at their command, and he is willing to write out all the rest—even in two months' labor if they will pay him for the work. They engaged to make the report themselves, to be at all expense of getting it; and if their reporter has not got Ditzler's speeches it is not Ditzler's fault. They tried to trap Bro. Ditzler into promise to write all his speeches and furnish to them at his own expense, even after they had engaged to pay a reporter for the work. He informed their he was ready to do the work their reporter failed to do for a proper consideration, and that he was eager to have the whole published. This the matter stands today. Let all concerned take note and correct the misstatements in circulation.

As the Baptist circulates largely over the same territory with the ADVOCATE, I thought this explanation was demanded. I should like very much if Bro. Horn could give the readers of the ADVOCATE several letters about the debate. They would be of service to Methodism in Mississippi.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

The work on the East River bridge, New York, thus far has cost $3,800,000; it is estimated that at least $11,000,000 more will have to be raised. This done, the bridge will probably be completed by July, 1879. The expenditure for labor and material averages about $78,000 per month.

A little boy was told by his mother to take a powder she had prepared for him. "Powder, powder," said he, putting on a roguish smile; "mother, I ain't a gun!"

DOMINE, PROBASTI.

BY EMMA A. ADAMS.

Thou hast searched and found me out
Thou knowest my thoughts afar
Thou compassest my path and bed
And knowest what my manners are

Lord, on my lips there is no word
The slightest whisper thou dost hear
But thou dost know my every deed
And thou dost know their import clear

Such knowledge is too great for me
I cannot gain its height attain
O Deity whose greatness
Incloses me with greater strength to gain

Can man from God's spirit flee
If I could take the wings of morn
Or dwell in crystal court of seas,
He would not be of him forlorn

If he could climb to yon far star
And I spake as well of spheres beyond
His spirit still would find him there
And still his actions praise or blame

Can man by searching find him out
Through on the circle of the skies
He spans the universe about—
Its worlds are atoms in his eyes

His thoughts o'erreach the bounds of space—
Beyond creation's limits go—
Wisdom's heights and depths embracey—
Vain man, what canst thou do or know.

Yon skyey scroll behold afar
Lest thou its starry writings see
These but duodecimal lois are
Faint tracings of Infinity

The comets—steeds with manes of fire,
In fierce career o'er heaven's blue plains
They send their course to his desire,
Who guides them with unerring reins

And countless circling planets wheel
Each round its glorious circling sun
Time's suns in turn, attraction feel,
And rolled some mightier centers run

And thus these myriad systems vast
Speed to concentric orbits one,
Till all the stunning host at last
Revolves around the Great White Throne

The center of attraction's force,
By whom all things created move,
And there upholds the universe
With everlasting arms of love;

Man, offspring of the dull, vile worm,
That blindly gropes along earth's crust
Thou denizen of Time's brief term
How low thy forehead bids in dust

To him whose path is in the sea
To whom all nature homage pays
Bend thou thy stiff, rebellious knee
Acknowledge God in all thy ways.

Created Holiness.

MR. EDITOR: An article under the caption of "Created Holiness and Sin" appeared recently in your columns; and with your consent I shall be happy to beg permission to differ with the brother. I object to his joining together things which have no relation whatever. A man may conscientiously believe in "created holiness" who has no belief in "created sin." In these discussions the utmost fairness and holy candor are demanded; otherwise we would not enter the list. We have no desire to show our own smartness, nor the weakness or ignorance of those who take the other side of the question. We are far too busy in doing a work wherein there is infinitely more pleasure and profit. But we have a desire to see prevail the truth of God's word, and to guard the unwary from the very occasion of error. We take the ground that God can create a holy person, a holy spirit, and that he has done so, and this is what is meant by "created holiness."

1. We would say there is nothing in the "nature of" holiness which would debar God from creating it. Certainly it must be the most excellent thing in all the universe. It is the light in which he walks; it is the bright glory of the eternal God himself; and when the holy angels speak of him in their highest praise, it is: "Holy, holy Lord God of Sabbaoth." If, therefore, God should be found engaged in its creation, it seems that it could not at all be derogatory to his glorious character. The wisdom of God may often lead him to do those things which the foolishness of men despise.

2. There are some things clearly revealed in the Bible, concerning God's work in men's salvation, which in my humble estimation form strong presumptive evidence of a creative agency in the restoration of a sinful man to a state of holiness. Man is said to "be born of the Spirit." "Marvel not that I say unto you, Ye must be born again."—John iii, 7.

In speaking of the birth of the Lord Jesus, Mary in her amazement asks how these things can be, when the angel answers, according to Luke: "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." Here the creation and birth of our Lord is referred to the agency of the Holy Spirit, and our attention is especially called to the fact of its being a creative act of "highest power"—that is, infinite power. Our regeneration is brought about by the same infinitely wise and powerful agent, for a no less power could accomplish it. It is true that in our new birth there is no new matter or substance, either material or immaterial, brought into existence, for ours is wholly and entirely a spiritual change; but it is a change so thorough, so radical, so wonderful and so mighty as to require a divinely creative act to accomplish it; just as in the birth and creation of Christ Jesus. We are changed from a sinful state to a holy state by the Holy Ghost. Our carnal nature is changed into a new spiritual nature. Now nothing but the almighty power of God can change the nature of a thing. This will become evident by considering other passages. "You hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and sin."—Ephesians i, 2. The word quickened here means made alive. Passing from a state of death into a state of life is an expression importing the putting forth of that power which was done in raising Jesus from the dead. Paul tells us that he prayed earnestly that the Ephesians might know "What is the exceeding greatness of his power toward us who believe according to the working of his mighty power which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead."—Ephesians i, 19, 20.

To raise one from the dead requires the same creative energy as to make man out of the dust of the earth. Lazarus had been dead four days; decomposition had already begun, and to restore the parts so decomposed required a new creation. Other passages have precisely the same import: "Put off the old man, put on the new." "Called you out of darkness into his marvelous light." "I will give unto them a new heart," etc.

Such expressions as these, and many more that might be quoted, teach us that the change which the sinful and corrupt heart of man undergoes in being brought into a holy and acceptable state is the mighty working of the infinite power of the Holy Ghost.

"We were by nature the children of wrath, even as others." Here Paul speaks of a nature sinful by birth, and subject to the wrath of God. After regeneration the Ephesians were made possessors of a new nature, a holy, spiritual nature, or, as Peter declares, they were made "partakers of the divine nature."—Second Peter i, 4. Paul explains this by saying elsewhere: "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works." "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the renewing of the Holy Ghost."—Titus iii, 5.

To my mind this evidence proves most clearly that God can and does actually bring a sinner out of a corrupt and polluted state into a holy state by an omnipotent creative act; but to others we desire it to afford only a strong presumption that God can and has created holy intelligences.

3. We come now to consider the point really in question: Did God create Adam holy, or had he, previous to the exercise of his will, any moral qualities at all? We contend that God created him holy. Our first proof is that God created Jesus Christ holy, and, if so, it opens the way for the creation of a holy Adam. Peter, in the fourth chapter of Acts, in a prayer, says: "Of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, both Herod and Pontius Pilate," etc. Again, in the thirtieth verse he prays that "wonders may be done in the name of the holy child Jesus." These, taken in connection with that already quoted from Luke—"Therefore that holy thing which shall be born of thee," etc.—we would deem conclusive; but some infected with the new philosophy must set themselves to work to overturn that meaning which has been put upon these passages for ages in the church of God. To the ordinary reader it would appear that Christ was holy at his birth, and even before; but to others it is only "theological nonsense." We never could account for that strange disinclination men have of taking the words of the Bible in their ordinary and obvious sense, except on the principle that "men love darkness rather than light." The Bible is plainly written, intended for plain, unlearned men, especially those things which pertain to holiness; and when Christ is called a "holy child" after his birth, and a "holy thing" before, the common reader would take it to mean exactly what it says. As we believe it is already perfectly clear to the unlearned, we shall try to make it clear to the philosopher.

The word holy has three significations in Scripture. The first is ceremonially, and this may apply to things as well as men. But Christ could not be holy in this sense, because there is nothing in the context bending to this supposition. The angel did not broach this subject to Mary, neither did Peter in his prayer. Again, to be made holy ceremonially presupposes previous defilement. But we cannot admit the holy child Jesus to be at any time unclean. A second sense in the word holy is federal. Children are federally holy in view of being born of Christian parents. See First Corinthians vii, 14. But Christ occupies no such relation toward the race. Men must be born by ordinary generation to be sinful or holy, federally. Christ was not so born, and therefore was not federally holy. The third sense of the word is moral or spiritual, and it was in this sense that the Lord Jesus was a holy child and a "holy thing;" and this seems to be the sense in which it was understood by Peter and the angel. And it will require far more powerful arguments to make us believe the contrary than our new philosophy has yet put forth.

Again, Adam is said to have been created in the "image of God." "So God created man in his own image; in the image of God created he him." If he was created in the image of God, and yet not in holiness, it strikes us that the likeness was a very bad one, and utterly unworthy of God, though he says himself that it was "good." We think this is the interpretation the Apostle Paul puts upon it when he declares: "For whom he did foreknow he did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son." If being "conformed to the image of his Son" means being restored to a perfect "righteousness and true holiness," then does "created in the image of God" mean a creation in holiness. This is not left in doubt, for such are "justified" and then "glorified." And he says in another place: "According as he hath chosen us in him (i. e., Christ) before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy, and without blame."—Ephesians i, 4. Again he says: "Predestinated us to the adoption of children," "Made us accepted in the beloved," "In whom we have redemption through his blood," "The forgiveness of sins;" all of which are accessory or rather explanatory phrases of the words "Predestinated to be conformed to the image of his Son."

It is not surprising, therefore, that John Wesley could say he believed man "to be created in knowledge, righteousness and holiness," and that he could cheerfully defend the sentiment against the attacks of Dr. Taylor.—See his Original Sin, page 97, also page 101, paragraph 5.

Paul also declares that the new man "is created in righteousness and true holiness." If I have not already trespassed upon the editor's patience, in another letter I should like to take up "created sin."

JOHN.

WILKINSONVILLE, Miss.

Rev. Thomas Clinton.

MR. EDITOR: I do not wish to be censorious or hypercritical, but I confess that I am deeply grieved at the attempts which have been made to give the true history of my first colleague, Rev. Thomas Clinton, with whom I was intimately acquainted for fifty years. You recollect at our late Conference, as chairman of the committee on memoirs, I read a memoir of our deceased patriarch, which was thought to be worthy of the man, and which was highly commended by old members of the Conference, and soon after by correspondents who were present at the reading, both in the Nashville and New Orleans Christian Advocates. This led the family and numerous friends of Bro. Clinton to expect a faithful record of his Christian experience and faithful labors for fifty-six years in the Mississippi Conference; but instead of that we have in the minutes of our late Conference, just published at Jackson, Miss., what purports to be a "Memoir of Rev. Thomas Clinton," made up of a few disjointed quotations from the memoir adopted by the Conference, with an egregious mistake in the first line, representing Mr. Clinton as having been born of "Jewish parentage." This was not in the original memoir—could not have been: I wrote Irish parentage. I presume the mistake was made by some hasty copyist. The deep and well-marked Christian experience of Mr. Clinton, from his first awakening for more than sixty-five years, is scarcely discernible in the very brief memoir in the printed minutes. I had hoped that the memoir, as adopted by the Conference, would have been published at full length, either in our Conference minutes or our Conference organ, so that our gifted general editor, Dr. Summers, might have condensed it into a suitable memoir for the General Minutes, to carry down to posterity the name and irreproachable character of one of our last and greatest ministers; but in this I am disappointed. I retained no copy of the original memoir, though I have the materials—most of them furnished, at my request, by Bro. Clinton years ago—still in my possession.

I have no doubt but Bro. H. W. Drake, did the best he could in his reminiscences of Thomas Clinton with the imperfect materials he was able to command; but in his first number he has made many mistakes in names, dates, places and facts. If we admit that Mr. Clinton knew his own history. If I had not been so publicly associated with the memoir of Mr. Clinton I would have waited for some one else to correct these errors; but I do not feel willing for either the family or friends of Mr. Clinton to hold me responsible for the meager sketch in our Conference minutes of one of the best and, through a long life, most consistent Christian men and ministers I ever knew.

While on the subject I may be permitted to add that, as I was responsible for the memoir of Rev. William McCormick, there is in it, as published in our Conference minutes, a glaring error in printing circuit where it should have been circuits. You will relieve my embarrassment, Mr. Editor, by publishing the above. I hope some one yet will honor the church by writing a more homely and truthful memoir of my life-long co-laborer.

J. G. JONES.

PORT GIBSON, Miss., Feb. 4, 1876.

(NOTE BY EDITOR.—If the secretary, or whoever has the copy of the memoir of Father Clinton prepared by Bro. Jones for the Mississippi Conference, will send it to us we will gladly publish it.)

Influence Immortal.

Scientists tell us that all matter is affected more or less by all matter—that is, that there is no particle or atom of matter, however small, but what is operated upon by other particles of matter. This principle is true, as well in the moral as in the material world. No act of life but what has its influence; no word but what its force is felt for good or evil; no thought expressed but what its influence makes those who hear more Christ-like or devilish.

Influence is immortal. Do we think so? This careless world acts as though it mattered not what it said or thought or did. Perhaps reflection might change that opinion. I opine that we cannot perform a single act but what has an eternal influence.

The searcher after illustration may find one in the shop of the smith, who wields his hammer in the shaping of the heated iron. To a spectator looking carelessly at the man of the forge, beating into shape a rude piece of iron, the blow of the hammer has lost its influence or force or effect, if you please, when it has struck the iron upon the anvil. Not so, however, to the searcher after truth. If he examine the anvil, in it the force or effect of those blows still remains. If you touch it it will soon inform you of the presence of heat. The anvil is not from those blows. The influence of those blows is heat in the anvil.

Well, we have many anvils in the moral world to beat upon. Every blow has its force. We may feel no change while we hammer away; but God takes care of the heat we do not see or feel.

Influence never dies. It lives forever. Then what kind of an influence do we exert? Good or bad? One or the other. As parents, as Christians, as Sabbath school teachers, professedly before an unchristian world, what kind of an influence do we exert?

There is no such thing as neutral influence. We must act, nolens volens. Then care, examination, reflection, should attend every act. If down the stream of time we would send an influence that will bless, and that will leave behind us a good name, we should be actuated by the purest motives, and be influenced ourselves by the highest incentives. Inadvertence cannot be plead as a justifiable excuse when we come to render a final account. To him who has given us the grand opportunity of life we must all give a correct statement of its use, with all its forces; and of all these influence is the mightiest. Nothing but a recognition of responsibility and faithfulness until death will be acceptable to the great Searcher of hearts.

OBITUARIES.

ANOTHER elect lady is gone to the rest of God's people. Mrs. ANN REID died on the eighth of January, A. D. 1876, in Holmes county, Miss. Her maiden name was Scott. She was born in South Carolina, A. D. 1791; came to Mississippi Territory with her father in 1809; and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1818. She was married to Mr. James Reid in 1826. She lived twenty-five years in Wilkinson county, near old Bethel camp ground; thence removed to Tensas, La.; thence to Yazoo county, Miss., and finally, to Holmes county, Miss., where the last twenty-five years of her life were spent. Two daughters and one son mourn her loss.

What changes she saw as she passed her sojourn on earth! How wonderful to contemplate! She saw a sparsely settled territory turned into a rich State, abounding in wealth and luxury; she saw this wealth swept away and poverty overspread the once fair scene with deepest shades. She saw the introduction of the railroads and telegraphs, and almost the first steam navigation of the Western waters, and other improvements in all the arts of civilization almost countless. But to her there was a brighter glory than all these could boast in the marvelous progress of Christianity in the sixty-seven years of her connection with the militant church. She saw the first beginnings of Methodism in her adopted State; was associated with the great and good men who, among the pioneers, sowed the good seed, that she was privileged to see yield a glorious harvest. Of this movement she was more than a spectator—she was an earnest participant. Cotemporary with (and surviving them all) Winans, Drake, Burruss, Lane and Campbell, of the heroic age of Methodism in Mississippi, she sympathized with them and partook of their spirit. She had most exalted ideas of ministerial character and fidelity, and a gentle, loving way of prompting all to faithfulness in the Master's service.

It was never hard or out of place for her pastor to have prayer and religious talk with her at every visit. Oh, that church members all had this art! How embarrassing in some Christian families is either religious conversation or prayer! What demands now for pastors to gad about among their charges, and furnish all the news of the day; but what of the pastor who, like St. Paul, determines to know nothing in his charge but Christ and him crucified? How dull he would prove to many. Not so with Sister Reid. She was a live Christian. Feeble in health, and for many years in constant expectation of a sudden death, she lived joyfully on the confines of heaven. Her spirit caught of the radiance of the upper world, and threw back a luster that gave a tinge to all earthly things. She rejoiced evermore; all felt her happiness. She ardently loved the church, and was in full sympathy with it. She read the church papers with avidity, as giving her the best information of the triumphs of the cross.

Her joyful spirit triumphed over feebleness, over reverses, over bereavement, over poverty, over pain. Her faith said, "All things work together for my good. These light afflictions, which are for a moment, work out for me a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." She has entered into her rest.

W. P. BARTON.

DIED, January 15, of consumption, at the residence of Mr. A. M. Edwards, on Bayou Bœuf, Miss. JOSEPHINE VIRGINIA WYNN, the last but one of the seven sisters of Rev. John F. Wynn, of the Louisiana Conference.

Sister Josephine was born in Limestone county, Ala., on the sixteenth of January, 1845, and was just thirty-three years of age on the day of her death. The larger part of her life was spent in Louisiana. Possessing all the graces that adorn the female character, she easily won and retained the esteem and love of all who knew her.

Having consecrated herself to God in early life, and connected herself with the church, there was added to her many natural gifts "the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price."

Although suffering more or less, for several years, from that lingering disease, it was not until within the last four or five months that she appeared to suffer intensely at times, and within two months of her death that she was confined to her room. Knowing her quite intimately as her pastor, in sickness and comparative health, we have never seen one more exemplary in her Christian course, or more devoted to the cause of him whom she delighted to honor. During our pastoral visits, while speaking of Jesus and his love, she would frequently take up the theme, and make the hearts of all present glad with the music of that voice that we knew full well would soon swell the chorus of the angelic hosts above. It was especially during the latter part of her illness that she seemed so near to heaven, though not yet absent from the body, and when all near her seemed to breathe a heavenly atmosphere.

Immediately after the adjournment of the Louisiana Conference her brother, Rev. John F. Wynn, paid her a visit, and a blessed meeting that was akin to that when the blessed shall meet around the throne of God. Though our brother tarried a few days, expecting her to die, he had to leave, as duty called, with the full assurance, however, that they would meet on the everlasting shore, to part no more.

On our last visit she said she was almost gone, and when asked if she felt happy in the love of Jesus she said, in an audible whisper: "Yes, yes." As those of us about her bed would sing, "Nearer, my God, to thee," her favorite song, she seemed carried away on angelic wings, and to enjoy the very presence of those pure spirits. Conscious to the last moment, she forgot nothing, and left a message for all dear to her to meet her in heaven. A sister, standing near her bed, remarked in a low tone of voice: "She is going." She caught up the sound and said, "Going, going, gone," and with the last word her spirit sweetly took its flight. Her entire life being true, her death was triumphant. "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

HER PASTOR.

DIED, of consumption, at Milton, Fla., December 3, 1875, Capt. T. B. SHOCKLEY, in the thirty-second year of his age. He married Miss Mary J. Harrison, October 27, 1869. In 1873 he and his wife connected themselves with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which he remained a consistent member till the day of his death. On the morning before his death he expressed to me the conviction that his race was well-nigh run. As I was about leaving for Conference he bade me good-by, saying: "I shall never see you again on earth, for I shall be dead before you return; but I am ready to go, and hope to meet you in heaven." That night he died and went to his reward. The limits of this notice forbid any extended reference to his character; otherwise it would be a mournful pleasure to pay a tribute to his worth. He was the son of Rev. W. M. Shockley, formerly of the Alabama Conference, who by precept and example laid in his son's expanding character the foundation of a noble Christian manhood. He was esteemed by all for his integrity, and endeared to all by his modest demeanor. He died universally lamented, and leaves a record that is free from reproach. He was preceded to the better land by his little daughter, Branch Jece, who died July 22, 1875, in the third year of her age. Death has divided this household, leaving a widow and one child to weep over the graves of the departed. May the God of all grace comfort the widow and protect the orphan, and grant them both, when the labors of life are ended, a happy reunion with those who have gone before, in that land where death wields no scepter and the tomb casts no shadow.

A. O. ANDREW.

MRS. LEONA JANE SUMMER, the daughter of Joel W. and Martha F. Hughes, was born in Lauderdale county, Miss., November 30, 1853, and was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in Smith county, Miss., in 1864—in her eleventh year. She lived in the faithful discharge of Christian duties, and hence was a happy Christian. She loved the church and her institutions, especially the Sabbath school, and was prompt in attendance upon the public as well as private means of grace. She lingered for several months under that fell destroyer, bronchial consumption, but patiently endured, as seeing him who is invisible. As she neared the final point the more happy she seemed to become, until the crisis came. Then she asked her parents to sing: "O sing to me of heaven, sweet heaven;" and, while they were singing that delightful song she shouted the praise of God so as to be distinctly heard and understood; and in that happy frame of soul her immortal spirit winged its way home to God.

She was married to Mr. W. W. Summer September 21, 1874, in her father's home near Trenton, Smith county, Miss., and departed this life in the same place, August 17, 1875, aged twenty-one years, eight months and eighteen days. Thus passed from earth to heaven one of the most obedient daughters, one of the best of sisters, as well as one of the most affectionate companions, that we ever knew. Husband, parents, sisters, brothers, live so that you may meet in heaven your departed loved one.

DEPARTURE OF A PRECIOUS LITTLE LAMB.

Sweet ADA LEE PARKER, grandaughter of R. A. and E. J. Sibley, and daughter of William T. and Mary R. Parker, was born June 2, 1873, in Preston, Smith county, Miss., and died of membranous croup, November 12, 1875, aged two years, four months and fifteen days. Ada Lee was a sprightly child in body and mind; but God, in his infinite wisdom, saw fit to take her to himself. We therefore cheerfully acquiesce; knowing that he can take better care of and do for her more than we could. While our hearts are sad at her absence from our home here, we know she is in her heavenly Father's home, always beholding his face. She was the light and center of her home while here. We expect soon to rejoin her in heaven.

R. A. SUMLEY.

DIED, at his father's residence, February 8, MORGAN A. NORTHROP, son of George M. Northrop, sexton of the Carondelet Street church, aged six years and three months. This little boy was a member of the infant class in Carondelet Street Sunday school.

SUNLIGHT AND SHADOW.

Sunlight and shadow play upon the hills;
And chase each other on the restless waves,
Seeming to follow but their own sweet wills,
Yet to the powers above them faithful slaves—
Reflecting every changing atom with ease,
Stirred by a leaf, and dancing with the breeze.

Oh, blessed shadows, who so kind as you,
So patient, humble, generous and good?
Obedient to the sun, and ever true,
Your presence beautifies the roughest road,
Lends to the sternest rock a tender grace,
And throws a charm upon the meanest place.

Oh, blessed lights that make the shadows sweet!
That make this world so exquisitely fair!
Life is more full when lights and shadows meet
Than in the midnight gloom or hoyday glare,
And human hearts have little tenderness
Till grief and joy have met in fond caress.

One Way to Fraternity.

"On the report of the General Conference at Brooklyn, sending fraternal delegates, Northern Methodism stands. On the report of the General Conference at Louisville, returning fraternal delegates, Southern Methodism stands. It is well to know what these positions are, in the light of past and present history.

"Query: Can any good follow a parley, a conference, a mutual commission of wise and Christian men, occupying these standpoints?

"Yes; much every way. Rule out the rabid Wheelons and the gushing unconditionals; hold them off, and Episcopal Methodism may yet reach an honorable and permanent fraternity. Let us hope and pray for it."—Nashville Christian Advocate, January 22.

Is there not a streak of light in that suggestion?

"Rule out the rabid Wheelons and the gushing unconditionals" when you talk of establishing fraternity between the two Methodisms. Hold them off. Why? Because one has nothing to ask, and the other nothing to give. One demands nothing, and the other concedes nothing. Neither represents any considerable section of those on either side who really desire fraternity.

Take, for instance, our gushing brethren who would rush into the arms of Northern Methodism unconditionally. They do not represent us—Southern Methodists. Our people see, in such a step, a want of self-respect, an abandonment of principles. They see such real danger of misunderstandings and complications that they will not listen to the proposition. They shrink back and leave them without any following. And these would-be leaders, seeking their premature movement unsupported, begin to berate and abuse our people as sectional, full of hate, revengeful, clinging to dead issues, etc. We have had enough of that.

On the other hand, what is to be gained by conferring with those who, having been parties to an alienating strife, begin by saying that they have nothing to take back, nothing to modify, nothing to yield. To all show of grievances they reply: "Let bygones be bygones." I suppose that is what the amiable Pilate meant when he said: "What I have written I have written."

See how the large body of Northern and Southern Methodists might talk together, after these two extremes have been ruled out and held off.

Southern Methodist.—In an evil day of heat and passion you said we were "bastards and not sons." You have had time to cool off and think better of it. You must take that back.

Northern Methodist.—That was a hard speech to make concerning brothers; but we have said it so often, and writ it in a book called the "Great Secession," how can we go back on ourselves? We really like you; we feel the kin, and always have felt it.

S. M.—Call in the bad book and burn it. If you stand on the expense—we are poor, but never mind—we will bear half. As for going back on yourselves, that is only a modern phrase for what our Bible calls repentance and restitution. Come, now, lay your hand on your heart and answer me. Don't you believe we are as genuine, legitimate, regular Wesleyan Methodists as you are? Are we not branches of the same original stock with yourselves? Are we not as truly a part of the church organized in 1784 as you?

N. M.—Be that as it may, the Plan of Separation, as you call it, would rob our branch of the church of its national character—it would sectionalize us; whereas we claim the right to go everywhere under our glorious flag.

S. M.—Keep out of view, if you please, the unpleasant consequences of that plan as regards territorial restrictions. I am ready to talk with you there, and perhaps may relieve your fears. I am ready to be generous on that point, if you will first be just on another and more material one.

N. M.—Well, you have your property. The Supreme Court gave it to you. We have no idea of trying to get it away from you, though our wish extremists sometimes talk and write otherwise.

S. M.—True, the highest civil tribunal in the world gave us our property, and you assent to our quiet possession. You are even glad we have our own. I believe you. The court heard our claim, and divided the inheritance with us, as with sons. The court asserted our ecclesiastical and historical legitimacy. We contended for character as well as property—you had denied us both. We claimed the property only on the basis of character. The latter was dearer to us than the former. Is it not strange that you consent to the verdict of this arbitrator, and allow us our money—glad that we have it—and stick and hitch on our fair and good name? It is a matter of honor. We are sensitive to the insult you offer us before the world. We can have no "fraternal relations" with you until you come squarely up to this.

N. M.—It is uncomfortable to go back on ourselves so; but I guess we could come squarely up if your folks would make some confessions too. That would help us, like. I guess we hadn't ought to have said all we did say. The best of people do wrong under excitement. The hard talk was not all on our side, and your folks did a deal that they aughtn't have done. You know it.

S. M.—Yes, I do. We did and said much that had better been left undone and unsaid. If we ever denied your birthright, or said of you that you were a secession—no more a part or portion of the original Methodist Episcopal Church in America than the followers of Orange Scott—we should feel bound to take it back. We have spoken and written hard things of you; but if we had ever questioned, and denied formally and officially your church status, we should consider it our duty formally and officially to redress that wrong in the calmer hour of reflection.

N. M.—But your property is safe—you have it, and are welcome. We would not disturb your possession if we could.

S. M.—We have it; but not by your grace. And your reluctance to admit the fact on which our title rests makes our extremely timid people think you still have an eye on the property.

N. M.—But we repealed the plan, at least some of our folks did, in 1848—four years after it was drawn up.

S. M.—Herod once made a bad promise, involving the rights of an absent party; and he did worse by sticking to it. We are dealing with Christians, not with Herodians.

N. M.—If we do the right thing we don't wish to seem to do it under that plan, because that plan would compel us to leave the South, where we claim three hundred thousand members, and have schools and churches, and have spent much labor; and our prospects for great usefulness are promising. We can't think of doing that.

S. M.—Even sovereign nations have taken a treaty under revision, years after it was ratified, and agreed to alter boundaries and to do other things necessary to adapt themselves to changed circumstances. The two Methodisms might meet on proper grounds, and do the same.

N. M.—Then you would not insist on our abandoning our churches and schools in the South, and staying on our side of Mason and Dixon's line?

S. M.—There is no longer such a line, in its former significance, and therefore it has no sides. If you can do anything for the negroes to make them wiser and better—Christianize them—I trust you may have large success. We will interpose no obstacle.

N. M.—And what of the whites?

S. M.—Come to all that want you. Let us change the plan, that you may get to them peaceably.

N. M.—Would there be then any interchange of pulpits, and any free and social intercourse between ministers and Conferences?

S. M.—That would depend, among us, entirely on the kind of agents your church employed, and the kind of work they did and the way they did it. There would be no moral hinderance or impediment any longer to your coming, the plan being modified, at that point, to authorize it.

N. M.—Suppose the plan modified in its territorial aspects by concession on your side, and acknowledged of force, on our side, so far as it relates to your status and historical rights and position—could both churches then get back to the position indicated by our good Bishop Morris, when he wrote, in September, 1845, saying: "If the Plan of Separation had been carried out in good faith and Christian feeling on both sides it would scarcely have been felt any more than the division of an Annual Conference."

S. M.—Not so easily now as then. A long territorial line between them promoted peaceful working. Now there would be more liability to friction, as the two churches would be often operating in the same field. The more need of revising the treaty and coming to an understanding, that the scandal of building altar against altar may be avoided. The plan, under its modification, might do for neighborhoods what it meant to do for sections. Let us have peace.

N. M.—How can all this be effected?

S. M.—By your General Conference appointing commissioners to meet with our commissioners.

N. M.—I understand your General Conference were not all agreed in appointing commissioners. Only a majority was for it, while a large minority opposed. Will you please give me the terms of their appointment?

S. M.—You are mistaken. Both majority and minority reports agreed in appointing the commissioners. All were for that. Their difference was on a minor point. Here is the resolution:

"Resolved, That, in order to remove all obstacles to formal fraternity between the two churches, our College of Bishops is authorized to appoint a commission, consisting of three ministers and two laymen, to meet a similar commission authorized by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and to adjust all existing difficulties."

N. M.—We can meet you there. We must do it. When all existing difficulties are adjusted, then what? Would you not favor union?

S. M.—No; we can be friends without uniting. One of your oracles has said: "There are two Episcopal Methodisms in this country. The genius, the tendencies, the development, the spirit that animate and underlie them began to be manifest before 1844. Slavery was not the cause, but the occasion only of their separation into two bands, each under its own government." I could give you their differentia if we had time. By and by we may go over that. At peace—they would still be apart; and they must be apart to be at peace.

N. M.—I should like to have your prophecy of what would come after peace—fraternity—was well established between the two Methodisms.

S. M.—The negro free, as well as the negro slave, has been an occasion of difference between us. This would have continued so long as you were at a distance, theorizing, and we, on the spot, dealing practically with the case. Now you are in contact with the problem; full of hope, full of plans. Gradually you will come over to where we stand. You are a smart, shrewd people, and learn fast. In the last few years you have moved toward our position. The tendencies to further movement in this direction are evident. The poetry is wearing off. Your Annual Conferences in the South will divide on the color line, and ultimately you will see and acknowledge that the best service you can do for the negroes is to help them organize a separate and independent church, receiving your friendly aid.

N. M.—The negroes being well and even better provided for than now—what next, for the white people?

S. M.—They can agree among themselves. Your church will then have few missionaries or other agents of that class left in the South. Nobody will exclude them; like cranes and swallows they will leave these parts. Here and there you may have a self-supporting congregation among the whites of the South, as we may have among those of the North. But as the passions of fratricidal war die out, and fraternal feeling and intercourse increase, each section of the country will be left pretty much to the care of that branch of Methodism which is native and to the manner born. Each branch is strong enough and large enough for one General Conference jurisdiction. And so we shall come back, under the next generation, to the happy state which Bishop Morris desired to see, but died without the sight. Episcopal Methodism will bless these United States of America with the gospel and ordinances as taught by Wesley, under two General Conferences, each homogeneous; and this division of jurisdiction will produce no more trouble than the division of an Annual Conference."

N. M.—I am pleased at the horoscope, and wish the good time coming was nearer. But will there be no co-operation between these co-equal bodies, substantially of the same faith?

S. M.—The future can take care of its own issues. Perhaps the two Methodisms doing their work at home, each in its own field, may unite on missionary operations abroad, and together build up Conferences in Mexico, in Brazil, in China, in India and in Africa, which shall, in time, grow into independent General Conferences, and thus carry out the Wesleyan mission and mission of spreading scriptural holiness over the earth.

N. M.—Brother, what do you really think is in the way of this consummation?

S. M.—Some faults and feelings contrary to it and delaying it, will no doubt be found in us Southern Methodists. But, as we can see other people's faults more clearly than our own, let me tell you where the main difficulty will be:

1. An unwillingness on your part to do its justice, not in properly, but in the more important matter brought out in the opening of our conversation.

2. There is among your people an ambition for territorial aggrandizement—for a "national" organization, which is in the way of peaceful adjustment. Their ecclesiastical polity is controlled by their notion of promoting the union of the States rather than the unity of the churches. They are so busy taking care of "the government" that they seem to forget, at times, what is due to the gospel.

Western Methodist.

In Scotland they have narrow, open ditches, which they call sheep-drains. A man was riding a donkey across a sheep pasture, but when the animal came to a sheep-drain he would not go over it. So the man rode him back a short distance, turned him round, and applied the whip, thinking, of course, that the donkey, when going at the top of his speed, would jump the drain before he knew it. But not so. When the donkey got to the drain he stopped all of a sudden, and the man went over Mr. Neddy's head. No sooner had he touched the ground than he got up, and, looking the beast in the face, said: "Verra weel pitched; but then how are ye gaun tae get over yersel?"

There was a female population of ten years and over of 13,970,479 in the United States according to the last census, and of this 1,439,321—a trifle over one-tenth—were engaged in various trades and occupations. The bulk of this one-tenth consisted of domestic servants, 857,351. In numbers next came the tailors and seamstresses, 97,207; next milliners and dressmakers, 90,180; next teachers, 81,017; next cotton mill operatives, 61,388; next laundresses, 50,690; next nurses, 40,170; and next boarding house keepers, 7,000.

I find that some acknowledge the hand of the minister, but not the hand of Christ. This is a sore dishonor to our glorious Immanuel. It was said of the Erskines that God took away a great part of the blessing from their labors because the people could not see Christ over their heads. The Lord teach us to look above the heads of ministers, to our glorious Redeemer, riding on his white horse, and sending out his arrows of conviction. McCheyne.

A sheriff at St. Albans, Vt., recently, having two insane persons to convey from the St. Albans jail to an asylum for the insane at Brattleboro, Vt., called one of the lunatics aside and asked his aid in keeping watch of his companion during the journey, and then did the same with the other. The two lunatics sat side by side, silently eyeing each other through the whole route, and they have kept guard over each other in the asylum ever since.

As a schoolmaster in Scotland was teaching an urchin to cipher on the slate, the precocious pupil put the following question to his instructor: "Whaur div a' the figures gang till when they're rubbit out?"

Religious Intelligence.

—The good work is advancing in Egypt. Ten years ago the Presbyterians planted a mission there. They have now 10 churches, with an average communion roll of more than 400 members in connection with each.

—A missionary in Persia, in visiting Tiflis, a city near Asiatic Turkey, reports that he had never seen such a desire for reading, and such willingness to purchase and read the Scriptures.

—The Northern Presbyterian Church in its march South has organized the Synod of Atlantic, composed of 6 presbyteries in four States, being 123 churches, 44 ministers, and about 10,000 members, mainly colored. They recently held a meeting in Wilmington, N. C.

—The report that 250,000 Polish Catholics have resolved to pass over to the Greek Church is confirmed. A memorandum to the Emperor of Russia acknowledges the secession, and justifies it by "the moral impossibility of accepting the dogma of infallibility."

—While recently in Sweden, Bishop Simpson dedicated chapels at Stockholm, at Upsala and at Wisby. The attendance of members of the State church upon these services showed that the disposition of the Swedish people toward Methodism is becoming more favorable.

—Since the outbreak in Acapulco, Mexico, against the preaching of the Rev. M. N. Hutchinson, of the Presbyterian Board, the Protestant church in that town has increased until it now numbers 100 members. In the surrounding country still towns 100 persons have become Protestants since the attack upon the missionaries.

—A committee of missionaries at Shanghai was appointed to revise the Shanghai Colloquial New Testament, and the missionaries at Constantinople, who are now revising the Turkish New Testament, and expecting to complete that work next summer, were invited to continue their work so as to include the Old Testament in Turkish.

—No one is so popular at unhealthy Mombasa, on the East African coast, as the newly-arrived Church Missionary Society doctor. The work of providing a refuge for liberated slaves at this place is steadily going on. The new settlement is called Frere Town, in honor of Sir Bartle Frere, and is now ready for two hundred refugees from Zanzibar.

—The Wesleyan Methodist says: "English Methodists who were interested in the oft-told tale of the Rev. George Scott's mission in Sweden will be glad to know that the American Methodists have been so successful in Sweden that now there are over 100 Methodist preachers and 5,000 communicants there and these are petitioning to have a separate Conference."

—The English Wesleyans have sent the Rev. G. T. Perks to South Africa to visit the various Wesleyan mission stations, and to preside at the first South African Wesleyan Conference, which is to be held in Natal. At the training school for native Christian teachers at Healdtown, Graham's Town district, 58 young men and 7 young women have been sent out to take charge of schools since 1864. A short time ago, when seven students finished the course of studies, 28 applicants were made for the vacancies.

—Rev. Griffith John, of the London society, declares that speaking and reading Chinese are the only two branches of linguistic study which the foreigner can master. Chinese composition is beyond his reach. He has never seen a production by a foreigner which, from a literary point of view, did not excite the ridicule of an ordinary native scholar. Most missionaries, therefore, leave their writing to the Chinese scholars, and are satisfied if they are able to form a critical judgment on the compositions which these native writers have prepared for them.

—The English clergy of the Established Church are said to be working with all their might to make disestablishment popular. The Vicar of Owston has determined to resist at law the right of Methodist ministers to be called "reverend" on their family tombstones. Miss Hester Taylor, daughter of a Nonconformist, died at Stotfold. The vicar refused to read the burial service over the grave, or to allow any one else to do so, saying: "It is not in my power to depute any one to perform a service over the grave in the parish churchyard except a lawfully ordained minister of the Church of England."

The Young Men's Christian Associations of all lands have met in a General International Conference six times, namely: In Paris in 1855 and 1867, in Geneva in 1858, in London in 1862, in Elberfeld in 1865, and in Amsterdam in 1872. The seventh has just closed its three days' meetings in Hamburg, Germany. England and Scotland sent 40 representatives; America and Holland each 5, France 2, and Switzerland and Belgium each 1. The second Sunday in November was set apart as a day of prayer for young men. The associations number in the whole world about 250,000 members. Germany has 9,000 members, Holland 4,000, France 1,100, Scotland 7,000, and Ireland 35 associations.

An association "for the maintenance of purity of worship" in the Established Church of Scotland says, in view of "the most unseemly attitude of sitting in prayer, introducing instrumental music in praise," etc., "we are threatened with an entire subversion of our pure and simple worship by professed friends. Some ministers, kirk sessions, Sabbath school teachers and young men's associations are either actively or passively conniving at changes and corruptions against which the sound Presbyterians of Scotland have steadily protested ever since the days of Knox. The address loudly calls to all intelligent and earnest Presbyterians to preserve our land from a great evil, with which we are at present so seriously threatened."

Our Young People.

CHILDREN'S HYMN.

From the sunny morning
To the starry night,
Every look and motion
Meets our Father's sight.

From our earliest breathing
To our latest year,
Every sound we utter
Meets our Father's ear.

Through our earthly journey,
Wheresoe'er we go,
Every thought and feeling
Doth our Father know.

Let us, then, be careful
That our looks shall be
Brave and kind and cheerful,
For our Lord to see.

Let us guard each moment
With a holy fear,
Fit our every saying
For our Lord to hear.

Let no thought within us,
Hidden or confessed,
Ever bring a sorrow
To our dear Lord's breast.

Hear us, O our Father!
Hear our earnest plea—
Teach thy little children
How to live for thee!

Advocate and Guardian.

From Our Little Friends.

NEAR MARION, ALA., Feb. 8, 1876.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: As I see a good many little boys and girls writing to you, I thought that I would write you a short letter. My papa takes the Advocate—both the New Orleans and Nashville. We all like to read them very much, especially the Child's Corner in your paper. Your friend, Rev. J. O. Keener, is our pastor for this year. I have heard him preach twice. We live near two of his churches. I attend Sabbath school at one of the churches. Unfortunately our Sabbath schools in the country close in the winter, though we have a small one going on now.

Mr. Editor, in regard to Grandpa Goodale's letters about Barney and the boys' nest—we little folks were very much excited about it at first, but we now have come to the conclusion that it is about like the Irishman whom I heard of, who came over to America. He was boasting, in the presence of a gentleman, how he could fight. The man told him that he knew of a little man not bigger than his thumb that could whip him. The Irishman disputed it. The man referred him to a large hornets' nest. He told him to rap at the door, and the little man of the house would come out. He tapped the hornets' nest and said: "Halloo! little man of the house, come out here; I want to fight you." The hornets all flew out, and the Irishman had to retreat at the top of his speed, hallooing at every jump that he could not fight the man of the house and all of the family at the same time. I see in Grandpa Goodale's last story that we are to have the long looked-for story, "How Barney Milked the Boys' Nest," now, if Tom don't interfere again, as usual, with some of his big words. And now, Mr. Editor, wishing you great success with the ADVOCATE, I remain your little friend,

WILLIE TUCKER.

Three Sunbeams.

BY SIGMA.

Three little sunbeams started out from behind a cloud one day to seek their fortunes. Playing along on their way, each thought of his future. Said one: "I will seek the waves of some river or sea, and will spend my life in playing with the ripples and frolicking with the fishes; and when I am weary and night comes on I will go to sleep in the saffron heart of the water-lily. I will take light wherever I go, and all shall bless me. Happiness is the fortune I seek."

Another said: "I will be high, high up, where all shall climb to reach me. I shall fly to the peak of some lofty mountain-top, or I will grace the palace home of a king, and perhaps rest upon the coronet of gems worn by his beautiful queen. I will be admired. Poets shall sing my beauty, and all shall speak of me. Fame is the fortune I seek."

But the third sighed, saying nothing; yet she thought sadly to herself: "Ah, me! I am but a little beam of sunshine; what can I do? I too would love to play upon the ocean, or rest in the lily bed, or light the home of a king; yet wherever I may go I will, at least, be content. I will love all things, and peace shall be my fortune."

Down upon the bank of a beautiful river a group of merry children stood with rods and lines. "Happy little fishermen!

"How fortunate," thought a little sunbeam; "now I shall have joy indeed." But soon they complained of the sunlight.

"We can catch nothing here," said they; "let us go down into the shade of the trees."

A snowy-winged sail-boat came gliding across the water. In it were seated two lovers. The lady's curls were like gold, her eyes bluer than the sparkling depths below.

"Ah! she will see me," said Sunbeam, dancing lightly from ripple to ripple, watching her reflection in the water, thinking nothing in the world could be more lovely than herself. But the fair lady raised her hand to her eyes, exclaiming: "How pleasant! were it not for the sunlight. Let us hasten to the shade."

And once more Sunbeam was left sorrowful and humiliated. She sank down, down, upon the hard rocky bed of the river. None loved or admired her; she was forsaken and despised, and she wished herself once more among the clouds with her laughing sisters.

In the luxurious apartment of a magnificent palace a little sunbeam has found its way, lighting up frescoed ceiling and gleaming marble. Soon the energetic voice of the housekeeper is heard: "Annette, close the shutters and draw the curtains. It is strange that you are so careless. That sunlight will fade this crimson to white."

Poor little Sunbeam, shut out to shine upon hard walk and rough pavement!

But of the one who said: "I will be content?"

Upon the mountain-side she had found a bit of moss shivering in the cold and shadow. "Let me warm you," whispered Sunbeam, sending a cheering ray into the heart of the moss, which lifted up its head, and grew warm and happy all day. Darting on, she shone into a narrow alley where sunlight rarely found its way, and, slipping in through a hole in a neat but tattered curtain, found herself in a basin of soap and water! Not a poetical home for our little Sunbeam! Do you remember her motto?

Three little children were receiving their daily bath; for in this humble lodging neatness and order were not thought to be incompatible with poverty. But little Sunbeam's wonderful arrival caused sudden suspension of operations.

Such shouts of joy as sounded within those attic walls I am sure had never been heard there before. Cries of "See, see!" "Rainbows!" "Oh, look, quick!" And when an old pipe stem had been procured, and the bubbles began dancing and chasing each other about the room, I think it safe to say that no happier children could have been found in that or any other city.

And it was only when, exhausted by excess of happiness, they had fallen into a restful slumber that Sunbeam softly withdrew. And soon fading away in the arms of "Twilight," she thought of her brief life and the happiness she had given, and said:

"Poor, simple little Sunbeam that I am, I have found not only my own fortune, but those of my sisters also. I have had love and admiration, and I am at peace with all the world, and am content."—Morning Star.

What a Boy Can Do.

About two hundred and sixty years ago a poor lad of seventeen was seen traveling on foot in the south of England. He carried over his shoulder, at the end of a stick, all the clothing he had in the world, and had in his pocket an old purse with a few pieces of money given him by his mother, when, with a throbbing, prayerful heart, she took her leave of him on the road, a short distance from their own cottages.

And who was John? for that was his name. He was the son of poor but honest and pious people, and had six brothers and five sisters, all of whom had to labor hard for a living. He was a goodly lad, and at fourteen was disappointed in getting a place as parish clerk, and with his parents' consent set out to get employment.

At the city of Exeter, where he first went, he met with no success; but as he looked on the beautiful cathedral, and in the bookseller's window, a strong desire sprung up in his mind to become a scholar, and at once he set out for the University of Oxford, some two hundred miles off, walking the whole way. At night he sometimes slept in barns, or on the shelter side of a haystack, and often met with strange companions. He lived chiefly on bread and water, with occasionally a draught of milk as a luxury.

Arrived at the splendid city of Oxford, his clothing nearly worn out and very dusty, his feet sore, and his spirits depressed, he knew not what to do.

He had heard of Exeter College in Oxford, and there he went, and, to his great delight, was engaged to carry fuel into the kitchen, to clean pans and kettles, and that kind of work.

Here, while scouring his pans, he might often be seen reading a book.

His studious habits soon attracted the attention of the authorities, who admitted him into the college as a poor scholar, providing for all his wants.

He studied hard, and was soon at the head of his class. He rose to great eminence as a scholar, was very successful as a minister of Christ, and many years before his death, which took place when he was seventy-two, he visited his father and mother, who were delighted to see their son not only a great scholar, but a pious bishop. Such was the history of Dr. John Prideaux, who used to say: "If I had been a parish clerk of Cheborough I should never have been Bishop of Worcester." He left many works as fruits of his industry and learning.

WHOSE BOY IS THAT? He may be seen any day, in almost any part of the village; he never makes room for you on the sidewalk, looks at you saucily, and swears smartly if asked anything; he is very impudent, and often vulgar to ladies who pass; he delights in frightening, and sometimes does serious injury to the little boys and girls; he lounges at the street corners, and is the first arrival at a dog fight or any other sport or scrape; he crowds into the postoffice in the evening, and multiplies himself and his antics at such a rate that people having legitimate business there are crowded out; he thinks himself very sharp; he is certainly very noisy; he can smoke and chew tobacco now and then, and rip out an oath most any time. We ask whose boy he is? Mother, is he yours? We think he is, for there are many good qualities in the lad, and we do not think that you know what he does on the street. Look after him, mother; keep him more at home. Train him, and you will have a son to be proud of.—American Rural Home.

Why are pianos the noblest of manufactured articles? Because they are grand, upright and square.

The Stealing Epidemic.

Sometimes one form of crime and sometimes another takes the lead. Judging from the general testimony of our exchanges, the most prominent vice of the present hour is stealing. Our Northern religious papers have recently been much occupied with the fall and exposure of two prominent Methodists—Pond, of Worcester, and Winslow, of Boston. These men have attracted more than usual attention because of their high and influential position in the church and in society. The instances in which professedly religious men have of late been guilty of forgery, of embezzlement, and of fraud in other ways, are not few. The prevailing love of money has infected all classes, and those who were once honest and virtuous are occasionally numbered with the victims. This fact only indicates how almost universal and deep the corruption is, and how widespread is the terrible infection.

The whisky prosecutions are revealing dishonesty in high places, and sending hitherto respectable citizens to the penitentiary by scores. Failures and bankruptcies frequently are connected with the exposure of reckless and criminal abuse of credit, and the dishonest appropriation or waste of other people's money. In politics the general drift is to peculation and plunder, and office-holders, as the henchmen and instruments of party supremacy, are expected to gather spoils for themselves and their masters. In private business, in buying and selling, and in mercantile transactions, there is little conscience left about going in debt and in reference to meeting financial obligations. Merchants will buy goods on credit and borrow money to-day, and suspend to-morrow, and banks will receive deposits up to the very hour that they close their doors and declare themselves broken and insolvent.

There are, of course, some risks in legitimate business, but many business failures, when investigated, show that the confidence of creditors has been abused, and that there has been culpable carelessness and often intentional violations of trust. No man should be regarded as honest who trifles with the trusts confided to him, and who, in his haste to get rich, or in the endeavor to sustain his own credit, brings loss and ruin upon another. Both Pond and Winslow probably intended to take up their forged paper before others had been injured, and before their own crimes should be exposed. The clerk that overdraws or embezzles intends to replace the money; the bank defaulter cherishes the purpose to restore what he has used until his defeated plans make it impossible. The borrower uses his credit freely for speculative ventures, expecting, if fortunate, to meet his obligations, but if the hazard turns out badly he knows that he will carry his friends down with him. There is evidently an utter giving way of the sense of moral obligation in reference to business trusts and the sacred duty of paying debts. A man's inability to pay may be conceded, but had he the right to so involve himself and his creditors as to bring about this state of things? If he has been reckless, improvident and deceptive as to the true state of his affairs, we do not see how he can be accounted honest, although there is no law to convict him of stealing.

The abuse of credit, of trusts, and every form of fraud, doubtless owe their immediate cause to the inordinate love or the inexorable want of money. Where style, influence and position depend upon money, and where money is the key that opens almost every door of luxury and comfort, the temptation to get it in any possible way is very great. Whatever the character of the opportunity there are thousands who cannot withstand the tempting occasion. Conscience gives way, every Christian character yields, and those who are without these restraints care nothing but public opinion and legal prosecution. Dishonesty, however, is but a symptom or a single aspect of the moral condition. Integrity is wholeness. A man of integrity is good in every respect—he is chaste, truthful, just, honest. To be without integrity in business and in the pursuit of gain shows that the whole character is bad, and that this particular manifestation is owing to circumstances. "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." The principle involved in one point embraces the entire law, and the moral restraints are loosened in every direction. A cancer in the face, or in any part of the body, indicates a diseased condition of the entire system. Stealing in the community points to a general depravity that at times breaks up in this particular way.

It is not surprising that there should be so much fraud in connection with the whisky revenue, since the whole whisky business is a wrong to society. Men who have the conscience to make it or deal in it are not likely to stickle about cheating the government out of the tax laid upon it. They have already defiled their souls with the crime against society, and how can we expect them to be honest with the government that licenses the wrong? When men touch the whisky business the wholeness, the integrity of character is broken, and these frauds are the spawn of this monster of iniquity.

To be thoroughly honest people must be right all round. Political hatred, religious prejudice and private interests must have done with expediencies, and they must learn to "do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with God." In business, politics and in religion there is need of a great reformation. The devil, in the way of stealing, is just now let loose, and he revels in the hearts and consciences of men, but he doubtless found the house empty, swept and garnished, and ready for his possession. More stringent laws may help to repress the evil, but a general revival of religion, wherein every convert so often ling shall clear himself of stealing, confess his sin, and make restitution, will be the only effectual relief. Specialisms will not do—theft, drunkenness, lechery, are manifestations of the one body of death. Integrity is wholeness, and true religion is a new creature in Christ Jesus.

Col. John B. Sale.

The death of Col. Sale has taken from us a brother beloved, and a friend whom we esteemed it a privilege to know and honor. Most kind, considerate and helpful he was, and always wise, tender and true. Than he there was among us no higher type of genuine manhood. Eminent in his profession, unselfish in his devoted patriotism, gifted in intellect, and cultivated and refined in his tastes, his heart was warmed with the purest benevolence, and ennobled by the sweetness and beauty of the domestic affections. His son, Dr. E. P. Sale, writes us that his disease was locomotor ataxia; and that the disease was probably induced by excessive professional labor. Col. Sale was, by birth, education and enlightened conviction, a Methodist. He knew the God of his father, and died in assured hope of the better resurrection. His death adds one more to that goodly company of our loved ones, of the family kindred, who within a few brief years have entered into rest. The Nashville Christian Advocate, in an advanced slip, kindly furnishes us with the following excellent obituary sketch by Dr. McFerrin:

Col. John Burruss Sale was the eldest son of the Rev. Alexander and Mrs. Sarah Burruss Sale, and was born in Amherst county, Va., June 7, 1818, and died in Aberdeen, Miss., January 21, 1876. The announcement has carried sorrow to many hearts. Col. Sale was extensively known and greatly beloved. His father removed to Alabama in 1820 and settled near Courtland, in the valley of the Tennessee. He was a worthy Virginia gentleman, and was esteemed as a genuine Methodist preacher. He was one of the founders of Lagrange College, and Bishop, the subject of this notice, was educated at that institution, under Dr. Snow, Bishop Paine, Young, Sale gave early evidence of superior intellect, and made rapid and steady progress in his academical studies. Having finished his college course, he entered upon the study of law, and in due time was admitted to its practice. To his profession he addressed himself with becoming industry, and soon rose to eminence. He was connected with gentlemen of the finest legal attainments in the country, and occupied an elevated position at the bar. For many years before his death he resided at Aberdeen, Miss., where he was highly esteemed by his fellow citizens, and where he was honored by all classes. In the late war he was an ardent friend of his native South, and volunteered for the service, and from one position to another he was promoted till he became one of the principal counselors of the chief officers in the Western army. Wise, judicious and brave, he was every way suited to the places of confidence to which he was assigned. Col. Sale was a noble specimen of a man. Tall, erect, well developed, with a large, open face, beaming dark eyes, and raven-black hair, in his middle manhood, he attracted attention among multitudes. But it was his high-toned morality, and devotion to the cause of the Christian religion, that gave him the highest rank. He had been early trained in the way of righteousness—his father's house was a house of prayer. His early associates were men of Christian virtue; his education had been directed by a Christian president and faculty, and his mind had been early impressed by the grand doctrines of the Bible; hence when he became a man he became a Christian, and united with the church of his fathers. His last sickness was protracted, but he evinced great patience, and was constantly engaged in prayer and in preparation for his change. His mind was clear, and he said he was "getting nearer and nearer to God." When the last hour came he said he had been getting ready for years, that now his faith was just as great as poor human nature could experience. He met death calmly, thoughtfully, and prayerfully, leaving his wife and children to the care of that God in whom he had trusted. His last wife was Annie Cornelius, brought up and educated in New Orleans, and was married to Col. Sale in Memphis, July 24, 1866. A devoted family has been bereaved, the country has lost a noble citizen, and the church a much friend and a worthy member; and heaven has another happy pilgrim "safely home." Col. Sale was buried January 25, the funeral rites having been performed by his old president and devoted friend and neighbor, Bishop Paine. The writer offers his sincere sympathy to the family and friends of our departed brother, whom he mourns as though he were a relative connected by blood. Surely he was our friend, and the son of a friend whom we loved as a father.

The Gospel of Numbers.

NUMBER III.

This week we give a table of Conferences which have overpaid their assessments. The fact of overpayment is both new and thrilling. We have not in this table reckoned amounts collected for domestic missions. You will please remember, therefore, that in most cases full as much more as is here reported would have to be added to cover the whole amount of missionary money paid by the Annual Conferences. That the spirit of missions is growing in our church is further evidenced by the fact that for the first time since the war a few of the Conferences have contributed more largely for foreign than domestic missions. This is the only true mission work—the care of our home fields, while yielding to no other work in its importance, is not properly missionary work, and we may not silence our consciences by pleading our duty thereto in bar of the imperative call to awaken to a fuller measure of our obligation to carry the word of life to those who, by distance and birth, are destitute of even the knowledge of its existence.

Number of members taken from last printed General Minutes.

CONFERENCES OVERPAID.

Conferences.	Assessments.	Paid.	Members.	Amount per member.
West Texas	[illegible]	$508 85	1,520	[illegible]
Western [illegible]	[illegible]	196 62	17,115	[illegible]
Missouri	[illegible]	3,291 32	21,703	[illegible]
Indian Mission	[illegible]	87 13	890	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	1,151 15	11,227	[illegible]
Germany Mission	[illegible]	401 50	916	[illegible]
South Carolina	[illegible]	2,192 36	39,063	[illegible]

Let us ponder for a moment, deeply and prayerfully ponder, these figures. The largest amount per member is from the new German Conference. All honor to our Teutonic brethren. Here is a statement of their place, copied from their report: "The time-honored custom among Methodists to hold monthly missionary prayer meetings has become extinct among us. The regular weekly prayer meeting is, in the first week of each month, converted into a missionary prayer meeting. At the close of these meetings the attendants deposit their contributions, usually widows' mites, in a tin box placed near the door. This box is opened annually, and the result handed in as missionary money. These monthly prayer meetings do not only encourage and cherish missionary zeal, but also strengthen our belief in our Savior's final triumph. I can assure you that our German members are wonderfully well posted in regard to the cause of missions throughout the world."

It may be said that the result which they reached was easy of accomplishment where the membership was small, but could not be accomplished in a large Conference. But then, to the three large Conferences—Missouri, Virginia, and South Carolina—Missouri was devastated last year by drouth and grasshoppers; Virginia's worn-out lands are not yet released after the desolation of war; and South Carolina, who can tell its poverty and its sorrow? These three large Conferences grandly move to the front. Wealth has not controlled, numbers will not be found to unlock the problem. I am inclined, from my own study of the figures and facts, to offer as the true solution the simple fact that in some way the preachers in these Conferences have become more deeply imbued with the spirit of missions than in sister Conferences. Another statistical fact helps to this conclusion. When the missionary treasury was in peril during the past year, and our missionaries suffering, the secretaries made earnest calls on preachers to take up collections and forward to the treasurer direct, in advance of the Conference sessions. In making up this table, which has been done directly from the treasurer's book, I find the largest number of responses made during the year from the Missouri Conference, second largest from the Virginia, and third, South Carolina—not counting Tennessee, which, by convenience of location, would be apt to pay more directly to the treasurer. It is evident, therefore, that the preachers of these Conferences, more than others, keep an eye on missionary intelligence. Brother, do you read the missionary items in our church papers? If our hypothesis is not correct, we look for correction from some member of one of the overpaying Conferences. You may not say these are old and long-trained Conferences. Missouri, East and West Texas, are new, as well as the German Mission Conference.

The amounts reported as paid will not in every case correspond with the amounts reported by treasurers of the Conference Boards of Missions. I have taken actual receipts by the treasurer of our board. In some cases money sent directly to him may not have been reported by donors to their own Conference boards; some cases may be found in which amounts are reported by Conference treasurers which have been paid out by them, and have not passed through the hands of the treasurer here, and for which he has no voucher. He can take no account of such contribution. I think that our addition of the items on his books is correct. I will be glad to make any desired corrections before these figures go into our annual report. Next week I shall continue the Annual Conferences, giving the amounts assessed and paid in each. If, therefore, reports have not been made to the treasurer in full, it would be well to do so at once.

D. C. KELLEY,
Assistant Secretary.

Centenarians.

The New York Observer has recently published a number of articles on centenarians. The following is the statistical summary:

The whole number of centenarians mentioned in these articles, and assumed to be living on the first of October last, is 57, of whom 30 are women, 20 are men, and the sex of 7 is not reported. Seven are reported outside the limits of the United States, and among the other 50 who represent 15 States, only 3 are known to be foreigners or negroes. The "centenarian necrology" of the same nine months, as published in the Evening Post of December 8, comprising 58 persons, of whom 30 were women, 25 were men, and 3 were of unknown sex. Twelve died outside the limits of the United States, and of the others 8 were negroes, 6 were Irish, 4 were of other nationalities, and 2 were Indians. The American newspapers, therefore, have mentioned no less than 115 centenarians as living within the first nine months of the year just closed, of whom the women numbered 45, and the sex of 10 was not given. Among the 98 living within the limits of the United States, 10 were negroes, 12 were Irish, and 7 were of other foreign nationalities. Of "fifty centenarians" of 1873-4, who were described in the Christian Union of the third of March last, 27 were women and 23 were men; 26 were known to be dead, and 21 were presumed to be alive at the opening of 1875. Several of the latter were named in this year's records, 2 of them being included in the "necrology," so that 158 centenarians had been recorded as living within less than three years past. The 66 of these who are presumably still alive, and within the limits of the United States, are distributed as follows: Massachusetts, 10; New York, 8; Vermont and Pennsylvania, each 7; New Hampshire and Connecticut, each 6; Kentucky, 3; New Jersey and Missouri, each 3; Maine, Ohio, Indiana and California, each 2; and Rhode Island, Virginia, Tennessee and Louisiana, each 1. Thirty-one of these are women, 29 are men, and the sex, names and nationalities of 6 are not recorded; 7 are negroes, 3 are French Canadians and 3 are Irish, while the remaining 47 seem to be of native American ancestry.

THE VANDERBILT.—The first term of the first session of the Vanderbilt University closed January 31, and the second term opened February 1. The week's examinations were encouraging. A number of the students were "distinguished"—most of them did well—a few were relegated to the lowest grade. The great body of them seem disposed to gird up their loins for more vigorous efforts, which will appear, we trust, in the examinations which will close the session. The theological students are increasing in number. Wesley Hall will no longer contain them, but provision is made for them by the ever-watchful secretary of the board, Dr. Young, who invites all suitable young men in the connection to come, and so do we. The second term was opened last week with excellent addresses by Bishop McTyeire and the chancellor—nearly every student of divinity being present in the systematic theology room. The words of commendation, counsel and encouragement then and there spoken will never be obliterated from the memory of those who heard them. "I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in truth."—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Hard on Religious Papers.

Notwithstanding the times, not half of our Methodist people who are able take a religious paper. It seems that the leading religious journals of this country have felt the present pressure heavily. The Methodist Recorder says:

Among the first things to feel the pressure of hard times is a religious paper. Though it costs but the comparatively small sum of from two to three dollars a year, while many luxuries are indulged in which cost several times as much, the paper is stopped, for "it is hard times, and we must retrench." Doubtless it is hard times, and we admit the need of retrenchment; but we think many begin in the wrong place.

Every family should take at least one religious paper. The father needs it, the mother needs it, the children need it. The people will read; and if they are not shown the importance of religious reading, and furnished with it, they will read something else, which will perhaps do them great injury.

The paper which has the first claim to your support is the one that publishes the truths you profess. If you don't support it, who will? Take other papers if you wish and can, and compare views, but let your representative paper be first.

The following table, taken from an exchange, shows how even the leading religious journals have suffered in the loss of subscribers:

Papers.	Subscribers. 1871.	Subscribers. 1875.	Decrease.
Presbyterian	20,000	14,000	6,000
Evangelist	14,000	12,700	1,300
Interior	13,250	11,500	1,750
Congregationalist	25,810	20,000	5,810
Advance	18,000	18,000	3,000
Methodist	21,333	14,500	6,833
Northern Christ. Advocate	11,931	10,931	1,000
Christian Union	118,331	78,833	40,501
Independent	42,000	37,000	7,000
New York Observer	26,000	26,000	00
Christian at Work	24,000	19,166	5,834

It is said that no less than seven hundred papers—religious and secular—have been forced to suspend publication in this country and Canada since January 1, 1874.

The welcome extended to Messrs. Whittle and Bliss on Tuesday afternoon of last week could not be otherwise than gratifying to them, as well as encouraging to the Christians of St. Louis, who have looked forward to their coming. It was an ovation, quiet, but the room crowded with evidently intensely interested and earnest Christians, ready to see and hear these brethren, and lend their co-operation and sympathy in the work for which they had come. That night they held their first meeting at the Skating Rink, Nineteenth and Pine streets, as the place designated and fitted up for all the evening meetings, as already noted. That meeting was also a success, some twenty-five hundred persons being in attendance. They hold a morning prayer meeting from nine till ten o'clock, and an afternoon Bible reading service from three till four o'clock at the First Methodist church, corner of Eighth and Washington avenue. These meetings are presided over by the pastors in turn, while volunteer prayers are offered and remarks made by parties in the audience, interspersed by singing and Scripture exposition and exhortation by Mr. Whittle. The meetings thus far have been generally well attended, and a good degree of spiritual interest manifest, although the inclemency of the weather has in a measure interfered with the overflow of attendants that was hoped for and promised at the beginning. Everybody seems most favorably impressed with these two brethren. They are modest, and entirely free from sensationalism. Mr. Whittle is a ready talker, and an earnest and sound expositor of the Scriptures. Mr. Bliss is a master at the organ, and as a singer of sacred songs his influence and power over his audience is wonderful, capturing their hearts, and often moving them to tears.—Interior, February 3.

REV. GEORGE W. LANGHORNE.—Last week, says the Richmond Christian Advocate of February 10, we reported the serious illness of this venerable minister. It is now our sad duty to announce his death. Peacefully and in full hope of eternal life he breathed his last, in the midst of his family, on Thursday, the third instant, at nine o'clock A. M., in the sixty-eighth year of his age. In 1830 he entered the Virginia Conference, and for forty-five years he worked in the vineyard of his Lord. At our late Conference he took a superannuated relation, and since that his health has rapidly failed. Few men have ever devoted themselves to the work of the Christian ministry with greater devotion and with a higher appreciation of its responsibilities. He was emphatically a man of one work, having never in the whole period of his ministry done any other church work than that of Methodist preacher on circuits, stations and districts. He was thoroughly versed in our theology, and was an able defender of our doctrines and usages. As a preacher he was eminently successful, and his labors were rewarded by the conversion of multitudes of souls.

BIBLE ANNIVERSARY.—Public services, in connection with the twenty-sixth anniversary of the Southwestern Bible Society, will be held in the Colleseum Place Baptist church, New Orleans, on Sunday evening, February 20, at half-past seven o'clock, when an address will be delivered by the Rev. W. F. Mussey, D. D., and the annual report of the society will be presented. All are invited to attend.

Bishop Keener sailed for Vera Cruz, on the City of Havana, February 13. He goes to visit our missions in Mexico, and expects to be absent about six weeks.

Our German City Churches.

Our German churches of this city are doing remarkably well. Industriously and faithfully the brethren press forward the cause of our Master, and success crowns their labors.

The church in Carrollton is reviving. The Sunday school numbers sixty scholars. Bishop Pierce appointed Rev. F. M. Henschel pastor of this church.

Soapatu Street church, with Bro. Pauly in the lead, is "coming up from the wilderness, leaning upon her beloved." Bro. Pauly's prayer is that, like Samson, his last work might be his best work in overthrowing the kingdom of darkness. The Sunday school here is one of the best in the city, and numbers seventy-five scholars.

Craps Street church is like a rivulet in a quiet valley—meandering smoothly through the smiling meadows. They have had several accessions of late. Rev. C. A. Grote, the pastor, is deeply spiritual, and his work exhibits signs of genuineness and durability. The Sunday school has much improved of late. Number of scholars, sixty-five.

Dryades Street church is a favorite child of Heaven. Peace—not the peace of the grave-yard—prevails, and a constantly healthy growth is manifest. The attachment of the membership to their pastor was again revealed during watch-night, when presents of more than $100 in value found their way to the parsonage. Among these presents was a costly robe de chambre. We have here a membership of one hundred and seventy-five, and about an equal number of scholars are enrolled in the Sunday school. Bro. Keller, the superintendent, is a zealous Sunday school worker, and renders his pastor valuable assistance.

On the other hand, there is curious and unexpected confirmation of the evils of mixing races that are far apart in the analogical and direct evidence produced by Mrs. Hutchinson. The mixed castes are unhappy, diseased and weak. Livingstone quotes a Portuguese gentleman as saying: "God made white men, and God made black men; but the devil made half castes." The sense of the sentence seems to be confirmed by Mr. Huth's studies. Half castes are generally worse than their parents, and the term is, in all countries where the thing prevails, a term of reproach. In our own it is to be noted that slavery sheltered from reproach on the lower side, while it produced hate on the higher side. Marriage must be founded on likes; and the distant unions breed weakness, misery, barbarism. The whole South American country attests the evil of admixture between distant branches of the human family. Wherever and whenever reunion in blood is desirable it will be safely attained only through other races standing between the two ends, for example, the Mongolian between Caucasian and negro, and even then a long agony will be suffered in the blood elevation of the lower races. The science of the subject seems at this point to make the nature which shrinks from contact and union a wise instinct—an instinct of self-preservation.—Methodist.

LIFE OF DR. GREEN.—By a card in this issue it will be seen, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, that the Rev. William M. Green, by request of the Tennessee Conference, has undertaken to write the biography of his late venerated father, Dr. A. L. P. Green. He wants data of every sort, and abundance might be furnished, as the doctor conducted for many years an extensive correspondence. Besides, he moved freely among all classes, conversed with all, preached to all—fished with not a few—and made more anecdotal history than almost any other man of his time. Let not all his good things be forgotten. There will be great blame somewhere if we do not have a rich, racy biography—a valuable addition to our connectional literature.

I know not why we should delay our tokens of respect to those who deserve them until the heart that our sympathy could have gladdened has ceased to beat. As men cannot read the epitaphs inscribed upon the marble that covers them, so the tombs that we erect to virtue often only prove our repentance that we neglected it when with us.—Lord Lytton.

OUR PRICE CURRENT.—We notice that the publisher has greatly enlarged the weekly statement in the ADVOCATE of the markets and price current. This department will be still farther improved from time to time, and always undergoes careful revision every week. It will prove a valuable department, especially to our subscribers in the country.

FLORENCE FUND.—The following sums will be turned over to foreign missions by the editor and the account closed:

BISHOPS' MEETING.—The Bishops' meeting will be in Nashville on the first Wednesday in May.

The postoffice address of Rev. H. P. Bowen is Seguin, Texas.

The New Orleans Pacific railroad can only be retarded and postponed by the failure of our citizens to subscribe a sufficient amount to enable the company to prosecute vigorously its work. Delays are not only dangerous, but deadly, so far as the prosperity of our city is concerned in the completion of this enterprise. We cannot afford to wait for it. Our trade, every branch of our business, every interest, every species of property, is depreciating for the want of this road. We rapidly approach the final collapse and catastrophe that must pronounce the doom of New Orleans as the great commercial mart of the Southwest. While we are hesitating and haggling about small contributions to this work, other communities are making rapid strides to snatch from us this only hope and resource which is left to us for our restoration and revivification. Can our citizens be idle, indifferent or niggardly in view of this great peril, this urgent need, for prompt, liberal and zealous aid and co-operation in the enterprise which is to effect such momentous results, and the failure of which involves such critical consequences? The practical and public-spirited gentlemen who have charge of this enterprise, and the citizens who have undertaken to canvass for subscriptions therefor, have set an example to the people at large which alone ought to inspire them with confidence, and stimulate them, each in his sphere, to like activity and zeal. The best mode of demonstrating their zeal is by subscribing to the stock of the company, each according to his means. This is the only earnest now required by the company to give assurance of the early completion of the road, and the realization of its brilliant and substantial fruits in the vastly increased trade of our city, in the advance of all values, and the dispersion of all the clouds and doubts as to the future growth, progress and greatness of New Orleans.

Books and Periodicals.

LOUISIANA, AS IT IS. By Daniel Dennett, New Orleans: Eureka Press, 1875. A well-printed volume of 176 pages, in paper cover. It contains a large mass of reliable information for farmers, Patrons of Husbandry, laboring men, manufacturers, capitalists, and all others who may desire to settle or purchase lands in the Gulf States. The topography, climate, soil and products of the State are fully examined, and the peculiar characteristics of the different sections are described. Col. Dennett is well qualified for such a work as this, and his pages show careful observation and research, and a thorough personal acquaintance with Louisiana. It is a valuable and instructive work, and should have an extensive circulation.

—Our Sunday school periodicals for March look fresh and tempting. The pictures in the Visitor appear to be better than usual, and the editing is wise and care are evident on every page. The Magazine has the following table of contents: A Sabbath with Jesus; part 2, by A. A. Lipscomb, D. D.; S. L. E. Echoes, by the Rev. C. F. Deems, D. D., Science and Religion, by the editor; The late Rowland Hill, by John Hawthorn, B. D.; Last Days of Hannah More, Good Words; Editorial, Miscellany, Our Book-Table, Expository Notes, Questions for Bible Classes, International Texts.

—Ware's Valley Monthly for February has a fine array of articles. We note especially: A Review of Ruf, Newcomb's A B C of Finance, the Centennial Outlook, From Waterloo to Appomattox, A Plea for Charlotte Corday, Notes of a Trip to China, Money and Credit. The editorial department, embracing topics personal and social; political, ecclesiastical, educational, scientific, literary, art, music and drama, is ably conducted.

—N. Tibbals & Sons, 37 Park Row, New York, have published a new book of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's work as great evangelists, with the best thoughts and discourses of Mr. Moody, and portraits on steel. The advantage of this edition is that it has been carefully edited, indexed and numbered, while giving any reference to the thoughts and illustrations, Sixty cents per copy. Agents wanted. Address publishers.

—Briggs & Bros.' Quarterly Illustrated Floral Week, January, 1876, is very beautifully in its type and engravings, and contains a complete catalogue and description of flowers and vegetables. Published at Rochester, N. Y., and Chicago, Ill.

—The New Guide to Rose Culture is a handsome pamphlet published by the Dingee & Conard Company, Rose growers, West Grove, Chester county, Penn. Price, ten cents.

—The Western Manufacturer for February has been received. An illustrated journal of Western manufactures, mechanic arts, science and general news. Fox & Coyne, publishers, Chicago.

—The American Agriculturist for February has been received. An excellent number of this very superior publication. Published by the Orange Judd Company, New York.

—The Hunger Oracle is the title of a new weekly, published at Homer, La., of which Rev. J. C. Reed is editor and proprietor. We wish the Oracle a prosperous career.

—The Southern Cultivator for February has been received. It is filled with valuable information suited to our climate and people.

—The Gardener's Monthly and Horticulturist for the current month is a very superior number of this useful publication.

A deaf and dumb mendicant was suddenly startled by the rude shouts of some boys while walking down a New York street, and in turning slipped on an orange-peel and fell. He gave the lads a severe lecture, much to the enjoyment of a blind beggar at the corner, who saw the whole occurrence through his green glasses, and was highly amused thereat.

Thoughts for the Month.

PITCHING THE CROP.

We hope no reader of the Cultivator will pitch his crops this year without mature deliberation. Beware of the "delusive phantoms of hope," and count well the cost before beginning. See well to it that you do not over-crop yourself, not only in the sense of planting more than you have mules or hands to tend or manures to fertilize, but in the still more important sense of having means to pay as you go. Avoid credit in every shape and form. It has made the "middleman" the oppressor, and is the parent of all our agricultural troubles. You may attempt to explain them by this, that and the other, but they all go back at last to this miserable credit system which has cursed the land for ten years past. Examine your cribs and barns, and, if you have shy more mules than you can feed well, sell the overplus at once, and reduce your crop. Pay wages, if possible, to hands, and if you have means to hire only a few on this basis, reduce your crop accordingly. Rent your surplus land to tenants who have the means to plant without your "backing," or else sow them in grains or grasses, or let them rest. It is in this sense that we urge you not to "over-crop" yourself.

It is best to put manure for corn in the ground just before or at planting-time, and it is not desirable to plow it very deep in the soil. Everything should be ready, that planting may begin just as soon as the seasons will permit. Plant whenever it gets warm enough to secure a "stand." Early corn will generally produce best, and, besides, can be laid by early, so as to give better opportunities to work a cotton crop. It is best to plant a part of the crop in some early-maturing variety, that will ripen by July 1, as a precaution against July drouth; but the bulk of the crop should be of some large-eared, productive variety.

SPRING OATS.

This is not a valuable crop—sometimes produces well, but is too uncertain, unless a rust-proof variety is sown upon very rich land. Where ample provision has not been made for stock feed, it would be best, however, to risk this crop. Select good land and sow early, and it is best to sow one and a half to two bushels seed per acre. Crowding hastens the ripening of the crop, and lessens the danger from drouth and rust.

CLOVER AND GRASS.

The latter half of this month is the best time for the spring sowings of these. Put land in fine tilth, manure it well, with phosphates for clover and ammoniacal manure for grass, and sow a plenty of seed. Brush in very lightly, and then roll the land. In the case of grass particularly, unless a very thick stand is secured, broomsedge and other native grasses will most certainly take possession of the land in a few years. We would advise the sowing of about double the quantity of seed usually recommended—say of red clover fifteen pounds per acre, orchard grass two bushels, etc.

PREPARATION FOR COTTON.

Composts of cotton seed and acid phosphate should be put up this month, both because there is more leisure for such work, and the reaction between the phosphate and seed is more perfect when time is given. They may, however, be made not more than two or three weeks before being distributed. Where green cotton seed and acid phosphate are to be put in drill for cotton without being composted, it should be done during this month. It is not safe to defer this work, both because some of the seed are liable to come up if put in late, and because it is desirable that their active fermentation should be over before the crop is planted; otherwise there is danger about securing a good stand. The gases generated during active fermentation seem to injure the young plants.—Southern Cultivator.

LARGE POULTRY-YARD.—The following account of the largest poultry-yard in New York is given in the Tintic's Journal:

It is at Greene, Chenango county, and is kept by Mr. A. B. Robeson. He has six thousand ducks, four thousand turkeys and twelve hundred hens. They consume daily sixty bushels of corn, two barrels of meal, two barrels of potatoes and a quantity of charcoal. The meal, potatoes and charcoal are boiled together, and form a pudding, which is fed warm. He has commenced to kill them off, and employs fifteen hands to pick, two to kill, and one to carry away and pack in cracks until frozen; then they are ready to pack for shipping. He also employs two men to cook the feed and feed them. He has twelve buildings for his fowls, from one to two hundred feet long, fourteen feet wide, and seven feet under the eaves, with a door in each end of them.

Mr. Robeson bought most of his ducks in the West, and had them shipped in crates—three dozen in a crate. He also has an egg house, thirty-five by fifty feet, and four stories high. The outside is eighteen inches thick, and built of cut stone, laid in mortar, boarded up on the inside, and filled in between the outside and inside wall with sawdust, it taking three thousand bushels. Mr. Robeson claims that he can keep eggs any length of time in this building. He also keeps the poultry that he is now dressing until next May or June, which he sells for eighteen to twenty-five cents per pound, and it cannot be told from fresh-dressed poultry. He gets ten cents per pound for turkey's feathers, twelve for hen's and sixty-five for duck's. He says there is money in poultry, and he thinks he can make out of his six thousand ducks enough to pay for his egg-house, which cost $7,000. He intends to keep a great many more next season, and has agents out all over the country buying up poultry and eggs.

WASHING MUSLIN DRESSES.—Muslin dresses, even of the most delicate color, can be cleaned in ten minutes or a quarter of an hour, without losing their color. Melt half a pound of soap in a gallon of water; empty it in a washing-tub; place near two other large tubs of clean water, and stir into one a quart of bran. Put the muslin in the soap, turn it over and knead it a few minutes; squeeze it out well, but do not wring it, lest it get torn; rinse it about quickly in the bran for a couple of minutes. Rinse again well for a couple of minutes in clean water. Squeeze out dry and hang it between two lines. A clear, dry day should be chosen to wash muslin dresses. Half a dozen may be done this way in half an hour. The last rinse may be prepared in the same way as the rinses for woolen fabrics. A colored pattern on a white ground must not be liked. The bran may here be dispensed with. When the dress is dry, make the starch; for a colored muslin, white starch and unboiled, but made with boiling water, is best for muslin dresses. Stir the starch with the end of a wax candle; dip the dress; hang it again to dry. When dry, rinse it quickly and thoroughly in clear water; hang it to dry again; sprinkle and roll it up afterward iron it with hot irons. Hot irons keep the starch stiff. This rinsing after starching is called clear starching; none of the stiffness, but much of the unsightliness of the starch is removed in this way. The advantage of thus cleansing dresses instead of washing them is, first, if colored, the process is so rapid that there is not time for the colors to run. Secondly, the fabric is not rubbed, and therefore not strained and worn out. Thirdly, the process saves nearly all labor, and is so quickly done that any lady may manage it for herself in the absence of a laundry maid or lady's maid.—Household Guide.

A CONVENIENT PIG PEN.—Being in want of more room for my Berkshires, I have just built a new house for them, twenty by forty-six feet, two stories high, with a mature shed, twelve by twelve, added to the middle of the rear side, and a cook-room, twelve by sixteen, in front near the middle of the main building, six feet wide, leading from the cook-room in front to the manure shed in the rear. This leaves twenty by twenty feet on each side, which is cut into pens ten feet square. Doors at the end and back side permit the pigs in each pen to run out into the yards without going through the other pens. The floor of the pens is below the sills, and in the second story, over each pen, is a bin that will hold three hundred bushels of sawdust, which can be used by pulling a slide down into the pens; and I can keep my pigs clean by the free use of sawdust and some straw than in any other way. There are windows in the ends and sides of the building. I find the plan a very convenient one, as well as compact and cheap.—C. E., in Country Gentleman.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 31, 1875.

MR. EDWARD L. HALL—Sir: I have examined the sample of Crystal Polishing Powder left with me by you, with the following result:

I find it to contain no acids or alkalies, on which account it will be entirely free from corrosive action when applied to paint or metallic surfaces. It cannot be used on such substances by which any accident or injury could happen while using it. The particles of the Powder are not angular, and not pointed, as in most kinds of sands and in many other polishing agents. The particles are extremely small and hard, which, with their angular shape, give it especial value as a cheap and effective polisher. Yours truly,

MEDICAL.

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP.

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound, its well-established virtues and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Breast and Bowels is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at any length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Diarrhœa or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most efficacious in preventing that most awful scourge whenever timely resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure, this truly extraordinary medicine has, over most compounds of the same nature, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children, and it requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, not only because the bottles contain more sirup than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this Sirup will keep for years without fermenting, and it can be used in families whenever required by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Sirup—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or in less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night may take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a good night's rest.

Children, from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three to four hours. For sale by —The weeping willow was named Salix Babylonica because it was supposed to be the willow alluded to by the psalmist as that on which the Jews hung their harps. Hebrew scholars have recently concluded that the word translated "willows" should be "poplars," and Karl Koch has shown that the weeping willow is in all probability a native of China. Since then further investigation seems to indicate that the Populus Euphratica is the "willow" of the psalmist.

—There is now on exhibition in Paris a platinum wire which is placed in a bottle and ignited by electricity from a bichromate battery. It is intended to be immersed in the sea, and the light emanating from it is said to attract an immense number of fishes. Experiments have been made lately on the coast of the Antes du Nord, on a bank of sardines, with highly satisfactory results. The glass must be green or black, otherwise the fish are frightened by the glare, and do not follow the light.

—An elaborate monograph on the phenomena of digestion in insects has been lately published by Prof. Felix Plateau, so well known by his researches in this direction, in the Memoirs of the Royal Academy of Science of Brussels. The points especially novel are those of the alkalinity of the digestive tube, and the functions of the gizzard and malpighian tubes, the last of which he, with others, regards as exclusively excretory in their nature, containing oxalic, uric and phosphatic salts. Numerous drawings of the crystals of these substances are engraved on the plates.

—In the "Transactions" of the St. Louis Academy of Science Mr. C. V. Riley, the energetic and able state entomologist of Missouri, describes the habits of two interesting insects, which live in the curious traps of the pitcher plant (Sarracenia variolaris.) One of these is a very small moth, (Xanthoptera semicrocea,) which lays its eggs in the pitcher, where the young caterpillars live in a light web and feed on the cellular tissue of the leaf. The other is a dipterous insect (Sarcophaga Sarraceniæ,) the larvæ of which are stated to be dropped into the receptacle, to feed upon the putrid remains of other insects which have perished in the trap, and finally to crawl through the bottom of the pitcher into the ground, to undergo their transformations.

—Of the interesting discoveries in connection with vegetable physiology, one recently made by Adolph Mayer is by no means the least. It has been long known that living plants evolve oxygen; but this was supposed to be solely due to the absorption of carbonic gas from the atmosphere, the carbon being retained to build up the structure, and the oxygen being then returned to the atmosphere. Mayer now finds that there is an evolution of oxygen continually going on—even when there is no carbonic acid in the atmosphere—in those plants which contain acids; excepting oxalic acid; for these have not the exhaling power in regard to oxygen possessed by the rest. The oxygen in these cases, results from a reduction of the acid in the sunlight to some carbo-hydrate. The plants experimented with were succulents, chiefly of the Crassuleous family.

Dynamite.

Public attention has been called anew to this powerful explosive compound since the recent disaster at Emerhaven. It is commonly called "giant powder," and was invented by M. Noble, a Swedish chemist, in 1866-7. It consists of nitro-glycerine absorbed by some porous, inert solid. The best material for an absorbent is a siliceous infusorial earth found in Hanover, Germany, and known as kessel guhr. It will absorb and retain about three times its weight of nitro-glycerine, and has the appearance of damp Graham flour. This in prevents the transmission of all ordinary sudden shocks, except under pressure in a confined space. The presence of the inert mineral constituents serves also to absorb heat, so that a high temperature cannot be readily imparted to the whole; but when imparted this temperature effects a great expansion of the gases, and increased effectiveness of the explosion. Ignited in the open air, dynamite burns quietly with nitrous fumes. Exploded (usually by means of a fulminating fuse or cap,) it gives off sulphuric acid, nitrogen and hydrogen, and leaves a white ash, with little or no smoke. It has been decided as the safest of all explosives, not being affected by a prolonged temperature of one hundred degrees centigrade, nor is it as dangerous as nitro-glycerine when it solidifies at 11 degrees centigrade. Neither heat nor electricity shocks cause it to decompose or explode. The principal dangers connected with its use are those of the strong fulminating powders used in the percussion fuses to explode it. Dynamite, if carefully made, containing an excess of nitro-glycerine, may, by the latter becoming the capillary force of the mineral particles, collect in drops and settle from the mass, and become a source of serious accidents. Moreover, it may be that freezing, or allowing after freezing, has a tendency to segregate the oil. Prof. Draper, in one of his works on popular science, has it that Noble was led to his experiments from which resulted the dynamite by the fearful explosions of nitro-glycerine at Aspinwall, San Francisco, Sydney and elsewhere, years ago. After referring to the several means of exploding, Prof. Draper adds that M. Guyot, a French chemist, has shown that the nitro-glycerine may soak out from the mixture with sand, and, saturating the paper of the cartridges and boxes, consume the state in which it is usually exploded by a slight blow.

Good prayers never come weeping home. I am sure I shall receive either what I ask or what I should ask.—Bishop Hall.

REMOVAL.—I AM OBLIGED BY the expressed wishes of many of my patrons to have removed my office from my residence, on Napoleon avenue, to 71 TAYLOR CIRCLE, west side, corner of Delord street. This will, I trust, be rendered by reason of its affording exemption to our sons of the light, and for its central position and ease of access by car lines.
My patrons need scarcely be reminded that no efforts will be spared to render them the best service. In Dentistry the best is always the cheapest.

THE ONLY TRUE AND PERFECT HAIR COLORER!
THE MYSTERY,
Or Turner's Hair Tint!
HARMLESS! BEAUTIFUL! PERMANENT!
This preparation has received the indorsement of the Scientific world, and wherever introduced has superseded all other preparation of the kind. No washing or preparation of the hair is necessary before using.
It is far from all Deleterious Ingredients, containing Lead, Sulphur, Nitrate of Silver, or anything which are poisonous to the Hair or Injurious to the Constitution.
Directions for Application.
A single use saves both time and labor, as a few drops applied with a comb, once a month or so, to the Hair or Whiskers, answers the purpose, the natural color being so perfectly assimilated as to defy detection. The great recommendation is its progressive tint, producing any desired shade, from light brown to the deepest black, and prevents the dry and harmed appearance produced by other Hair Dyes. The Mystery can be applied to a single hair, or spots that have changed color restored to their original shade without applying all over the head, as is necessary when using other Hair Dyes.

Total

On Monday the demand was rather slack throughout the day, and the movement checked by the offerings presenting an unsatisfactory assortment, as well as by factors refusing concessions claimed by brokers. The sales embraced 5,301 bales. As a general thing prices were steady, and some descriptions decidedly firm, but a portion of the business, nevertheless, was at figures which had been previously refused. There seemed to be an impression among several buyers that they would do better by awaiting the sampling of the forty-eight hours' receipts, but factors showed little or no disposition to stimulate the demand by meeting it more freely. The dispatches were not calculated to have much influence. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair inquiry, and although operations were restricted by brokers claiming concessions which factors were unwilling to grant, yet 2,500 bales changed hands during the morning, partly at easier rates and partly at steady prices, after which the movement became more active, resulting in further transactions to the extent of about 6,000 bales, making a total for the day of 8,500 bales. At the close there was quite a split of opinion with regard to prices, some leading authorities reporting them steady and others easier. A part of the business was undoubtedly at previous rates and some descriptions in particular, which it was difficult to find except in lots which factors would not break a minute under extreme rates, but in a large portion of sales the buyers reported that they had found the market easier, and in some cases factors accepted offers below what they would have previously accepted. The assortment of the offerings was rather unsatisfactory.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 25,300 bales, against 30,159 for the corresponding time last week and 27,801 the week before.

The receipts proper at the ports since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 2,455,155 bales, against 2,580,076 bales to the same date last year and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 45,079 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 61,436—3,251,201 against 2,802,765. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 56,630 bales to Great Britain, of 75,076 to France, and of 20,254 to other foreign ports. SUGAR.—The supplies are light and the demand is slack at weaker prices. The receipts on Saturday and Monday, comprising 1 hhd, 1 bbl, were mostly sold at 5c. for inferior, 5½@6c. for common, 6@6½c. for good common, 6½@6¾c. for good fair, 6¾@7c. for fully fair, 7@7½c. for prime, 7½c. for choice, 8c. for good seconds, 8½@8¾c. for gray clarified, 8½@9c. for yellow clarified, 8¾@9c. for off-white clarified, and 9@9½c. for white clarified. On Tuesday 655 hhds came in and sold slowly at the above prices.

MOLASSES.—The market is dull and the supplies sold slowly at easier prices for buyers. No choice on hand; it is called for, and would command high prices, while low grades and poor quality are a drug on sale. The supplies on Saturday and Monday, comprising 262 hhds and 14 half hhds, were mostly sold at 26c. for inferior fermenting, 28c. for fair fermenting, 30@31c. for prime fermenting, 32c. for strictly prime fermenting, 40c. for mixed boiled, 45c. for prime reboiled, and 50@52½c. for choice reboiled. On Tuesday 772 hhds came in. Good grades were in fair demand but low grades were very difficult of sale, and the supplies sold slowly at the above prices. Arrived during the past three days, 3,371 hhds.

POULTRY.—Western-grown chickens sell at $5@5 50, young $3@3 50, ducks $4, geese $5@5 50, turkeys $15@16 per dozen. Louisiana-grown chickens $4@4 50, young do. $3@3 50, ducks $3@4, geese $5@6, turkeys $12@14 per dozen.

EGGS.—The market is well supplied. Large receipts are on the way. The demand is moderate. Western are quoted at 15@17c., Louisiana 18@20c. per dozen.

HIDES.—Country green are quoted at 6@7c., dry salted 12c., dry flint 14@15c. per lb; damaged half price.

MEDICAL.

DR. C. M'LANE'S

CELEBRATED

LIVER COMPLAINT,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increase on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder-blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for a rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternating with laxity. The head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weakness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low, and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts everybody. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the Liver to have been extensively diseased.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. M'LANE'S LIVER PILLS, in cases of Ague and Fever, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No bad cathartic can be used, preparatory or after using Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them A FAIR TRIAL.

Dr. C. M'LANE, Physician and Chemist, being personally acquainted with the above gentlemen, can recommend them as gentlemen of the highest standing in their profession, and take pleasure in recommending C. M'LANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by them, to the public. Dr. C. M'LANE, Jr., Professor of Chemistry, University of Pittsburgh, Pa.

VOL. 22. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1876. NO. 8.

THE FIRST GRAY LOCK OF HAIR.

'Mong the gleaming locks of yellow
Brushed back from thy regal brow,
There has come to dwell a stranger,
Total stranger until now;
'Tis a thread of silver clear,
With its glimmer there and here,
There and here.

Mid the waves of golden glory
Which thy noble head adorn,
This pale stranger seems intruding,
Is intruding, sad, forlorn;
Tiny tress of silver hair,
With its glimmer here and there,
Here and there.

For thy years are not yet many,
And thy life is still too young
For a silver strand to venture,
Venture shining gold among.
Yet the strand, without a fear,
Casts its glimmer there and here,
There and here.

But the year will some time reach thee
When the gray will crown thy brow,
And the gold will be a stranger,
Stranger than the silver now;
Yellow tress will scarcely dare
Glimmer here and glimmer there,
Here and there.

St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 16.—Three Democrats and two Independent candidates were elected Select Councilmen, and nine Democrats and five Independents elected Common Councilmen.

HARTFORD, Feb. 17.—Rev. Dr. Horace Bushnell died here this morning, aged seventy-three. His literary and theological works made him one of the best-known and most prominent Congregational ministers in the country.

BOSTON, Feb. 18.—Charlotte Cushman, the actress, died at the Parker House this morning.

Charlotte Cushman had been afflicted with cancer for a long time, but was better last week, and took a short walk on Saturday last, when she took cold and pneumonia resulted. She was quite cheerful yesterday, but a change occurred at two o'clock this morning, and at seven she became unconscious and death followed.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—Washington is alive with excitement to-night about the Babcock trial, and sensational rumors about a prospective new deal in the cabinet. The President is bitterly incensed against Bradley, the government prosecuting attorney in the St. Louis whisky cases, on account of the latter's speech in Babcock's case. Bradley's dismissal would have been ordered at once, but a prominent Western senator, hearing of the matter, visited the President, and, assuring him that such a move would not do, succeeded in temporarily dissuading him from his purpose.

Boss Shepherd returned from his Western trip on Sunday and was immediately closeted with the President. The interview lasted nearly three hours. The President has said the past three days that Bristow shall not remain in the cabinet, and which is his intense bitterness that, though it is not stated how he will get rid of, it is certain that Bristow must go.

A majority of the national Democratic committee are in favor of holding the national convention at St. Louis, and intimate that it will be held about a week after the Republican convention.

Pierrepont wants the English mission and may get it. In this case Pratt, the new Commissioner of Internal Revenue, will be appointed Attorney General. Chandler is named to-night as likely to succeed Bristow. If so, ex-Senator Ramsey will succeed Chandler. The town is excited and full of rumors about Babcock's trial and a new deal in the cabinet.

FOREIGN.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Feb. 16.—The following communication is published: The Sultan, with the object of ending the evils prevailing in Herzegovina and Bosnia, and in accordance with the friendly advice of the great powers, confirms the provisions of his recent firman, and orders the execution of the following special reforms in the insurgent district:

Complete liberty of worship.

Reform in the system of taxation.

The sale of waste lands to needy inhabitants, with facilities for payment.

The institution of mixed commissions in the capitals of Herzegovina and Bosnia to insure the prompt execution of reforms.

Augmentation of the sums appropriated to works of public utility, in a portion to be fixed by the advice of the mixed commissions.

LONDON, Feb. 16.—A dispatch from Alfonsist headquarters at Elvira says the Carlists lost four thousand men and many officers in the battle of the thirteenth.

MADRID, Feb. 17.—The Cortes was opened by the King in person. The following are extracts from his speech:

"My relations with foreign powers are friendly. Negotiations are being carried on with the United States in a friendly spirit, and they afford reason to hope for a prompt and satisfactory settlement. Our honor and rights are threatened and even jeopardized in Cuba, whither thirty-two thousand troops have been sent since the insurrection.

"The Cuban war has not prevented the emancipation of seventy-six thousand slaves. We shall uphold the integrity of the Cuban territory.

"The efforts of Spain to preserve peace in the world show what she could accomplish when her strength is no longer wasted in sterile agitations. Heaven grant a speedy recompense for our painful sacrifice."

PARIS, Feb. 21.—Thiers has 7,000 majority. The city is perfectly quiet. Buffet is elected in Bourges. Dufaure, minister of justice, is elected. Gambetta is elected in five places, Blanc in four. Arras and Bottiye return Republicans.

Of the 169 elections of which results are known, 123 were carried by Republicans of various shades, 17 by Bonapartists, 11 by Radicals, 7 by Legitimists, 6 by Constitutionalists and 5 by Conservatives. The earlier returns, being those of cities and large towns, will probably show a relatively greater proportion of Republican successes than the districts yet to hear from.

VITTORIA, Feb. 21.—On Friday the Carlists were withdrawing their reserves. Little resistance is expected from them at Talosa.

MADRID, Feb. 21.—The government sent a circular dispatch to its representatives abroad announcing the capture of Montijbrn, and the occupation of the Carlists' positions above Ueta.

The dispatch admits that the combat was sanguinary, the Carlists fighting with great valor. There is great rejoicing here, and the city is illuminated.

LONDON, Feb. 21.—The Times correspondent with the Carlists admits that their lines were broken on Friday.

MADRID, Feb. 21.—It is reported that Don Carlos fled into France last night.

The Carlist resistance at Talosa is expected to be short, on account of discouragement now prevalent among the Carlists.

King Alfonso has gone to Azcoitia, he will sleep to-night at Azpeitia.

Telegrams from the north announce that the royalists continue their success. Gen. Prima de Rivera has occupied the Carlist forts in Navarre. The greater part of the Carlists' artillery at Estella was captured. The Carlists had thrown a portion over the precipices before the arrival of the royalists.

From the Work.

EAST BATON ROUGE, LA.—Mr. Editor: In the ADVOCATE of February 3 is published a communication from Bro. R. A. Davis. That scene at the parsonage will long linger in a bright, living picture upon the canvas of my imagination. A cheerful fire, blazing upon the hearth, drives folds of heated air through the cold room; the polite porters bear waiters and boxes covered and filled with delicious viands. O ye muses! Inspire some gifted son to paint the picture. That was certainly an auspicious opening of the ministerial labor of Bro. Davis for this year. But, Mr. Editor, he is not the only preacher enjoying hospitality from his parishioners. Although East Baton Rouge circuit is deeply in debt, and not able to furnish the teeming luxuries of Vermillionville, yet exertions are being made to provide for the comfort of their pastor.

The people received me cordially, which in itself is sufficient guarantee of interest. A steward—a kind-hearted, generous Christian—kindly invited me to make his house a home for myself and family until permanent arrangements could be effected. We are still with him. Dispenser of all good, reward him! Another brother has furnished me with a saddle nag—a horse with neither big shoulder, sore back, sprained knee, thumps, broken wind, nor with tendency to throw down and stamp in, but a nice, plump, good-gaited animal. If you could ride her once, doctor, enchantment would be the consequence.

My appointments number five. I completed the first round two weeks since; was pleased with the size and deportment of the congregations. They were large and attentive, evidencing an interest in the preaching of Christ crucified. We are building a parsonage. Yours truly,

THOMAS W. ADAMS.

FEBRUARY 9, 1876.

ALEXANDRIA, LA.—Mr. Editor: The Alexandria and Pineville church has given the preacher for this year a very kind welcome. He feels like thanking God and taking courage. Since his arrival the parsonage has been pretty well furnished, through the industry of the ladies and other friends. I wish to acknowledge here the receipt of a handsome bedstead for the parsonage, presented by Capt. George C. Hamilton, clerk of the steamer Bart Able. The Pineville church is also indebted to Mrs. E. Bynum for an elegant silver communion service. Yours truly,

J. W. MEMLOCK.

FEBRUARY 15, 1876.

It is said that Dr. Morgan Dix gets $15,000 a year, the largest salary paid to a Protestant clergyman in New York city. Drs. Chapin and John Hall get $10,000 each. Dr. Storrs and Dr. Budington receive the same amount from their Brooklyn congregations.

The Gospel of Numbers.

NUMBER IV.

THE CONFERENCES AGAIN.

The list below speaks volumes to the thoughtful, earnest Christian; we shall allow it this week to speak for itself—shall have something to say in regard to its significance at another time. Short, thoughtful paragraphs, from the thoughtful, prayerful reader, are solicited. Brother, what train of reflections does this list awaken in your mind? The list is subject to correction; we have been careful, but yet there may be errors; if so, we will gladly correct them. We asked last week for light as to the methods used in those Conferences which have gone to the front, and are happy to find on our table, just as we are going to press, the following note from Bishop McTyeire, who presided at the last session of the Virginia Conference:

"DEAR DOCTOR: You are calling attention to the relative contributions of the Annual Conferences to foreign missions. This will do good. It occurs to me that one item concerning the Virginia Conference, which stands in the front rank in your list, may not be known to you, and therefore is not taken into the account in seeking for the cause of excellence.

"I observed, when the pastors were reading their reports in open Conference, the almost uniform fact that they reported the full assessment collected for foreign missions, and often more than the assessment—even where other collections fell behind—and was led to inquire into the cause. In addition to the intelligent and zealous spirit that prevailed on the subject, I ascribed these two causes in particular:

"1. The collection on this account was taken up alone. There was no lumping. The appeal stood by itself, and was presented singly, and pleaded for upon its own merits.

"2. The collection on this behalf was taken up early in the year.

"These two methods followed up elsewhere would, I believe, produce similar results. If you can make any use of this item in waking up the church to duty, it is at your service. Yours truly,

H. N. MCTYEIRE.

We reiterate with emphasis, at the close of this table, a statement made last week: Missionary intelligence is the need of the people. Where the preachers are in earnest, so as to read, digest and preach on the subject of missions, the people do give. Brethren of the ministry, this work is in our hands; Jesus Christ looks to us. Other reports from charges will follow. We shall be able in a partial way to show the zeal of pastors for missions by giving the relative amount of missionary money to contributions for other church purposes.

Assistant Secretary.

First Fruits.

DEAR BRO. MCFERRIN: As the first fruits of the earth belong to the Lord, so I think the first fruits of man's annual income belong also to the Lord. Below you have for the Master my annual contribution to missions out of the first installment of my little yearly income: For China mission, $3; for Sister Lambuth's school, $2; for Mexican mission, $5; for Bro. Ransom, in Brazil, $5. Total, $15. The inclosed money order for that sum is drawn in favor of Dr. Redford, the treasurer. May God bless you and Dr. Kelley more abundantly than ever this year, and enable you, through his grace and Spirit, to touch the heart of the church and awaken a mighty impulse for the cause of missions. May the special blessings of Christ rest upon you! May you be strengthened in body, in mind and in soul, and may God sustain you yet many more years to work for Jesus. Give my love to your wife and all the children, and to all the McFerrin family—God bless them!

BATON, ALA., M. & C. R. R., Feb. 7, 1876.

Quite a business in indulgences was going on during December in Spain. For the cheap price of three reals (forty cents) pardon was granted for all past sins and for those of 1876. The indulgences are printed in antique style, and go by the name of bulldas. The sums remitted are those of purgatory, and a discount of thirty-three per cent. is allowed on indulgences for the dead.—Independent.

Decline of Rationalism.

The decline of rationalism in Germany, says the New York Observer, was made the subject of able treatment in the Bibliotheca Sacra last fall, the article coming from Joseph Cook, of Boston, whose preaching, in a basement-room at noonday, in that city, is just now exciting attention. He is said to be making a deep impression by the exhibition of earnest, evangelical truth. His paper on rationalism has attracted notice in England, where the facts it embodies are hailed with equal surprise and satisfaction. He sets forth the reasons for which heterodox opinions flourished to so lamentable an extent in the last generation, while he gives abundant proof that a healthier current has set in.

According to Mr. Cook the rationalistic lecture-rooms are now empty, and the evangelical crowded—exactly the reverse of what might be seen fifty or eighty years ago. "The educated youth of Germany," he tells us, "give their patronage to evangelical rather than rationalistic professors in the overwhelming majority of ten to one." Heidelberg, under the theological leadership of Schenkel, Hitzig, etc., is the only prominent university of Germany given to rationalistic views, and its principal professor will often have in his lecture-room only nine, eight or seven students. Berlin, which is orthodox, has two hundred and thirty-nine students; Leipzig, a traditional seat of an orthodoxy which at some points New England and Scotland might consider excessive, has one hundred and thirty-two; Halle, not less sound with its Tholuck and its Julius Muller, has two hundred and fifty-seven; and Tubingen itself, where Strauss put forth one of his earlier works, and Baur founded a theological party, has had in it for years no Tubingen school," but is "permeated by vigorous evangelical influences." Some forty years ago the students at the same university "ceremoniously burnt the Bible;" while about the same time in the University of Halle, all the students except five disbelieved in the divinity of Christ, and petitioned, along with their professors, against the appointment of Tholuck to an academic chair, "solely on the ground of his evangelic belief."

If all this be so, well may there have appeared (as we are told there have) during the last fifteen years various works—one under the respectable name of Hagenbach, for example—on the rise, progress and decline of rationalism in Germany; nor can it surprise us to hear that in by far the greater number of German churches, and the theological faculties of most of the universities, Christianity has so completely driven infidelity out of the field that the latter has been compelled to retire, in a great measure, into the divinity schools of adjacent countries, as Switzerland, France, Holland, Hungary.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.—The stated meeting of the board of managers was held at the Bible House, on Thursday, February 3. Two new auxiliary societies were recognized—one in Wisconsin and one in Iowa. Various letters were submitted to the board, among which were communications from W. S. Hurd, Esq., of Hartford, Conn., accompanying a remittance from the estate of Miss Henrietta Parker, who was formerly a slave, and who at her decease made this society her residuary legatee; from George H. Prince, Esq., of St. Petersburg, forwarding a memorandum of an interview which he had had with the metropolitan of Moscow; from Dr. Riggs, with his manuscript of the Dakota version of Daniel and the minor prophets; from Dr. William Tracy, of Madura, asking an appropriation for India; from Rev. T. Craven, of Lucknow, reporting progress in printing at the Methodist Episcopal press; from Mr. Samuel A. Purdie, of Mexico, asking for Spanish Scriptures; from Rev. M. Phillips and Dr. Butler, of Mexico, with thanks for grants; and from Mr. A. M. Milne, of Monte Video; and Dr. Bliss, of Constantinople.

Grants of Scriptures were made to the American Missionary Association for its work in the South; to the American Seamen's Friend Society, for sailors' libraries, and to various auxiliaries and individuals, for charitable work, the number of copies being about 2,500; beside 22 volumes in raised letters for blind persons.

The board were fortunate in having present at the meeting Mr. Francis T. King, of Baltimore, one of the vice presidents of the society, and president of the Maryland Bible Society, who made an interesting statement of matters which had fallen under his observation at the South.

The receipts for January were $61,182; number of copies issued, 52,785.

It is estimated that as many as twenty thousand different persons participated in the seven services held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey on Sabbath last, in New York, and there was no diminution, but, on the contrary, an increased attendance on the various evangelical churches. Some of these were unusually full.

Periodicals.

—The Southern Historical Monthly is the title of a new magazine published by S. D. Pool, Raleigh, N. C. The object of the publication is to gather and publish Southern historical materials. We quote as follows from the prospectus:

The magazine will deal with the past. Its mission will be preservative. Its purpose will not be to promote strife, to awaken sectional animosities, or to fan the flame of hate; but with plans assiduity and care to preserve a true and full record of the sufferings, privations, fortitude and heroism of the people of the South, and of their unwavering devotion to a cause they sincerely believed to be just. It will bear faithful testimony, endeavoring to be fair and just to both friend and foe. In vindicating the action and achievements of the South no wrong will be done the North. The truth shall be so written that the labors of the historian of the war will be greatly facilitated. From its pages may be gathered such a correct view of the great struggle that the men of other generations and other countries and people may know what were the great principles at stake, what deeds were done, and what were the strength and resources of the combatants.

We have received No. 1, volume 1, which is replete with information. Price, $4 per annum.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.—The numbers of the Living Age for the weeks ending February 5 and 12 have the following interesting and valuable contents: Montenegro, by Edward A. Freeman, from Macmillan's; A Ramble in Syracuse, Fortnightly Review; Wesleyan Methodism, in Wesley's Lifetime and After, by J. Llewellyn Davies, Contemporary Review; The English Jews, Spectator; Some Aspects of Science in Relation to Religion, Church Quarterly Review; In My Study Chair, Blackwood; Conversation with Napoleon at Longwood, St. James; German Home Life, by a Lady; concluded, Fraser; and installments of "The Curate in Charge," by Mrs. Oliphant; "Her Dearest Foe," by Mrs. Alexander, author of "The Wooing O't," and the admirable story of "The Dilemma." The usual choice poetry and miscellany complete the numbers.

—The Aldine is rightly styled the Art Journal of America. Parts 2 and 3 are recently to hand, and very fine numbers. The illustrations of part 2 are: Tire Rock Boyer's Land, Terra Cotta Flower Stand, On Bear River, Maine, The Lexington of the Sea, Castle of Furstenstein, Silesia, Old Cottage in the Teutoberger Wald, Thuringia, Scenes from Falstaff. No. 3 has been already noticed.

—We have received Lingard & Co.'s Centennial Picture. A fine lithograph in black and two tints, printed on heavy plate paper, 22x28 inches. Price, $1. This is a very fine picture, and gives a very clear conception of the magnificence of the preparations being made for the grand Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia.

—St. Nicholas for March, besides its many beautiful pictures, has: Reubens, The Boy Emigrants, The Rare Old King, and His Daughters Three, The Festival of Tapers, Windsor Castle, The Story of Jon, of Iceland, The Fighting Fleet, The Man in the Iron Mask, Jack in the Pulpit, and other articles. A very fine number.

—Cuban War Chant is the title of a song and music dedicated to the patriots of Cuba, by Mrs. C. Edmeston. The song is given in Spanish and in English. Published by Blackmar & Finney, New Orleans.

—The Ladies' Repository for March is adorned with two very beautiful engravings—Lake Chautauqua, The Last Greeting. In its table of contents we note: John Todd—the Story of His Life; Saint Cecilia—a Romance of the Catacombs; Social Life in Greece; Talkers and Talking; Intoxicants.

—Lippincott's Magazine for March has: The Century—its Fruits and its Festival, illustrated; Sketches of India, illustrated; Life-Saving Stations; The Eutaw Flag; Convent Life and Work; Letters from South Africa, and other articles.

—The Atlantic Monthly for March has: The Legend of Ara Coeli, The Unseen World, A Carnival of Rome, The Welsh in America, Money and its Substitutes, The State and the Railroads, and other articles.

—We have received the annual report of the State Superintendent of Public Education, William G. Brown, to the General Assembly of Louisiana, for the year 1875.

—Appleton's Journal maintains its character as one of the first literary publications. The number of February 19 has: Gorilla Land, Illustrated; The Isthmus and Panama; Gatherings from an Artist's Portfolio, and other articles.

—Scribner's Monthly for March is splendidly illustrated. In its table of contents we note: Trinity College, Hartford; The Child Garden; Honore Balzac; Wilson, the Ornithologist; Revolutionary Letters; Concerning Charles Lamb.

—The Galaxy for March has: Madcap Violets, The Ideal and the Real, War Memoirs, Vivian Grey Grown Old, Church and State, Tahite, Aztec Society, Hard Times and Their Remedy, and other articles. A very superior number.

—Golden Hours for March is beautifully illustrated, and abounds in articles calculated to please and benefit the young.

—We have received a copy of the minutes of the Memphis Conference, thirty-sixth session.

A Roman Catholic Church Extension Scheme.

Our Roman Catholic brethren are very wise in their generation. They know how to extend their church, and fasten its roots into new soil. The St. Paul (Minn.) Pioneer Press gives us the following:

"The Rev. Bishop Ireland, who has already done so much to elevate the condition of his fellow-countrymen in this city and State, has for some time been engaged in a scheme for transferring a large number of industrious and frugal Irish families from the overcrowded cities to the broad prairies of Minnesota. His plans have finally been matured, and they are now in process of execution. Bishop Ireland has been negotiating with the St. Paul and Pacific Railroad Company for the purchase of a large quantity of railroad lands, and the sale has practically been completed. The Railroad Company will transfer about 80,000 acres of land to Bishop Ireland, which, with the 80,000 acres of intermediate government lands which can be taken up as homesteads, will make 160,000 acres of land as the amount to be devoted to this new and extensive Irish settlement. The railroad lands are worth $6 or $7 an acre, but by the use of railroad bonds in their purchase the cost to the settlers will not be more than $1.75 an acre. Bishop Ireland and Fathers McDermott and Metzlick returned last evening from DeGraff station, located about ten miles southeast of Benton, the county seat of Swift county, which will be the center of the colony, where they personally inspected the land and its surroundings, and they express themselves more than delighted at the favorable prospects of this commendable enterprise.

"As soon as the weather permits, a Roman Catholic church and schoolhouse will be built at DeGraff, and Father McDermott will be transferred to that point to superintend the work of construction, and to receive and dispose of the colonists as fast as they arrive. It is proposed to sell these lands only to the better class of Irish people, who will require at least $300 in cash to purchase their lands and get a favorable start in life at their new homes. It will be stipulated that no liquor-selling shall be allowed in the settlement, and every effort will be made to limit the sale of lands to those who will improve them at once, and who have a disposition to become, what they can be in a very few years, rich and independent farmers."

The Catholic World not long since said: "In a country of such varied religious beliefs as ours there is but one way to order and peace—'keep the church and the State forever separated.'" To those who remember that in the famous Syllabus Errorum of the infallible Pope Pius the Ninth the doctrine that "the church ought to be separated from the State and the State from the church" is denounced as a damnable heresy, this declaration from a Catholic periodical sounded strangely enough. Attention being called to this apparent contradiction and defiance of the Pope by a Catholic journal of high authority, a writer in the Catholic Review hastens to explain that the Syllabus has no application to the United States, where religious beliefs are so varied, but only to countries that are "one in faith;" or, in other words, only to countries where the Catholic Church has power to enforce uniformity of faith by the civil authority! That this is not such a country is due to the fact that it was originally organized on a principle which that church abhors and is forever seeking to subvert, viz.: the absolute freedom of individuals to form their own religious opinions and to organize such churches as they please. The words of the writer in the Catholic Review imply to any one who looks beneath the surface that the Catholic Church, if she shall ever succeed in acquiring the power to do so, must, in obedience to the Syllabus, make the United States, by the use of the civil authority, "one in faith" in the same sense that France and Austria are so. She submits to the separation of Church and State here only because it cannot be helped.—Christian Union.

A PASTOR TOO BOLD MAY

[illegible]

Women Preachers.

MR. EDITOR: With your permission I desire to correct a mistake made in the second paper on Women Preachers. Mr. Dowling in his article quoted Dr. Clarke as authority for saying that the word prophet meant "to pray, to entreat," etc. I quoted it as Mr. Dowling's own authority, overlooking the quotation marks. When I discovered the mistake I was very sorry indeed, as I would not willingly misrepresent one of God's humblest children, much less one of his chosen ministers, all of whom I love "for their work's sake." Will Mr. Dowling please accept the amende honorable?

The word prophet, or prophesy, has a breadth of meaning not easily or casually defined, but one of the definitions is most assuredly synonymous with the word preacher or preaching.

Since writing the last paper I have been thinking of several other instances recorded in the New Testament where women were made instruments of God in teaching, instructing and preaching.

When St. Paul was at Cesarea, on his way to Jerusalem, "he entered into the house of Philip the evangelist. And the same man had four daughters, virgins, which did prophesy," or preach; which was a little remarkable, inasmuch as the Lord endowed four women in one household with the sacred "gift" of prophecy. Joel, the prophet, after pronouncing God's judgments on the people, promises a blessing if they repent, and, speaking for God, says: "I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy."

"And a certain Jew named Apollos, born at Alexandria, an eloquent man and mighty in the Scriptures, came to Ephesus." This man was instructed in the way of the Lord; being fervent in spirit; taught diligently the things of the Lord, knowing only the baptism of John." "And he began to speak boldly in the synagogue; whom, when Aquila and Priscilla had heard, they took him unto them and expounded the way of God more perfectly." This eminently pious couple is mentioned five times—three times by St. Luke, twice by St. Paul. They are each time mentioned conjointly—once Priscilla is before Aquila. "The church was in their house;" they greatly assisted St. Paul in his ministry at Rome, Cenchrea, Corinth and Ephesus; for his life they laid down their necks."

Aquila and Priscilla expounded the Scriptures "perfectly." Apollos, already "mighty in the Scriptures," "was not," as Dr. Clarke remarks, "ashamed to be indebted to the instruction of a woman in matters that not only concerned his own salvation, but also in the work of the ministry." It does not appear that Priscilla was a whit less qualified to expound the Scriptures than Aquila.

Phebe is commended unto the Romans "as a servant of the church." The word servant is deaconess in the original Hebrew, and Dr. Clarke says: "There were deaconesses in the primitive church. They instructed catechumens, visited the sick and those in prison; they were chosen out of the most experienced of the church. It is evident that they were ordained to the office by the imposition of the Bishop's hands, and the form of prayer used is still extant in the apostolic constitution." This ordained deaconess was "a succorer of many." "Mary," another deaconess, "bestowed much labor on us." "Tryphena and Tryphosa labor in the Lord." "Perels labored much in the Lord." "We learn from this that Christian women as well as men labored in the ministry of the word. Many have spent much useless labor in endeavoring to prove that these women did not preach. That there were some prophetesses as well as prophets we learn; that a woman might pray or prophesy if she had her head covered we know; and that whoever prophesied spoke unto others to edification, exhortation and comfort, St. Paul declares; and that no preacher can do more every person must acknowledge, because to do this is the prime end of the gospel. If women thus prophesied, then women preached." I am indebted to Dr. Clarke for all this authority.

St. John devoted more space to the narration of our Lord's discourse to the woman of Samaria than to any other one subject. Jesus often preached to his disciples and to the multitudes; but here he delivered a lengthy discourse to one woman, and she a Samaritan with whom the Jews held nothing in common but the expectation of the Messias. She in turn was so overjoyed that she left her water pot and hurried to the city, proclaiming the glad news, the good tidings: "Come, see a man that told me all I ever did; is not this the Christ?"

It was to this woman that our Savior first declared himself to be the Messias, saying: "I that speak unto thee am he." He had never before, in direct terms, so declared himself, not even to his apostles.

When the disciples returned and the woman had gone, Jesus, continuing his discourse with the disciples, said: "Lift up your eyes and look on the fields, for they are white already to the harvest." "I sent you to reap that whereon ye bestowed no labor." The Samaritans were coming "many of whom believed for the saying of the woman;" guided by her, they were coming to see and hear for themselves. Says Dr. Clarke: "This woman was the first apostle of Christ in Samaria." Apostle of Christ! A woman commissioned to preach the gospel! that is what apostle means. Dr. Clarke must have been mistaken, surely! But as he spent forty years of his life in preparing his unique commentary we have no right to question his authority. Outside of the holy word there is no better. This woman began to preach as soon as she reached the city, and it is likely she preached on every possible occasion thereafter as long as she had breath to do so. What effect had her preaching? "Lift up your eyes and look." The seed sown in the heart of one woman had brought forth "an hundredfold." Instead of its being "four months to the harvest," the seed was sown and the harvest was ready to be garnered all in one day, or in a few hours rather. From these instances I think that the few women that have preached and the few that will preach have some very good standard authority for so doing.

Since writing the above I have read Mr. Dowling's second paper. To answer it at length would make this article too long. But since he quotes my words—that "there is no call for women preachers"—in such an emphatic manner, and adds that the "church has made no provision, and has no form of license nor any ordination ritual for any such a purpose" or call, let me ask, with due reverence, Why need he be so very much alarmed? Where there is no cause there is no effect.

God has from the beginning, on many occasions, made women to be his instruments to do some great work, and to be the means of saving souls. He may in his infinite wisdom continue to do so even to the end, notwithstanding Mr. Dowling says there is no call from God or the church for women to do such work—the work "of the ministry."

Who can compute the good done by Lady Huntington in the early days of Methodism? She held meetings in her own beautiful home, and actually traveled around with the preachers from place to place, and exhorted, if she did not preach. And of Mrs. Fletcher (nee Bosanquet) and many others of whom the world was not worthy? What would our foreign missions be without the noble band of women who have left home, country and friends to labor among the heathen? They preach, too, and expound the Scriptures, in some instances, where men have no access. But if there is in all this beloved Zion of ours one woman who is "aspiring to the ministry of the word" I do not know it. There may be, and, if so, she has a very polite invitation to leave the church and find some other one more congenial. "Charity suffereth long and is kind."

LORRETTA CRARY SADLER.

WEST PEARL RIVER, Feb. 11, 1876.

Relation of Our Children to the Church.

MR. EDITOR: I read with interest the articles which recently appeared in the ADVOCATE on the above subject, over the signature of J. M. Weems, and approve in the main of the positions taken, the arguments used and the conclusions reached. Especially do I indorse the first two or more propositions laid down in the beginning by the writer as a kind of groundwork for the elucidation of the subject; and, moreover, am glad to find them so clearly and truthfully stated as they are here, for we may need them in the further consideration of the subject. But while the general tenor of these articles is good, there are two, at least, of his positions or statements that to me appear untenable and unsound, and hurtful, too, in proportion as the doctrines to which they relate are vital in the plan of salvation.

The first is the one in regard to "total depravity," which he defines thus: "We do by nature possess the germ of depravity to such a degree that it cannot be added to by any act of personal transgression." Now if I understand the purport of this language it implies that depravity, as existing in the human race, is a fixed state of moral perversion, uniform in all persons, and not susceptible of change in any degree by the conduct of the individual. Can this be true? Is it taught either by nature or revelation? We think not. On the other hand, all actions, while they are an index to the inward nature, also have a reflex influence upon it, and to a greater or less degree, under the system of grace of which all are subjects—unless they be reprobates—do modify this very germ of depravity of which the brother speaks. I know of no such stereotyped, uniform, invariable depravity as is presented here. I believe in universal depravity, but believe it to be as variable in its degrees and phases as the moral and religious status of different persons and people. Will it do to say that the heathen savage, say of India or Africa, presents no darker type of sensual, debased nature than the man of Christendom? Does not the missionary find such an inveterate proneness to indulge in the grosser sins, such as idolatry, murder, lying and theft, in heathen lands that oftentimes he is discouraged at the prospects of anything like a real, general reform? We have a full illustration of this fact—one not recognized by many—in the negro race which is in our midst. Why is it that at best the mass, even of those who profess Christianity, among them, make such imperfect disciples of the Master? It is not ascribable to the means of grace which they have received, for these in many instances have been equal to those enjoyed by the whites; yet such is the extent of their moral or spiritual perversity, so deep and dark are the traces of sin in their nature, that all the appliances of the gospel, however faithfully used, develop, as a rule, but a low type of Christianity. Phrenology teaches that which is abundantly confirmed by actual life, whether we view humanity in nations, in races or in individuals, viz: that the propensity or inclination to vice is as variable in different races and persons as is any other characteristic of man's nature.

Neither is this truth antagonized by anything taught in the vegetable kingdom—the illustration by the thistle and its seed to the contrary notwithstanding—for those who have studied nature find that she teaches the same great truths in all her departments. Growth and culture do always modify, to a certain extent, the nature of the plant, either intensifying its peculiar properties, or, as sometimes happens, changing its qualities, flavor, etc.; so that a plant, after being cultivated for a number of years under favorable circumstances, becomes quite different from what it formerly was. Those who are versed in agriculture tell us that some of our most valuable products have been developed from wild, dwarfish and almost useless plants. The scientific botanists tell us that a plant taken from the forest and cultivated in the garden undergoes a very material change in its medical properties, so that it can no longer be used for the same purposes. Neither does revelation sustain this theory. On the other hand, we read of "evil men and seducers waxing worse and worse"—of those "who became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened." The Savior said unto certain ones that they would make their proselytes twofold more the child of hell than themselves. But why multiply quotations to prove a doctrine that is necessarily the counterpart of degrees in grace, for if the degree of depravity cannot be increased by an abuse of light and grace, then, by a parity of reasoning, neither by an improvement or proper application of these can our depravity be diminished, nor, in language of holy writ, can we be "transformed by the renewing of our mind?" I know that Bro. Weems would teach that there is a growth in grace, and that this growth implies a change of nature, a crucifixion of the flesh—which is the carnal nature—a putting "off the old man with his deeds," and a putting on of "the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness;" and, furthermore, that in the neglect and abuse of gospel privileges the subject perverts them into a "savor of death unto death," or, in other words, he adds death unto death; and what is this but an increase of depravity? Now if he teaches thus—and I am constrained to think he does—is he not teaching that which he here denies? I present this in this form merely to show that to present properly the penalty for rejecting the claims and demands of Christianity, as set forth in the written word, there is a necessity for declaring the fact that the understanding becomes darkened, the conscience seared as with a hot iron, and the whole nature sinks down into a deeper, darker grade of sin and death. I will in another communication, if this is accepted, notice the second error into which Bro. Weems has fallen, according to the view of one who desires in the spirit of love to discuss these questions of interest to all.

JOHN W. HALL.

Minutes and Missions.

MR. EDITOR: The minutes of the late session of the Mississippi Conference are published, and by this time have doubtless reached most of the subscribers. The pamphlet presents quite a neat appearance to the eye of one who does not examine the correctness of the figures. We regret that upon those points where we should desire and expect the greatest exactness these minutes are entirely unreliable. For the honor of our church and the encouragement of our people we must correct a few of the inaccuracies of these minutes.

The figures in the grand total show the membership of our church to have decreased by 489 during the last year. A correct subtraction would show a decrease of 1,489; but a correct addition of the sums for the several districts, when compared with the total of the previous year, presents a decrease of 619, while a still further addition of all the numbers in the column of white members will show, when compared with the results of the previous year, an increase of 161 members during the last year. Besides, the number of members on several charges was not reported. So Methodism in Mississippi is not decreasing numerically.

The minutes also show a decrease in the value of parsonages of $3,226, whereas a correct addition and subtraction of the figures as they are printed give a decrease of only $1,650; while the correction of an error of excess in the minutes of the year preceding, of $6,300, results in an increase in the value of parsonages for last year of $4,640.

We have in these minutes also a decrease in the value of churches stated at $4,825, but the correction of errors shows a real increase of $6,675.

Here we have presented an astonishing decrease in the value of "other church property" (than churches and parsonages) of over $100,000; but when we examine the figures we find that in the summing of values on the Vicksburg district there is an error diminishing the result by nearly $30,000, while the Centenary College property is here valued at only $80,000, whereas it was rated the preceding year at $200,000. Presuming that the Centenary College property has not diminished in value, we shall have an increase in the value of "other church property" of over $40,000. Such errors are damaging to the reputation of our church and discouraging to our people. It is neither becoming nor desirable that we should thus gratuitously disparage ourselves before the world. It is said that figures will not lie; but when inaccurately handled they become, because of their very character for truth, the most deceiving of all things.

But there is at least one matter upon which the minutes are correct—the assessment for missions, foreign and domestic. The Discipline makes it the duty of each Conference missionary board to divide the Conference apportionment for foreign missions among the several districts. Our board distributes also the amounts which they ask shall be collected for domestic missions in the same way. The assessments for the several districts are plainly printed in the minutes. We ask that the presiding elders fail not to see that the amounts assessed to their districts be properly distributed among the several charges, so that each preacher may understand precisely what amount of missionary money he is expected to raise. There is reason to believe that many preachers have failed to collect their proper amounts of missionary money for lack of the instructions which we here urge the presiding elders to give them. Let it be remembered, too, that our Discipline requires the collections for foreign and domestic missions to be taken up separately. As the law makes it the duty of Conference boards to "disseminate missionary intelligence among the people," we hope that our brethren will so receive and act upon these suggestions that at our next Conference the assessments of the districts shall be all paid in full.

It is an unspeakable mercy when the soul seems to see all those perfect thus, once a brazen wall to keep him out, now a brazen wall to keep him safe.

OBITUARIES.

COL. J. O. FUQUA.

The following resolutions were adopted at the meeting of the first Quarterly Conference, Baton Rouge station, Methodist Episcopal Church South, held at Baton Rouge, La., January 31, 1876:

Whereas, It has pleased the great Head of the church to remove from us by death our beloved brother, James O. Fuqua; be it

Resolved, That while we bow submissively to the inscrutable decrees of Providence in humble recognition of that wisdom and love which, though often obscured by our tears in time of sorrow, yet by the eye of faith we are permitted even in our bereavement to discern, we are still conscious that in the death of our beloved brother the church and this official board have sustained a peculiar and a heavy loss.

That Bro. Fuqua was one in whom were most harmoniously blended all the endowments and traits of character which ennoble humanity, and elevate the individual above the ordinary level of mankind.

Among statesmen he was a statesman, among scholars a scholar, among philanthropists a philanthropist, among men a Christian gentleman; combining with an exceedingly vigorous and prompt perception an industry that we all might well emulate, and a brotherly love which, having its well-spring in Christianity, embraced all mankind in its fraternal grasp, he had few equals in his profession, and was one concerning whom all who knew him will say: "I have lost a brother;" and even those who did not know him may say: "I have lost a friend."

Of an experience so wide, with a penetration so profound, a judgment so exact and unprejudiced as to give, when supplemented by his extensive and varied learning, peculiar value to his counsels in all matters, whether of Church or State, and of a heart well charged with human affection, there were few of his associates in any department of life who did not lean upon his advice when in perplexity, and upon his sympathy when in sorrow.

That, feeling the loss that we have sustained as a church, as an official board, as his personal friends and as men, we are the better able to appreciate the heavier weight of sorrow his death has brought upon his bereaved and sorrowing household.

That we extend to them the sympathy of Christian hearts pierced by the same shaft, and point them to the only source of consolation—the heart of the Crucified, the Fountain of eternal love—fervently praying that he who marks the fall of the sparrow and tempers the wind to the shorn lamb may encompass them with the arms of his love, and cause their affliction, though it may never seem to them in this world either "light" or "for a moment," yet to work out for them "a far more exceeding and an eternal weight of glory."

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of our brother, and that the same be published in the Baton Rouge Advocate and in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

For the Quarterly Conference.

W. H. GOODALE, Sec.

REV. WILLIAM KELLER died at his residence in Carroll parish, La., after a brief illness, on the seventh of November, A. D. 1875. Bro. Keller was born in South Carolina on the twelfth of May, 1804.

The time of his conversion and connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church is not known. He was married the third time, to Mrs. Lydia Harrell, December 7, 1871, with whom he lived in peace and harmony until death severed their joyful union, calling him first to his reward on high.

The time when he was licensed to preach is not known to the writer, but he was ordained deacon in the Methodist Episcopal Church, by Bishop Roberts, at Helena, Arkansas Conference, in 1812. He was ordained elder, in Bastrop, December 15, 1855, by Bishop Kavanaugh. Bro. Keller did not belong to the Conference, but was several times employed by the presiding elder, and was preacher in charge of Cothron mission at the time of his death.

There was a large congregation collected at church to hear him preach the day he died (they not having heard of his illness,) but God had that day called him from labor to rest. He was a man of moderate preaching ability, but was a devoted Christian; won the esteem and respect of all, and possessed the confidence of a large circle of friends. His unexpected death spread a gloom over the neighborhood. His funeral was preached by Rev. T. B. Reneau to a large congregation of weeping relatives and friends, after which his body was interred near by, to await the trump of God—"the latest of the seven!" He leaves a wife and several children, who feel sadly bereft in the loss of one they loved so tenderly; but they rejoice in the thought of a happy reunion "over there."

T. H. MCCLENDON.

CARRIE LEA POPE, only daughter of F. H. and M. A. Pope, was born October 30, 1867, and died October 1, 1875. She was a lovely child, possessing rare traits of character for one so young, which elicited the admiration of all who knew her. Kind, gentle, affectionate, sunshine followed in her footsteps, and gladness was diffused by her presence. She loved the Savior, and of his love she never grew tired of talking; and often, when the duties of the day were over, and twilight sombred up the sky, she would sit upon her mother's knee and talk in childhood's simple language of heaven and Jesus; and often was the mother surprised, when rising from secret communion with her God, to find the little one beside her, with clasped hands and bowed head, and lips tremulous and fragrant with the incense of prayer. We believe she felt the love of God, and had given him her young heart to brighten and redeem; and although the child's vocabulary was impotent to express the feelings which swelled within her soul, yet they could be read in the glad sparkle of the countenance and the rich fragrance of that bright brief life which, growing tired of earth, has lived on into heaven. We truly sympathize with the bereaved parents in this their sad affliction, and trust that the gleams of God's love may break their night of weeping, and that the memory of their darling's life may serve as a talisman to charm their souls to duty and bind them to their Lord.

DALLAS COUNTY, ALA.

ANOTHER VETERAN GONE.

November 20, 1875, GEORGE SEASER, born eighty years ago at Selsertown, in Jefferson county, Miss., received the welcome message, "Come up higher," and his place is vacant. Tried by prosperity and adversity, he knew how "to abound and to suffer need;" and of him it may be said: In all the vicissitudes of a long and eventful life he honored God, in an eminent degree, by a well-ordered life and godly conversation. Though long a resident of Mississippi, his last years were spent in Carroll parish, La. Residing with his daughters, by manual labor he met the claims of the world. His cheerful acquiescence in the allotments of Providence enabled him to enjoy the singing of birds amid his daily toils, and see in the "minute snow of the cotton-field" the emblem of purity and truth, which makes the spirit adorning. In his death the church sustains a great loss, and eternity alone will reveal the value of his wise and prudent counsels, and the power of his holy, living example. Like a shock of corn fully matured he has been gathered into the garner. How blest the righteous when he dies!

N. S. CORNELL.

ANOTHER aged matron has gone—Mrs. SUSANNAH SNOWDEN—as many preachers as well as numberless friends in the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences will feel sad as they read the announcement that Aunt Snowden is no more. She was born in North Carolina, September 16, 1795, and died near Monticello, Ark., February 2, 1876. The writer had not known her long—only one year—and that time as an invalid. In my visits, to see her suffer as she did—her disease being cancer—yet to see her bearing so patiently her sufferings, always ready to go, we were reminded of the great stress Jesus laid on the witness of his disciples. He said more than once, "Ye are witnesses." In her life, devotion, and especially in her experience, this good mother in Israel was a witness. Converted forty-five years ago, under the preaching of Father Brewer, she has maintained a life of high Christian experience. Just before she died she said, "What a happy change!" So after this "the weary wheels of nature stood still at last." The world is better by her having lived. Glory be to God for such witnesses.

JOHN F. CARR.

DIED, on the Topisaw, Pike county, Miss., LEE H. DOUGLAS, son of Newton and Mary Ann Douglas. He was born April 27, 1863, and died December 20, 1875. In the death of little Lee home has lost one of its brightest charms, for he was ever obedient and affectionate in disposition. God saw he was a treasure pure and spotless, and called him before earth's sins and sorrows had stained his young heart.

ROBERTSON B. DOUGLAS, son of Newton and Mary Ann Douglas, was born October 6, 1875, and died November 20, 1875.

WORK WITH A SONG.

Better to weave the web of life
With a bright and golden thread,
To do that's work with a ready hand,
And a heart that's always willing.

Than to snap the frail and delicate thread
Of our curious lives asunder,
And then blame Heaven for the tangled web,
And sit and grieve and wonder.

Better to weave the woof and warp
With a pattern of Heaven's choosing,
Winding the palm and the tuneful harp,
And the crown with no fear of losing.

Then alike in the shade and the sun
Let the shuttle of life fly freely,
And the Master's words, "Well and faithfully done,"
Will fall on us daily and sweetly.

Let us work for our God with a song,
Weave a robe for the soul's adorning,
And cheerily hope it cannot be long
For the dawn of a nightless morning.

Giving as an Act of Worship.

The Congregational Quarterly for January contains an admirable essay on this subject, written by the Rev. Henry S. DeForest, a Congregational minister. The purpose of the writer of the essay is to enforce the duty of "weekly, systematic giving" as "the rule of Christendom." We extract some of the opening paragraphs:

"Eighteen hundred years ago giving was as certainly considered as an act of worship as praying. Christ found fault with hypocrisy, but not with bringing alms. He scourged many things from the temple, but he did not evict the system of offerings. That had been there from the beginning; indeed it was older than the temple; it was there first, and the temple was built around it. It was older than the tabernacle; older than Moses and his laws; older than Jacob, who vowed to give his tenth of all; older than Abraham, who paid tithes to Melchizedek. It is a part of natural religion; it has been held a duty from the beginning, and as much has been observed by men of all colors and habits and times, and in all quarters of the globe. It is not peculiar to the Christian system, nor is it enjoyed alone in Revelation. Classical writers tell us that it was the custom among their people to consecrate thank-offerings to the gods. One says: 'As soon as the harvest was got in, before they had tasted of the fruits, they offered their libations. They held their fields and cities as gifts from the gods, and they consecrated a part for temples and shrines, where they might worship them.' Unclassical heathen, as the aborigines of this country, were not unschooled in the doctrine of offerings. Wherever worshipers have been found, men have worshiped by giving gifts.

"We conclude, then, that the consecration of treasure, like the consecration of time, has been held a duty from the beginning. The Sabbath and the thank-offering run back to the origin of the race; they have each been known since the first upward lifted voice and heart, with the smoke of incense, to the Father above. Losses, indeed, entered, but he did not originate them. Before Abraham or Moses was, they were. It has been left for the moderns to discover that these twain, which God has united, should not go together—that the Sabbath is too sacred for the bringing of gifts, and that the contribution-box is a Vandal in the house of the Lord.

"It should not be forgotten that temple worship made very much of oblations. In the language of a modern sinner, it was: 'Give, give, all the time.' Well, why not? for it was: Receive, receive, all the time. We pay tribute to the government, and no good citizen objects to it. Why not, then, by first-fruits and thank-offerings recognize the authority and beneficence of God? These temple gifts were continuous and various. The poor man's turtle-dove or young pigeon was accepted—yes, was required. To give was his duty, and there was a place for the costlier offerings of the wealthy. Not only the bullock and the lamb without blemish, but the most precious stones, the purest gold, the finest of wheat and oil, the rarest and most ornate needle-work, and other rich gifts of heart or hand, were brought for the service of the Lord's house. The offerings made in the old-time worship were not the leavings, neither were they the last. It was the first-fruits as well as the first-born son that were holy to the Lord. The command ran thus: 'Ye shall neither eat bread, nor parched corn, nor green ears, until the self-same day that ye have brought offering unto your God.' The entire Jewish system was saturated and interpenetrated with the idea of sacrifice and offerings. Moses accepted and recognized this thought, which was world-wide, and had been held by worshipers from the first. He enforced it and expanded it, and it had full possession of the Jewish mind when Christ came and the Christian church was established.

"The root-thought, which had so long grown and brought forth fruit, the Lord, did not then, die. It was rather transplanted, and in the new church it grew with new vigor. It was watered by the Pentecostal baptism, and then became more fruitful than ever. They that had possessions sold them. To meet a pressing necessity they brought their gifts—not their tithes, but their houses and lands—and 'distribution was made unto every man according as he had need.' In those Pentecostal days, when conversions were a daily experience, and Christian graces grew and blossomed like the flowers of spring, giving was considered a part, and a most important part, of worship. Those disciples, trained in the system of tithes and temple offerings, could have thought it very strange to gather in a synagogue to pray and sing psalms and read the word, and not to come 'empty before the Lord.' Justin Martyr, a little later, gives an account of the way in which Christians then kept the Sabbath. He says: 'Those of us who have the means assist all who are in want, and in all our oblations we bless the Maker of all things through his Son Jesus Christ, and through the Holy Ghost.' On the day which is called Sunday there is an assembly in the same place of all who live in the cities or in the country districts. The records of the apostles or the writings of prophets are read as long as the time will allow; when the reading concludes the presiding minister gives oral instruction. Then we all rise and offer up our prayers. When we have concluded our prayer, bread is brought in, and wine and water." He speaks of the Eucharist, and adds: "Those who are in a prosperous condition, and wish to do so, then give what they will, each according to his judgment." What is collected is placed in the hands of the presiding minister, who assists with it orphans and widows, and such as from sickness or any other cause are in distress; and he grants aid to those who are in bondage, to strangers from afar, and, in a word, to all who are in need."

The early church, we conclude, linked giving and praying together, and to the advantage, too, of both. How the church grew in those days! The disciple band was a great missionary society, but without any honorary members. All were active, few were rich; yet the Lord's treasury was never empty, and the church was foremost in every act of benevolence. Even the Apostate Julian confessed: "It is a shame for us that the impious Galileans should not only keep their own poor, but even many of ours whom we leave to suffer."

The apostolic church made much of giving, and considered it an integral part of worship. We are not innovators, then, but only returning to the old paths, as we press this duty upon the church of to-day. We have the best of authority for saying not only, Let us sing, Let us pray, Let us read the word, but also, Let us give; and as singing and praying should be hearty and general, so there should be no monopoly in giving. As commanded at the feast of unleavened bread, none should appear empty before the Lord. Every man, we are told, should give as he is able, 'according to the blessing of the Lord thy God which he hath given thee.'"

Where Are Your Sins?

A young girl came to see her pastor with regard to the welfare of her soul. "Are you saved?" he asked, "or are you only trying to be saved?"

"I am trying," she sadly replied.

"How are you trying?"

"I am praying, and reading the Bible, and going to church, and striving to keep the commandments."

"How are you succeeding?"

"Not very well," she sorrowfully answered.

"Do you not see that in all this trying you are leaving Christ out as truly as if there were no Savior who has come down from heaven to deliver us from sin and its dreadful consequences?"

"O I believe in Christ!" she quickly responded.

"You do! Let me see. Do you believe that Christ died upon the cross?"

"Yes, I know it."

"How do you know it? You were not there to see him die."

"I know it because God says so in his word."

"Do you believe, then, whatever God says in his word?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, why did Christ die upon the cross?"

"He died for our sins."

"You are correct, for God says over and over again that he died for our sins. Your sins were upon him, therefore, when he was nailed to the cross, were they?"

"Yes, sir."

"Where is Christ now?"

"He is up in heaven."

"You are right again, for God repeatedly tells us this in his word. Are your sins upon him?"

"No, sir."

"Observe, your sins were upon him once, when he was nailed to the cross, and to-day he is in heaven without them. Where are your sins?"

She looked down for a few moments in deep thought, and then, raising her eyes, a sweet smile played over her face as she said:

"They must be in the grave."

DISCRIMINATIVE PREACHING.—A young minister had gone to a prosperous church in a certain town to preach his first sermon. Before leaving the house the gentleman who was entertaining him suggested to him not to preach against Universalists. "There are," said he, "several Universalist families who have pews in our church, and we don't want them offended." The young minister promised. At the church vestibule one of the deacons drew him aside and said: "Do you see those gentlemen just passing in? They are Spiritualists, but come here to church occasionally. I wish you would be a little careful not to say anything that might hurt their feelings." The minister promised. As he was ascending the pulpit steps one of the elders buttonholed him for a moment to whisper an additional caution: "The leading liquor dealer has just come into church, and he gives us a lift sometimes. I wish you would be particular not to allude to the whisky business or the temperance question." The young minister, getting fairly frightened to see the moral ground thus steadily narrowing before him, inquired: "Pray, who or what shall I preach against, then?" The elder's reply came with an air of triumph: "Preach against the Jews; they haven't got a friend in town." If preaching is the art of not hurting anybody, that certainly would have been an effective direction. But if, on the other hand, it means the application of truth to mind and conscience, then that is the most effective which lays the arrow on the string for present effect, which aims at the sins and sorrows that are straight before it, and which determines the effectiveness of the aim by the tittering of the birds.

MINISTERIAL INCOMES.—Mr. Maclaren, in his address before the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland, discusses the subject of ministerial incomes. He shows by figures that the range of the incomes of Baptist ministers is very low, more than half of the pastors receiving only from $300 to $750, and adds: "How far below the lowest sum many of our incomes sink I am afraid to say." In the larger churches $1,200 to $1,500 is not an unusual amount, and in comparatively a few the salaries reach $2,000, to $2,500, and those which reach the latter sum may be counted on one's fingers. In view of these facts Mr. Maclaren says:

"Men of spotless reputation, of true piety, are toiling all their lives, and subsist on less than the wages of many a workingman. Their homes are scenes of heroic, patient faith and true martyrdom. I could tell cases that would make your hearts bleed, and might make your cheeks burn. I could speak of the never-ending privations, the sharp sting of real want; the toiling, anxious mother; the children that cannot be educated, are poorly fed and poorly clothed; the father whose mind stagnates because he dare not buy books, whose spirit is weary because, year out, year in, he has to labor on without holiday or rest, whose heart is worn by the corroding of constant anxiety, and embittered by many a doubt, if not of the goodness of God, at least of the reality of Christian sympathy among men. These are not fancy pictures; the originals are only too near and numerous among the pastors of our smaller churches. These churches cannot of themselves meet the need, and if independency mean isolation the case is hopeless. If our brotherhood means anything, it surely means that deliverance and enlargement are to come to them from us."

ORIGIN OF THE OMNIBUS.—The long coach called an omnibus, with the entrance behind, and the seats along the side facing each other, originated in Paris in 1827, and in 1831 it began to come into use in London. In large cities it is found the most economical form of carriage, except those running on rails, for conveying the largest number of passengers through the streets. In Paris the public omnibuses are numerous and commodious, though their progress is slow as compared with those of London. One company has a municipal monopoly, and owns all the lines. The omnibuses on the several lines are of different colors, and the lines are lettered from A to Z, and from A A to A Z. In 1872 there were in London about 1,500 omnibuses, employing nearly 7,000 persons. The number was formerly much larger in proportion, for in 1811 one company employed 1,400 omnibuses; but a large part of the city and suburban travel is now carried on tramways and underground railways. In New York city one was made in 1830, and ran up Broadway. In 1870 the number of these coaches employed upon various lines was 420. This was a considerable reduction from the number of former years, owing to the construction of horse railroads; and by 1873 the number was reduced to about 200.—Appleton's American Cyclopedia.

THE PATRONIZING SINNER.—He easily looks down from on high on all the empty titles and false images of earthly happiness, and when he is bereaved of them all, yea, and beset on every side with what the world calls misfortunes and afflictions, ceases not to be happy. In sorrow he is joyful, in poverty rich, and in chains free; when he seems buried deep, so that not one ray of the sun can reach him, he is surrounded with radiant luster; when overwhelmed with ignominy he glories, and in death itself he lives, he conquers, he triumphs. What can be heavy to that man who is eased of the intolerable burden of sin? How animated was that saying of Luther: "Smite, Lord, smite; for thou hast absolved me from my sins!" Whose anger would he fear who knows that God is propitious to him, that supreme King, whose wrath is indeed the messenger of death, but the light of his countenance is life, who, shedding all by the rays of his favor, and by one smile disperses the darkest clouds and calms the most tumultuous tempest?—Leighton.

KINDS OF SCHOOLS NEEDED.—President Eliot, of Harvard, says in a recent letter: "The great educational need of the West, and of the whole country, indeed, is good schools exclusively devoted to fitting boys thoroughly for colleges of high standard. The public high schools have a different function, and the work of fitting a small proportion of their pupils for college interferes with the discharge of their very important, but limited function. Endowed schools, managed by private corporations, receiving boys of ten or twelve years, and keeping them until they are seventeen or eighteen years old, are more needed in this country than any other class of educational institutions, unless it be girls' schools of the same sort. It would be clear gain if nineteen-twentieths of the so-called colleges and universities could be converted into secondary schools; for a vigorous school, doing its appropriate work with thoroughness, is a much more useful institution than a lame college."

I have heard of a poor navigator who had been converted, who had but little education, but who knew the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and when dying very cheerfully and joyfully longed to depart. His wife said to him: "But, man, ain't ye afeared to stand before the Judge?" "Woman," said he, "why should I be afeared of such a man as died for me?"

It is easy to distinguish those who seek to destroy all that is precious to a Christian soul from those who speak the language of Canaan, though not in our mellifluous sounds. If charity covers many sins it ought to cover a few errors of interpretation. We should not kill a man because he cannot say Shibboleth as we do.

Religious Intelligence.

—The members of the African Methodist Episcopal Church have ordered a statue of Bishop Allen, the founder of the church, to be made at a cost of $3,500. This will be their contribution to the American Centennial.

—The Irish Presbyterians have a most interesting mission among the Dhels, at Basmi, India. Within two years Christianity has spread rapidly. The number of villages occupied has arisen from 4 to 27, the number of communicants from 41 to 71, and that of candidates from 51 to 141.

—The statistics of the Protestant Episcopal Church for 1875 show: Bishops, 57—an increase of 5; priests and deacons, 3,122—increase, 41; baptisms, 38,053—decrease, 3,793; confirmations, 22,095—decrease, 4,130; communicants, 261,003—decrease, 3,503; Sunday school teachers, 23,418—increase, 313; pupils, 235,943—decrease, 3,940; and contributions, $8,899,305—decrease, $667,268.

—A remarkable meeting of foreign missionaries employed in city mission work was recently held in London. Grace was said in fourteen languages. The London City Mission Society employs four missionaries among the Germans, one among the Dutch, two among the Italians, one among the French, and one among the Orientals, who are always to be found in the great metropolis.

—Mr. George Lawrence gives the following particulars respecting his work in Spain, in a letter from Barcelona, November 10: "Last week two brethren, the coachman and colporteur, spent four days visiting the villages and vineyards near this place, and very pleasing is the testimony they give of the people's spirit in these rural districts, particularly in those visited by the Carlists, whose doings drive more and more turned the people against the priests. In one village they sold more than two hundred of the Wonderful Bible Workman, and thirty large-type Gospels by John, found up with a simple but valuable system for leading persons to read. We sell the book by thousands."

—We see it stated that the New York City Mission and Tract Society has, in the forty-nine years of its existence, spent about $1,000,000 in work among the poor and neglected, and has established five mission stations, at a cost of about $80,000. During the past year its receipts have been $111,078, visits have been made to 54,000 families, 3,000 meetings distributed, 731 Bibles and Testaments given away, and 9,011 volumes loaned from their libraries. 1,967 children were led to Sabbath schools and 221 to day schools. 626 persons were induced to attend Bible classes, and 1,812 attend church, 281 of whom united with different churches, and 70 who had backslidden were restored to church fellowship. 2,000 persons were aided with money, food, clothing, medicine, etc., at a cost of $6,178.28, outside and independent of the regular receipts of the society. This is a good showing for Protestant mission work among the destitute and degraded of the city.

—The Medical mission in Madagascar has two physicians, and is in a most prosperous condition. It is supported by certain friends in Scotland, and has the only hospital on the island and is about to be rebuilt, which will require an expenditure of $5,000. This mission is accomplishing a great work for the temporal and spiritual interests of the people. Dr. Davidson relates the following incident, showing what the mission is doing: "A missionary traveling in a distant part of the island came unexpectedly on a town where the people professed to be Christians, although surrounded by heathen tribes. He inquired how it was, and learned that one of their number who had been ill was sent to Antananarivo for treatment, where on his little bed he had learned to read the Bible, found the precious truths of the gospel, and carried them home with him. He persuaded his fellow-townsmen to build a chapel, and there he was a pastor over a Christian congregation."

—The Lucknow Witness, edited by Rev. James Mudge, formerly of New England, and published by the Methodist mission in India, gives the following summary of the results of missionary labors in that country during the past year: "We have gathered from the various reports which have come to us the following figures, and we believe them to be in the main correct. They represent, so far as we can get at the facts, the number of adult baptisms from non-Christian peoples, or admissions to native Christian churches on profession of faith: Indian Home mission to the Santhals, 1,567; S. P. G. mission in Chota Nagpore, 1,513; Church mission in South India, 756; American Methodists in North India, 500; London mission in South India, 200; American Madura mission, 152; American Marathi mission, 124; Orissa Baptist mission, 103; Basel Evangelical mission, 81; Delhi Baptist mission, 62; eight other missions, 143. Total from eighteen missions, 5,029. It will be at once seen that we have nothing here from Ceylon, nothing from Burmah, very little from Bengal, and that some of the other missions which usually report large figures, such as Gossner's mission in Chota Nagpore, and the Baptist mission among the Telugoos, are not represented. Since considerably less than half the missions are here reported from, and yet among those full 5,000 accessions were made, we cannot resist the conclusion that the year 1875 was one of unusual prosperity in mission work; and we should not be surprised if, when all the facts were gathered up, it was found that not far from 10,000 were brought into the Christian fold last year within the bounds of her majesty's Indian domains. If this be so, it may well furnish cause for rejoicing and encouragement to all that love the progress of the kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. May this present year yield a still more abundant harvest."

TOTTY'S ARITHMETIC.

One little head, worth its whole weight in gold
Over and over, a million times told.

Two sidling eyes, full of innocent glee,
Brighter than diamonds ever could be.

Three pretty dimples, for fun to slip in,
Two in the cheeks and one in the chin.

Four tiny fingers on each baby hand,
Fit for a princess in Sweet Fairyland.

Five on each hand, if we reckon Tom Thumb
Standing beside them, so stiff and so glum.

Six pearly teeth, just within her red lips,
Over which merriment ripples and trips.

Seven bright ringlets, as yellow as gold,
Seeming the sunshine to gather and hold.

Eight tiny waves rippling over her hair,
Sunshine and shade, where they love to be there.

Nine precious words that Totty can say,
But she will learn new ones every day.

Ten little sleepy, contented toes,
And that is as far as this lesson goes.

St. Nicholas.

From Our Little Friends.

JANUARY, 1876.

MR. EDITOR: As so many little girls are writing for the Child's Corner I thought I would write too. I am going to school. We have a very good one, but not as good as it was once. The large girls are going off to school. We have a very good Sabbath-school. We have a large and commodious church, just dedicated one month ago by Mr. Jones, our pastor. He is a good preacher, and we all like him very much.

Santa Claus did not forget us, although it was dreadful weather for him to turn out. I will close for this time. May God bless you this year in spreading your good paper all over the land. Your friend,

MARTHA HESTER.

The Wonderful Bridge.

One bright morning in June grandma was standing by the south window of the sitting-room looking at the great apple-trees in neighbor Evans' garden. The green leaves were rustling in the morning breeze; but it was not the leaves at which she was looking just then. The children wanted to know what it was that she saw, and she pointed to a slender thread that stretched from the ground up through the golden sunshine to one of the heavy boughs far up on the left tree, and glistened like a line of silver as it waved in the breeze.

"What is it?" cried the children in chorus.

"Such a thing as I've spoken of," said grandma.

"A wonderful bridge," said papa.

Little Madam Arachnid was up in the tree there, and wanted to get down to the ground, so instead of letting herself down and getting bruised, or going way round and climbing down and getting bruised, she made that pretty bridge."

"How could she make it?" asked the children.

"Well," said papa, "she always carries with her a little factory—every ordinary little spinneret close together—and when she wants a bridge, a little thread as fine you could not see it, starts from each spinneret. She puts perhaps a thousand of the gossamer threads together, and they make the beginning of a rope, like that you see yonder. Then she glues the end of the rope to the limb of the tree, and jumps off into the air and swings down toward the ground, the spinners working as fast as they can, and the shining rope growing longer and longer, and the breeze blowing her gently away from the tree. When she reaches the ground she breaks off the rope close to the little factory, and fastens it to some stick or spear of grass. All this she does as quick as we can tell of it. When she wants to go into the tree again she runs up the rope as easily as you go up stairs; and if she wants to prevent any other spiders using her bridge she unfastens the lower end and carries it with her, folding up the bridge as she goes over it.

"Sometimes, when the wind is blowing, Madam Arachnid will fasten an end of her rope to a twig, and, jumping off into the air, will let the wind blow her like a kite across to another tree, and gradually will have a bridge more wonderful than any suspension bridge that man ever made. Mrs. Spider and Mr. Spider, and all the little spiders, can run backward and forward on this bridge as easily as you can run from one tree to another in the garden walk; but if an unfortunate little fly should try to walk on that same bridge his feet would stick to it; he could not walk on it at all, and he would have lots of trouble in getting away, and perhaps would stick there till the spiders came out and eat him up."

"Do they make anything besides bridges out of those bright threads?" asked Willie.

"Yes," said papa; "they make a great variety of traps and snares to catch flies and things and other little creatures. Did you never see cobwebs on the bushes or in the corners of a room?"

Billy.—"Yes, sir. Are they made the same way this is, and are all webs traps?"

Papa.—"Yes, my boy; they are made of the same silky threads as this bridge, tied together so as to make a snare or trap, for the spiders are great hunters and trappers. In hot countries, where the very large poisonous spiders live, they sometimes build their webs strong enough to catch birds and small snakes. Sometimes you will see a thick web made in the shape of a round tube. Then it is not a trap, but is the spider's house."

Willie.—"Do people use spider webs for anything?"

Papa.—"A hundred years ago a Frenchman made a pair of gloves and a pair of stockings of the silk from a spider; and the silk is sometimes used in very delicate scientific instruments, such as surveyor's telescopes. Cobwebs made by house spiders are sometimes used in medicine, and are useful to stop bleeding from cuts, etc."—N. W. B., in the Congregationalist.

A Child Saved.

In his Sunday morning sermon at the Rink, in Brooklyn, Mr. Moody gave an account of a young lady who was sent to a fashionable boarding school, where she met one faithful Christian, whose example and influence led to her conversion.

When she returned home her parents were annoyed to find her a Christian, for they wanted her to mingle in the first circles. Here the speaker broke off with a bold and striking apostrophe: "What is the best society? where is the best society? In dainty drawing-rooms, among silken curtains and gorgeous furniture and velvet carpets? No; the first circle is around the throne; the best society is with Elijah and Elisha and the prophets, with John and James and Peter and the apostles. Give your hearts to God, and he will introduce you to the best society." And so, as it seemed, this young lady thought, for she remained faithful.

She went to the Sunday school of her church, and asked the superintendent for a class, but he, who only knew her as a frivolous, fashion-seeking girl, did not give her what she asked. So she picked up a little street Arab, and leading him walked him into the Sunday school-room, and asked the superintendent for permission to have her little boy in a class all by himself, which was granted. When that boy heard the children sing it took him off his feet, as the saying is, and on his return to his home he told his mother that he had been among the angels. She questioned him and said: "That was a Protestant Sunday school; don't go there any more, or I'll tell your father." But he went next Sunday, and the father was duly informed and the boy duly flogged. But he went again and again, and took his whipping every time cheerfully, until at last he said to his father: "Daddy, won't you flog me before I go, so that the thoughts of it won't bother me in the Sunday school?" The father saw he couldn't whip him out of it, so he tried to bribe him. All the week the boy peddled apples in the depot; so he promised him if he did not go to the Sunday school he might peddle for himself on Saturday afternoons. The boy agreed, and went immediately to the young lady and asked her if a class could not be formed in her house and be taught on the Saturday afternoons, because his father was determined he should not go to the Sunday school. She gladly consented, and opened week by week his young mind to the truths of Christianity.

Shortly afterward his foot slipped when he was peddling his apples at the windows of a railway carriage, and the train went over both his legs. He asked the doctor who was dressing his horrible wounds: "Doctor, shall I live to get home?" "No, my poor boy," said the doctor, "you're dying now." "Then," said the lad, "get 'em at home! died a Christian," and so passed away. When that young lady appears before the great throne she will not be a stranger, for that boy whose soul she saved will thresher by the hand, and lead her to Jesus. And he will watch for her coming patiently, and spring to meet her when she comes.

"I'LL PAY YOU FOR THAT!"—A hen trod on a duck's foot. She did not mean to do it, and it did not hurt her much. But the duck said: "I'll pay you for that!" So the duck flew at the hen; but as she did so her wing struck an old goose who stood close by.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried the goose, and she flew at the duck; but as she did so her foot tore the fur of a cat who was just then in the yard.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried the cat, and she flew at the goose; but as she did so her tail brushed the eye of a sheep who was near.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried the sheep, and he ran at the cat; but as he did so his foot hit the foot of a dog who lay in the sun.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried he, and he ran at the sheep; but as he did so his leg struck an old cow who stood by the gate.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried she, and she ran at the dog; but as she did so her horn grazed the skin of a horse who stood by a tree.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried he, and he ran at the cow. What a run there was! The horse flew at the cow, and the cow at the dog; and the dog at the cat; and the cat at the goose; and the goose at the duck; and the duck at the hen. What a noise they made, to be sure!

"Hi, hi! What is all this?" cried the man who had the care of them. "I cannot have this noise. You may stay here," he said to the hen. But he drove the dark to the pond, and the goose to the field, and the cat to the barn, and the sheep to her fold, and the dog to his house, and the cow to her yard, and the horse to his stall. "I'll pay you for that!" said the man.—Nursery.

NEVER TOO OLD.—Rev. Andrew Longacre, in a recent sermon, said: "A man is never too old to work until he is too old to live." We thought how true that is! Men of advanced age, trembling on their staff as they tread cautiously along the crowded thoroughfare, or sit quietly in the old arm-chair at home, may yet do something—do something for Jesus. Christian men often retire from business too early in life. They might work on and accumulate property to be used for Jesus. Let us work on—work ever—and even in the death grasp we may be able to do something for Jesus.

"Father, it tells here of illuminated manuscripts; what were they lighted with?" "With the light of other days, my son," answered the father.

What is the greatest stand ever made for civilization? The ink-stand.

The Appeal of Missions.

Foreign missions are more nearly a work of disinterested benevolence than almost anything we can take in hand. The money given does not come back to us directly and visibly. Those who build churches and schools at home reap the benefits at once in the enhancement of their property and in the improvement of the society which surrounds them. The gospel preached in a community or neighborhood is worth a thousand times its cost in the improvement of public morals and in the promotion of the general welfare. The giver himself and his family are the immediate beneficiaries. The spiritual and the temporal interests are subserved. If is a provision for his own good, and contributes to his own comfort and enjoyment. The money given remains at home, is thrown into circulation, and scarcely leaves the hand that bestows it before, in some shape, it returns to the giver. The funds for foreign missions are expended abroad, and the end is to bless those who are far away—people of a different race, and perhaps living on the other side of the earth. If the bread that is cast upon the waters ever comes back, it is after many days. It is this feature of missions which should most commend them to the Christian. Here is an opportunity to be unselfish, to do something for love's sake, with no possible taint of low and unworthy motives. It is an occasion such as Mary coveted and improved when she broke the alabaster box and poured the costly load upon the Savior's head. What is often urged by a utilitarian covetousness as an objection to missions is in truth a singular and sad tribute to its worth. Some measure of self-denial is needed in order to make a gift of Christian value. The cheerful giver, and the devout one, is truly blessed, and they are compelled to very often do it. We have all those in the spirit of foreign missions, because it is addressed to the purest and highest principles of benevolence. And [illegible] it is the object of all missionary enterprise.

Missions appeal most directly to the conscience. The command to go into all the world is explicit. The obligation might be inferred from the universal provisions of salvation, from the scope of infinite love, from the breadth of the atonement, and from the ministry of the Spirit in all men. The matter might have been left to the benevolent impulses of the regenerated heart, in view of the lost condition of the world without the gospel. It is not conceivable that those who have felt the peace and comfort of salvation, and have realized the perils of sin, should look upon a perishing race with indifference. But the Master's authority is directly asserted. We are commanded to do this thing—to preach the gospel to every creature. He calls his servants and delivers unto them his goods—the priceless treasure of the gospel—and will hold them to account for the sacred trust. Our marching orders are clear, and in conscience we must obey them. There may be other motives, but the cause could not be left to them, and hence we have the command. It is not for us to inquire into the reasons so much as it is to obey. The appeal is to the Christian conscience, to our sense of obligation to God, and to our recognition of the authority of Christ. It is God's appointed means of giving the gospel to the world. In his measure the commission is to every Christian man, and Christ expects him to do his part. It is not relevant in this connection to inquire how long it will take to Christianize mankind, or whether the world will ever be altogether brought to Christ. As a matter of conscience, we are to send the glad tidings everywhere, and see that the gospel is preached to all nations for a witness. Whether the heathen can be saved without the gospel is not the question. God has commanded us to send it to them, and our responsibility will be measured not so much by the extent of their danger as by our disposition and ability to fulfill the great commission. However it may be with the heathen, we shall ourselves be lost if we fail in our obedience to Christ's commands. It is not a question of sentiment nor of speculative theology, but of conscientious obedience to Christ. That must be a conscience grossly perverted or sadly in want of light that is not alive to missionary obligation. It is to conscience, the enlightened Christian conscience, that the cause of missions makes one of its strongest appeals. This is an element of value in it: that it addresses the conscience, that it quickens the spiritual nature, and that it goes down to the very root of religious principle. It breaks up the ground and enriches the spiritual soil of the church, and thus contributes to her piety and power.

In another aspect of the subject faith stands out conspicuously. "Son, man, can these dry bones live?" The vision was to rebuke unbelief and to illustrate the power of the gospel. Paganism is a valley of dry bones, and the world is a scene of spiritual death. What the gospel has done warrants the conviction that it will yet wave its victorious banner over every land. It has achieved enough within fifty years to assure us that ere long "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea." It is written that the root of Jesse shall stand for an ensign of the people, and that "to it shall the Gentiles seek, and his rest shall be glorious." Christ saw of the travail of his soul and was satisfied. The apostles believed in the gospel as the power and the wisdom of God. Those who have been born of the Spirit have in themselves the earnest of the world's conversion. Let the church go forth at the divine command, prophesying in the name of Christ, and calling for the life-breathing Spirit, and the result is not doubtful. Not to have faith in foreign missions is to confess our unbelief in the gospel and in Christ himself, and that we are profoundly ignorant of the history of Christianity. It is here that we ought to have faith, and that we must have it. Faith in God, faith in Christ, faith in the Holy Ghost, faith in the gospel as the means of human salvation, is needed to encourage and strengthen our endeavors. It is an enterprise of love, of conscience, and also of faith. Here is a distinctive end and purpose for our faith, and according to our faith will be the progress of Christian conquest.

A capital excellence of missions is that [illegible] we are in complete sympathy with the work of Christ. The Redeemer's heart is in his work as in no other. [illegible] at the same time [illegible] self in a [illegible] ... [illegible] ... [illegible] ...

Out With It.

Mr. Henry C. Bowen, of the Independent, having been cited before the examining committee of Plymouth Church, concludes his statement in answer as follows:

With this brief reference to matters which have had an influence in forming my judgment, I will now hasten to tell you frankly what are my conclusions in regard to the character of the pastor of Plymouth Church. I have known Mr. Beecher quite intimately since the day of his arrival in Brooklyn. I have been acquainted with him socially and privately, in the church and in the family, in business matters and in religious matters. I have heard attentively, but with profound grief, what has been said to me confidentially against him. I have felt my heart stirred to its depths for dear friends who, years before the present scandal was published, sorrowfully begged my counsel, as they assured me that their pastor and mine had sinfully betrayed the sanctity of home—the very charge long after presented to me by Theodore Tilton in regard to his own home. I never can or will be base enough to allow a single name to be brulted before the world, although I am now ready to testify to the essential facts before any proper tribunal. These disclosures I heard with a sad heart, and, tried to accept the evidence brought to me that Mr. Beecher was grief-stricken and penitent.

I have read much that has been said for and against Mr. Beecher in the public press. I have, with utter amazement, read and reread and pondered over his published letters and written confessions in regard to the serious accusations made against him. I have tried to weigh all the evidence which has come before me with judicial fairness and Christian honesty. I have read the withering charges which have been published to the world against him. I have seen those charges again and again hurled at him, and he calmly and coldly challenged to appear before any impartial tribunal to meet them. I have seen him, with all this cloud of darkness gathering about him, apparently defying public opinion, defying the advice of his old, life-long friends, embracing the soundest, oldest and best clergymen in the country, and seemingly defying again, and again the very God of heaven himself to cast him down. Now, being summoned here to speak, and to speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, I solemnly give to my unwavering opinion, in view of all the facts and evidence presented to me, that the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, without even the shadow of doubt in my mind, is guilty of the awful crimes of adultery, perjury and hypocrisy. This I say again and before the bar of this committee, as my deliberate opinion, and I may be permitted to affirm that I give it calmly, without malice, and with no other than a sincere desire to do my duty faithfully to God and to mankind, to the church and to the world.

Letter from Mrs. Lambuth.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, Dec. 1, 1875.

DEAR D. C. KELLEY:—Dear Brother: The first of December found us safely landing on the shores of our adopted home, just one month from the departure of the City of Tokio out of San Francisco harbor. The passage was rough and stormy at times. Even from Nagasaki to Shanghai we encountered a heavy gale, but we have great cause to thank our heavenly Father that no harm came to us, and that we now live in so much health and comfort among our native friends here.

Mr. Lambuth's health has been severely tested during my absence, and when first we met him my heart very nearly sunk; but the means being used are doing him good, I think, and we pray that God may see fit to bless the regular course to entire restoration. He is up the best part of the day, as well as can be expected, and works, only of course a very little while at a time. He is only to be encouraged to do as much work as he can do.

Now that Bro. Parker has left us, Mr. Lambuth will be the only one stationed here, and consequently will have to do the work of three. He is very much encouraged at the success which has attended Bro. Parker's labors, and is very anxious to get to work in good earnest, and report to the Sunday schools, ladies' societies, Christian bands, and all other associations formed to help on their work here. The natives gave us a hearty welcome back, and rejoice in seeing Bro. Parker to begin his labors among them. We hope to accompany him to Soochow directly after Christmas, so that he may begin in earnest at the New Year. I trust that our dear children are well. We long to hear of their welfare, not yet having our letters, which we feel sure are on the way to us. Your grateful friend,

M. J. LAMBUTH.

NEW YORK BIBLE SOCIETY.—The regular meeting of the board of managers of the New York Bible Society was held at the Bible House on Thursday evening, February 3, the vice-president, Mr. M. M. Budlong, in the chair. The various standing committees reported as follows: During the month of January 3,052 families residing in the Fourth, Ninth and Eleventh Wards were visited, and 517 Bibles or Testaments distributed among them by gift or sale. Two hundred and fifteen vessels lying in the harbor were supplied with 2,942 Bibles or Testaments in different languages, and 642 Bibles or Testaments were distributed among 2,917 emigrants landed at Castle Garden.

What is mind? No matter. What is matter? Never mind. But what is mind? Oh, it's immaterial.

Sunday School Lessons.

As several persons, whose wishes I respect, have requested me to make the lesson calendar of our Sunday school periodicals correspond with that of the International Committee, so that we may all study the same lesson on the same day, I take this method of saying I will do so with pleasure. I will begin with the second quarter, April 2. From that date I will adopt the International Calendar.

I would also state that we have so changed the form of the Lesson Papers as to add studies for Bible classes. This, I think, adds very much to the value of these papers. They will contain the "Text," "Golden Text," "Central Truth," "Home Readings," "Questions for Intermediate Class," and "Questions for Bible Class." Simple expositions of the lessons, for primary classes, will appear in each number of the Weekly Visitor. I hope these changes will please our friends, and render our Sunday school periodicals more useful. W. G. E. CUNNYNGHAM,

S. S. Secretary.

PUBLISHING HOUSE, Feb. 5, 1876.

The New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, which was established about three years since, with the special object of breaking up the extensive and shocking traffic in obscene books, pictures, etc., held its first public meeting in Association Hall on Thursday evening. A large number of gentlemen, including his honor Mayor Wickham, and representatives of the various professions and pursuits, were present, and manifested a deep interest in the society and its work. The Hon. William E. Dodge presided, and called upon the Rev. Dr. Sabine to offer prayer.

Mr. Anthony Comstock, the secretary and efficient agent of the society, made his report, from which it appeared that the number of arrests for the past year was 47, and the total number since the organization of the society, 1873. Of these, convictions had been obtained in 105 cases. Of money forfeited in bail bonds there was a sum of $8,507 for the year 1875, and of $35,000 for the whole time. The amount of fines levied was $5,450 for the whole time; 12,101 books had been seized and destroyed, eight and a half tons of printed matter, and 20,000 immoral pictures and photographs. The report further stated that five assaults had been made upon the agent's life while in the prosecution of his work. Of the persons arrested, 51 were Irishmen, 26 Englishmen, 4 Americans, 14 Germans, 3 Frenchmen, 1 Spaniard, 1 Italian, 1 African, 1 Polish Jew, 1 Bavarian, and 1 Scotchman.—New York Observer.

The American Bible Society, invites the attention of its friends to the serious falling off in its receipts. For the first nine months of the present fiscal year the aggregate receipts were only $215,679, as against $328,908 in the corresponding period of the year preceding, and they are $112,287 less than in the corresponding period ending December 31, 1874. The falling off is both in donations and in payment on purchase account, and is undoubtedly to be accounted for, in large measure, by the general depression in business, and by the urgent appeals and pressing necessities of benevolent societies which are under denominational control. The board earnestly requests that pastors and churches will assign a regular place to this society in their schedules for systematic contributions, to the end that the cause of Bible distribution may be sustained by the prayers and gifts of all who love the Bible.

There have been, says the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, interesting revivals in progress in our city for several weeks. During the autumn the work of God in the Calvary charge, Mr. Reid's and Emmanuel appear to be resulting in the conversion of a large number of persons. There will be a larger increase to the Baltimore district than has been reported in the last ten years. It is believed from present appearances that the Conference, to meet in Westminster on the first day of March, will report a net increase of not less than 1,000 members.

New York has a handsome museum and art university. Hewson's picture, Wildfield from the [illegible] is to be its place of possession. The assemble gift will be made some time in February, and great preparations are being made for its reception in a proper manner. One of the university buildings is being remodeled for that purpose. It will be the handsomest collection south of the Potomac.—Lexington Gazette.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Grass Alone.

The almost universal practice among farmers is to sow their grass and clover seed with some other kind of larger-growing grain, such as wheat, rye or oats. In my first experience in farming I followed this system, supposing that others probably had been tried and found not quite satisfactory. Then, again, almost everybody said the young grass and clover needed shade for the first few months, and this the taller-growing grain supplied. Still I have always noticed that both clover and the grasses seemed to suffer more from drouth when growing under such conditions than when occupying the soil alone. But, upon further thought and inquiry, I came to the conclusion that it was not so much on account of its being the best way to seed down land, but afforded the farmer an opportunity of robbing the earth of its fertility a little faster than when only one crop was grown at a time on the same field. In other words, the grasses and clover could be made to grow when sown among larger kinds of grain.

On very rich lands, perhaps, a man is excusable for thus doubling up his crops; but no one ever gained anything by it on moderately worn or poor soils. Of late years, when I desire to seed down a field, I plow, harrow and sow grass seed just as I would winter wheat or rye, and with equally as certain good results. This season being unusually wet during July, I seeded down one plat nearly a month since, and to-day there is as fine a young sod of timothy as any one could wish. Yesterday I finished seeding down another plat of two acres, which was plowed in spring and sown with buckwheat, the latter being turned under when in bloom, and the grass seed sown over all. Top-dressing with short or long manure, if needed, can be added late in the fall. Of course my intention is to have the land improve in fertility from year to year, instead of deteriorating.—Rural New Yorker.

EXTERMINATE THE WEB-WORM. Now is the time to deal fatal blows to the pestiferous apple-tree web-worms. The caterpillars known as the web-worm have already made their appearance on our quince bushes, pear-trees, and on some other trees, such as the apple-tree and mulberry. They are not confined to these particular trees, but are found also, later in the season, on other varieties, and on the bushes and shrubs of our gardens, making them look, as the season advances, unsightly, to say nothing of the injury done the tree or bush. Their webs, at first small, are gradually enlarged until they sometimes extend over entire branches in the latter part of the summer. These caterpillars, when grown, are about one inch in length. Their bodies are thinly clothed with hairs of a grayish color, intermingled with a few which are black; the general color of the body is a greenish yellow, dotted with black; a bright yellow stripe on each side and broad blackish stripe along the back; head and feet black. On arriving at full size, or late in summer, they leave the trees and wander about, eating such plants as fall in their way, till they have found suitable places of concealment, where they make their cocoons, composed of a slight mass of silk. They remain in the cocoons in the chrysalis state through the winter, and are transformed to moths early in the summer season. The time to exterminate these destructive insects (all web-worms or Hyphantria textor) is when they are just beginning to make their webs in the trees or bushes. So soon as they begin to appear on the branches they should be stripped off with the leaves and crushed under foot.

MULCHING WHEN IRRIGATING.—In setting out plants great aid can be derived from the use of a mulch in retaining the moisture when watered, and preventing the formation of a crust. As soon as the plant is put out, water thoroughly; let it be equivalent to a soaking rain; then cover with a slight coat of the earth. This will last at least a week, and if rain follows it need not be repeated. A better way, however, is to mulch at once either with gravel or cut straw, or any similar material, which will break the force of the dash of the water on the ground, letting it through the mulch softly, and keeping the soil shaded and moist. To do this most effectually, rake the ground with the hoe around the plant some distance from it, highest on the out-side, so as to prevent the water from running off. In this way the watering may be done either copiously or less so and oftener. The strawberries which I transplanted a short time ago, at the commencement of the heated spell, and treated in this way, have been, through all the hot weather, thriving finely, and all the better, it seems, for the heat. The straw mulch has the advantage of some fertility as it rots, while the gravel draws the heat, and may therefore be preferable in autumn, as it is early in the spring. It also seems to afford manure, in some way, or increased growth; even in the heat of summer I am using it with success on grassland on a small scale.—Correspondent of Country Gentleman.

FRENCH WOLVES.—A French agricultural newspaper furnishes some interesting statistics in connection with the number of wolves in France. There are about 2,000 ulde-bodied animals of that species, which destroy the amount of about 1,000 francs a year each. But this 2,000,000 francs a year represents the loss occasioned by their presence; these 2,000 wolves, who only devour some 30,000 sheep a year, oblige the farmers to keep 20,000,000 sheep in folds, and render it impossible for them to feed in the fields, as in England. All this entails great expense. The writer thinks that if proper measures were taken the young wolves might be killed in April, and the country freed from this scourge in the course of a few years. It may be doubted, however, whether it would be possible to get rid of wolves entirely, as in hard winters they come in from North Germany and Poland. They are sometimes found at Chantilly and Fontainebleau. They are very cunning. A pack of them will go to a fold and place themselves all on the same side. The sheep naturally huddle together at the other extremity. On a sudden the wolves dart round, and the terrified sheep rush in a body with such force across the fold that they often knock down the barriers which protect them.

PACKING POULTRY.—D. W. Lewis & Co., New York, write as follows to the Country Gentleman in reference to the manner of packing dressed poultry for that market:

Keep from food twenty-four hours before killing—food in the crop sours and injures the appearance. Legs and head should be left on, and the poultry not drawn. Hang all poultry by the legs twenty-four hours before packing, where it will not freeze. This prevents its sweating and looking slippery. Use dry straw, clean and free from dust; put a layer of straw on the bottom of the package, then alternate layers of straw and poultry, and pack snugly, backs up, and avoid breaking the skin or bones. In very cold weather, line the boxes with heavy hardware paper, or wrap each bird in it, which precludes the use of straw. Different sorts of poultry should not be mixed in the same package. Fat turkeys are the specials for Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year; geese for Christmas.

WEST FLORIDA ORANGES.—The Pensacola Gazette says: "East and south Florida keep up through their newspapers an endless succession of jubilations over their resources as orange-producing sections, but we doubt if they have trees to show that have stood the chances of a greater number of seasons than some that are in this locality. The trees in Dr. John A. Brosnaham's grove, at his beautiful place on Gull Point, are loaded with fruit of the finest quality, exceeding in average size any that we have seen imported. The Gull Point property having changed ownership several times, we are without data as to the age of the trees, but they are known to be over twenty-five years old, and are possibly nearer forty. These, as well as many other aged trees in full bearing and still thrifty growth at different places in the Pensacola Bay country, are proof sufficient that both our climate and soil are suited to the culture of the orange."

AGE OF ENGLISH JEWS.—The Independent has the following statement in relation to the English Jews:

The late settlement of the colonies of the Jews now in England is a somewhat curious fact, and accounts for there being as yet no distinctively English Jews in the same sense that there are German and Polish Jews. The latter are known as the Ashkenazim, in contradistinction to the Sephardim, or Jews of Spain, Portugal and the Levant. The Sephardim were the first to settle in England; but it was not until the time of Queen Anne that they did so in any large numbers or attained a position of importance. The Ashkenazim were looked down upon by the Sephardim, who threw obstacles in the way of their coming to England. The first took place toward the end of the seventeenth century, and it was only in 1722 that they obtained a synagogue, through the liberality of Moses, of Breslau, who called himself Moses Hart. The Sephardim, in spite of terrible oppression at times, had been accustomed to high office and rank in the south of Europe, where they had married into many noble families; and their aristocratic type of countenance and character contrasts strongly with that of the Ashkenazim, who have now become the typical representatives of the English Jews. This difference may be explained by the fact that the Ashkenazim had been accustomed to live as petty hucksters and traders, shut out from political life and refined society; although the Sephardim affect to treat them as less pure in blood. It is interesting to trace in Mr. Disraeli's "Tancred" the old contempt of the aristocratic Sephardim for their northern brethren. The princes and rulers of the captivity naturally appear in the book as southern Jews. Perhaps the best-known living representatives of the Sephardim and Ashkenazim respectively are Mr. Disraeli, the present premier of England, and Baron Rothschild; and the positions they severally occupy illustrate most remarkably the characteristics of the two great branches of European Jews.

DEVOTION.—Cyprian, on his way to martyrdom, was told by the Emperor that he would give him time to consider if he had not better cast a grain of incense into the fire in honor of the idol gods than die so ignominiously. Cyprian replied: "There needs no deliberation in the case." John Huss, at the stake, was offered pardon if he would recant. His reply was: "I am here ready to suffer death." Thomas Hawks, in like circumstances, said: "If I had a hundred bodies I would suffer them all to be torn in pieces rather than recant."

Humph!" grumbled a cynical individual as he first caught sight of one of the emblems in the windows of a church in Waterville, "that's well chosen any way—a small cross and a big crown—a correct measure of modern piety."—Kennebec Journal.

The Catholic cure of St. Jean de Baptiste, in Montreal, has notified his female parishioners that he will not administer the sacrament to those who wear low-necked dresses or hoop-skirts.

Believe nothing against another but upon good authority; nor report, what may hurt another unless it be a greater hurt to others to conceal it.

Those who are in the habit of telling prodigious stories ought to have good memories; but fortunately their memories are generally short. Richard Brinsley Sheridan dealt with these mendacious pests in a manner peculiar to himself. He would never allow himself to be outdone by a verbal prodigy. Whenever a monstrous story was told in his presence he would endeavor to outdo it by one of his own coinage, and consign the narrator to confusion by a falsehood more glaring than his own. Once in his hearing a sporting adventurer ran thus: "I was fishing one day, say in a certain cold spring full of delicious trout, and soon caught a large mess. But, what was really surprising, not a foot from the cold spring there was one of boiling water; so that, when you wanted to cook your fish, all you had to do, after hooking them from the cold spring, was to pop them directly into the boiling." The company all expressed astonishment and incredulity at this monstrous assertion, with the exception of Sheridan. "I know," said he, "of a phenomenon yet more surprising. I was fishing one day, when I came to a place where there were three springs. The first was a cold one stocked with fish, the second a boiling spring, and the third a natural fountain of melted butter and parsley!" "Melted butter and parsley!" exclaimed the first story-teller, "Impossible!"

A witness in England, on entering the box, had a Testament presented to him, but he declined to be sworn. Being asked his reasons for refusing, he naively replied: "I'll tell a lie wi' ony mon i' England, but I'll not swear to it."

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 30, 1875.
Mr. Edward L. Hall: Sir—I have examined the sample of your artificial Perlmine Powder left with me by you, with the following result:
I find it to contain no acids or alkalies; on which account it will be entirely free from corrosive action when applied to paint or metallic surfaces. It contains no impurities whatsoever, which may be evident for gilding or silvering when using it. The particles of the Powder are well-ground together, and not rounded, as in most kinds of sands and in many other polishing agents. The particles are exceedingly small and hard, which, with their irregular shape, give it especial value as a rapid and fine polisher. Yours truly,

MEDICAL.
DUCONGE'S
PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP
NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound, its well-established virtue and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Throat and Bronchia is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it may be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at any length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.
It has been found highly beneficial in all Inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Diarrhœa or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.
In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most efficacious in preventing that most awful scourge whereto timely resorted to.
Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure, the truly extraordinary medicine has, over most cough remedies, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children, as it requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, not only because the bottles contain more than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this Sirup will keep for years without fermenting, and it can be used in families whenever required by simply keeping the bottle well corked.
Directions for Taking the Sirup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day; either pure or diluted in a little water, or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.
Persons much troubled during the night may take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a good night's rest.
Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three to four hours. For sale by —The cause of the sleep of flowers ms the subject of an article by M. . Boyer, in a late number of the ournal de la Societe Centrale d'Hor-ulture de France. The writer an-nces the idea that the expansion flowers in the morning is due to a elling of the cellular tissue, which ccasioned by heat. After the dis-pearance of the swelling by evapo-tion the flowers close again. This, M. Boyer's opinion, accounts for e early closing of flowers under a gh temperature or in dry soils.

—The committee appointed by the itish Association "for the purpose investigating the underground ters in the new red sandstone and e permian formations of England, d the quality and character of the ter supplied to various towns and stricts from these formations," ve issued as a circular an abstract their preliminary report. They te that they hope next year to re-rt on the water-bearing properties the whole of the English new red d permian formations, on the na-re and chemical characters of the ters obtained, and on the effects these waters on the sanitary con-ion of the people using them.

—Prof. R. E. Rogers, at the meet-g of the American Academy of ences held during the present onth in Philadelphia, presented a ry interesting paper on the "Tem-rature of the Comstock Lode nes." In the deeper drifts the at is almost intolerable, being fre-ently as high as 150°. Life is sup-rted by pouring ice-water on the ad. The water which trickles from e rocky roof is so hot as to be al-ost scalding, and the workmen are otected by sheet-iron screens. This at is due to the decomposition of lphides. There is trace of salines the rock, and the contact of the lphide of silver with the chloride sodium produces, by chemical ac-n, the higher temperature.

—Some curious observations were ely made by Mr. Joseph Wilcox, Colorado, respecting the flight of asshoppers, as determined by the ather. Countless multitudes of insects were seen on wing, high the air, one cloudy afternoon hile the probability of rain was ng discussed by several persons of e party the grasshoppers suddenly scended to the ground, in a great ud, "like a furious snow storm." two or three minutes not an in-ct could be seen in the air, and in ort time it began to rain. Soon er it ceased to rain, and the in-cts took flight again; but in the rse of half an hour, there being further special indication of rain, ey suddenly plunged to the ground nin, in time to avoid another ower. The same thing recurred ree times.

—Some very interesting fossil re-ains of Saurians have lately been humed in Illinois. According to of. Cope, into whose hands they l for examination, they constitute e first definite indication of the istence of reptiles of the order ynicocephala in the Western misphere. A remarkable char-cter lies in the longitudinal perfora-n of the centrums of the vertebræ, in living lizards of the genus henodon, in New Zealand. The mains indicate two new species, h a new genus, and were named ictus heteroclitus and Coeopydraps lattii. The specimens were asso-ated with remains of some fishes, portant in evidence of their ge-ic horizon. Not to go too far into rticulars, the evidence is that a gment of the Triassic fauna—so cient in the Northern hemisphere, d so remarkably preserved to this y in Australia and New Zealand—s been brought to light in Illinois.

—It has taken us some time to ar-ve at the facts in the case of the rious horny comb or crest which unds upright upon the bill of the merican white pelican (Pelecanus rhyrhynchus,) and constitutes one the most conspicuous features of ut species, in comparison with its nigeners. It was supposed to be a rmanent character of the male sex ne. Not long since its deciduous ture was ascertained by Mr. R. dgway, who found that the thou-nds of pelicans he observed breed-g at a lake in Nevada regularly d this appendage at the close of e breeding season. Still later, Mr. ss, of Kansas, ascertained by tual dissection that the comb is nd on the bill of the female as ll as of the male. The use of this omalous formation remains con-tural; but the fact of its develop-nt only during the breeding sea-, and its loss immediately after-rd shows that it is in some way nnected with reproduction of the ecies—like the antlers of deer, for stance, with which it is entirely alogous in its periodical develop-nt and regular fall.

—Prof. G. Brown Goode describes o interesting cases of albinism in hes—a class in which this peculiar ection has been less studied than ong the higher vertebrates. One these Albino fishes was a common addock (Melanogrammus aglefi-us,) normal in all respects save lor, which was a pinkish-white, th a pearly luster, instead of the ual brownish-gray. The black eral line and dark blotches near e pectoral fins were absent. This ecimen was taken off Barnegat, N. The other instance of albinism as in the case of the common eel (Anguilla Bostoniensis,) taken at ank, Conn. This fish was a pale, ll yellow above; nearly white be-eath. The writer states that, ac-rding to good authority, albinism not uncommon among European sh, though he knows of no previous stance in our waters; and that the ndition is especially rare among embers of the family to which the addock belongs. Mr. F. W. Put-am, in a note appended to Prof. oode's article, however, mentions xamples of albinism, both in the eel nd haddock, in the fish collection of e Peabody Academy, at Salem—e haddock having been taken off ewburyport, some years ago, and e eel in Massachusetts Bay.

On Saturday the market opened with only a moderate inquiry, and operations were restricted by brokers claiming concessions which factors were unwilling to grant. The business during the morning was consequently of limited extent; but later in the day parties came together more freely, and the movement showed increased animation, resulting in a business of 9,200 bales. Prices exhibited more irregularity, the same descriptions occasionally selling at a difference of ¼c. Some kinds were held steadfastly at previous rates, others were offered more freely, and some could not be moved unless by liberal concessions. On Monday the movement commenced with a moderate inquiry, but operations were restricted by the unsatisfactory assortment offering, as well as by brokers claiming concessions which factors were unwilling to grant. The business during the morning was consequently limited, but later in the day parties came together more freely, and the sales summed up 9,300 bales. On Tuesday the market opened with only a moderate inquiry, and the sales during the morning hardly exceeded 1,500 bales, after which buyers came forward more freely and took 4,500 bales, making a total for the day of 6,000 bales. Operations were restricted by its being a holiday.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 24,600 bales, against 25,350 for the corresponding time last week and 30,150 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,091,075 bales, against 826,133 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 507,739 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 493,219—3,383,148 against 2,888,929. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 67,671 bales to Great Britain, of 82,013 to France, and of 216,949 to other foreign ports. BAYONNE, Feb. 28.—Don Carlos, with about two thousand men, is now at Romesvaux, very near the French border. It is believed he will enter France to-day. The chief members of the Carlist provincial councils have taken leave of him and sought refuge on French territory.

The following official intelligence has been sent to the Spanish minister at London:

"The war is at an end. Don Carlos has asked France for hospitality. He informed Gen. Poncet, commanding at Bayonne, that he would enter France at nine o'clock this forenoon by the bridge of Arrègue." Three thousand Carlists have entered France at St. Jean Pied de Port, and they are crossing the frontier by hundreds at Aldudes. The French will immediately intern them. King Alfonso has arrived at Pamplona. A dispatch received at Bayonne from Cubloa announces that Don Carlos entered France this morning at Arregue.

From the Work.

RUTLEDGE, ALA.—Mr. Editor: Perhaps a short notice of the revival which prevailed on the Rutledge circuit, Alabama Conference, last year, would not fail to interest some of your numerous readers. Over one hundred souls were converted, and one hundred and thirty-eight added to the church. The fruits of this work of grace still remain. The spiritual state of the church is good at this time. Nine weekly prayer meetings and four class meetings have been kept up during all the winter months. The membership is growing in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. Among the seven hundred and thirty odd members we have had a few dancers and drunkards; but, as the church dealt with the offenders immediately, they have given us but little trouble. This evil must be cured, or the offenders cut off. Most of the new members are doing well. A large number of the brethren are praying in the prayer meetings and are holding family prayers. Everything bids fair for great success the present year.

A. M. JONES, P. C.

The New Reflector.

Paris, says Malignani, at present possesses one of the largest telescopes, if not the largest, in the world. It is situated in the garden of the observatory, under a wooden shed mounted on rails, and which can therefore be shifted, instrument and all, from one place to another with the greatest ease. It is some 30 feet high, and the reflector, with its accessories, weighs about 20 tons. Before we give a faint idea of it let us remind our readers that telescopes of this description consist of a tube wide enough to enable the observer to put his head to the opening without intercepting the image of the object; he turns his back to the heavens and sees the star he wants in the focus of the reflecting mirror that is fixed to the other end of the tube. For this purpose there is an eye-piece screwed to the rim of the tube at the open end, and it is through this the astronomer looks at the image which appears inside the tube. The mirror is parabolic; the rays, therefore, falling upon it parallel to the axis, are all reflected in one point, the focus where the star becomes visible. This being understood, let us say that the diameter of the new telescope is one meter and a fifth, or forty-seven inches and two-thirds, not quite four feet. It is made of wrought iron, and 7.50 meters long—about twenty-four feet. This may give an idea of the immense size of this instrument, which alone weighs 2,200 kilograms (upward of two tons). It rests upon trunnions, and is mounted parallactically—that is, parallel to the axis of the world. The mirror, which is of silvered glass according to Foucault's system, weighs, with the necessary counterpoise, 800 kilograms. The framework consists of wrought iron, pillars rising to the altitude of nine meters (35 feet 7 inches.) The tube can move up and down in its own plane, and round its parallactic support, so that it can follow any star all along its path, the motion of the instrument being generated by clock-work of gigantic proportions, and yet 'going with the minutest' precision. Indeed an error of but three or four millimeters in the focal length of the mirror, or of the tenth part of a second in time, or the slightest bend in any of the heavy pieces composing this monster reflector, would be fatal to its utility; fortunately it is a complete success in every respect. The observations are made laterally, according to the Newtonian system, a movable gallery accessible by means of an iron winding staircase mounted on casters.

The great new telescope designed by the Earl of Rosse is now finished, and stands on its pedestal at the observatory, on the estate of the Earl of Rosse, near Birr, Ireland. It is said to surpass the famous one erected by the late earl. The speculum is three feet six inches in diameter, and the height of the telescope above the ground is twenty-five feet.

Some Wonderful Bridges.

To enumerate a few out of the scores of wonderful bridges in the United States, and beginning with wooden ones, over the Alleghany river at Pittsburg was a trestle bridge 1,172 feet long, and now replaced by one of iron, said to be "a model of elegance and strength." At Quincy, Ill., there is a trestle bridge across the Mississippi, which, including the embankment, is nearly a mile in length. The Portage bridge, spanning the Genesee river, on the Buffalo and Hornellsville branch of the Erie railway, and which was destroyed by fire a year ago, is said to have been the largest wooden viaduct in the world, and was also famous for the grandeur of its location. It spanned a gorge, with perpendicular walls, through which the Genesee river leaps in three successive falls to the level of the valley below, and stood upon thirteen stone piers, set in the river bed, sufficiently above high water mark to be secure against freshets. Upon these piers it rose 234 feet. It was 800 feet long, cost $175,000, and was so ingeniously constructed that any single timber in it could be removed and replaced at pleasure without deranging others. Close to where it stood are the Horseshoe Falls, the Middle Falls, the Devil's Oven, and other objects of interest to the tourist. A train had just passed over it when the flames were discovered, and, though every attempt was made to save it, the fire appeared in so many places that all efforts were in vain. Over the Schuylkill at Philadelphia is another remarkable wooden bridge, with a span of 340 feet. Over the Ohio at Wheeling a wooden bridge has a span of about 1,000 feet, and farther down, uniting the States of Ohio and Kentucky at Cincinnati, is a suspension bridge, whose total length is 2,250 feet, and 100 feet above high water mark, with a center span of 1,057 feet. The Hudson, the Mississippi, the Ohio, the Missouri and other broad rivers in America now boast of bridges each claiming honor for some special feature. At Omaha, the starting-point of the Pacific railway, the trains from the east were at first shifted bodily on to huge flat-bottomed boats to cross the Missouri river; and the first railroad bridge built there was swept away by the overpowering freshets on the breaking up of the ice. "Never mind," cried the enterprising and undaunted engineers: "we will build it stronger next time." And so they have. It is of iron now.—Leisure Hour for January.

The elections which have just taken place in Spain have furnished the clergy another occasion for showing its animus. Nearly all the bishops descended into the political arena, and thundered anathemas at those who demand liberty of conscience. The order was passed along the whole line to fight against every candidate who would not engage to work for the restoration of Catholic unity. The Archbishop of Valencia calls toleration "an unqualified absurdity," "an unpardonable madness," etc. Finally he declares that no Catholic can vote for it.

"No; the conscience of a Catholic does not permit him to vote for that liberty of worship, nor even for simple toleration. No, his conscience cannot permit him to support with his vote any one who does not think thus."

This is followed by various incendiary hints of a resort to arms, etc. Yet, in spite of this wretched farrago of fratricidal bigotry, we are called to weep over the violence done to Catholic consciences in Germany, and elsewhere.—Independent.

REVIVAL IN CARLETTSBURG, KY. We presume, says the Central Methodist, that no one here has ever witnessed a work of grace in which the whole community, especially the leading citizens, seemed to be so generally and deeply impressed, and the accessions numbered so large a proportion of heads of families, and those occupying responsible positions in society.

As we have heretofore stated, the meeting was conducted for more than two weeks by Rev. H. R. Coleman, of Newport, Ky., whose earnest manner, plainness of speech and eloquent presentation of the gospel attracted large audiences, who were soon impressed with the truths of the gospel and the importance of becoming religious. When Bro. Coleman left Rev. F. R. Carroll took his place, and, assisted by the pastor, Rev. J. D. A. Vaught, and the members of the church, the work continues with unabated interest. At this writing (Thursday morning, February 17) there have been fifty-four accessions, and about the same number of conversions.

Dr. Dashiell addressed the Preachers' Meeting in Baltimore on his return from the South, giving the results of his observation in New Orleans and Texas. In answer to a question by one of the colored preachers, whether the colored people desired separate conferences, he stated that on this subject the colored people held different opinions. His own judgment, so far as the Southwest was concerned, especially Texas, was that the colored work would be the gainer by the change. One thing he was glad to observe—the brethren were loyal to the church, and desired to do what would be best for the cause of Christ.—New York Christian Advocate.

The best thing out—An aching tooth.

Wesley Monumental Church.

STATEMENT AND APPEAL.

It is now almost universally known throughout the church and country that we are building a "Wesley Monumental Church" in the city of Savannah, Ga., where the great founder of Methodism lived and labored. No similar enterprise ever met so unanimous and enthusiastic an indorsement and approval from every part of the land, and each branch of the Methodist family. Except the issuing of a general circular, giving the object proposed, no special appeal has been made in behalf of this monument, and no statement as to its progress, plans or prospects of success.

The building is now going up, the brick work about complete, the roof on and ready for the slating. Desiring to keep free from debt, and cash in hand about exhausted, we need means to go on. The pressing necessity here for enlarged church accommodations makes it exceedingly desirable to finish at least the basement this spring, so that it may be occupied; and then we are very anxious, if possible, to complete the entire building during this Centennial year. There will be a memorial-room in the building for the gathering of books, pictures and relics of Wesley and Methodism, also a memorial book for enrolling the name and residence of each one contributing to its erection. Each Conference, indeed every church in all Methodism, ought to be represented here. There are thousands of Methodists who, on becoming acquainted with the purpose and plan of this Monumental Church, not only warmly approved it, but felt that they ought and would help, and thus connect their names with it. Now is the time we need this help, for the work must stop unless friends follow the prompting of the Spirit and their good intentions, and send us the means to go on.

The justice and beautiful propriety of such a noble and worthy monument in this city is universally conceded. Never was any enterprise of the church more fully in its inception and projection the outgrowth of prayer and faith; and perhaps none that promises larger result to the cause of Christ and Methodism, local and general, than does this. We feel that God is directing and guiding in the entire movement, and his glory alone is the end sought.

May we not most earnestly and urgently appeal to every Methodist to help in this special and common movement to honor and perpetuate the memory of the father and founder of our church, at just the time, and in just promising so much good? Then the way a thing is done wonderfully increases the grace and beauty of the doing. Why may not our Methodism, by a generous and spontaneous offering, present to God and his church this beautiful and commodious memorial temple without embarrassment or repeated appeals? It can be done so easily, and to the delight and gratification of the whole church. If each one, immediately on reading this appeal, will send one, five, ten, fifty, one hundred or more dollars, as their hearts may prompt and means allow, the work will be done, and quickly, beautifully done, and the dedication service will be one of the most glorious Methodist jubilees ever enjoyed on our continent, with representative preachers and laymen from every branch of Methodism meeting and mingling in worship, praise and prayer.

Two thousand dollars by any individual or church will secure one of the large windows in auditorium as a memorial window; one thousand dollars one of the windows in Sunday school room. Three of the larger, and several smaller ones, have been taken. The rest are open yet. Come, brethren and friends, respond at once, and let us all rejoice together.

Remittances may be made to either of the undersigned, and all shall be faithfully acknowledged.

A. McWYNN, Pastor.
R. D. WALKER,
Chairman Building Committee.

The meetings at the Hippodrome, New York, says the Independent of Feb. 24, have increased in interest during the week. The attendance has steadily grown from the first, until both halls are crowded. The Protestant clergymen of nearly all the sects in this city take an active part in the revival movements. Many ministers who have heretofore stood aloof from such movements have joined in this one. They have ignored their sectarian feelings and subordinated their special doctrines, and have worked together in a way for which we do not know any precedent in this city. These co-operating clergymen constitute a very powerful and exceedingly influential body, being looked up to as spiritual leaders and guides by a large proportion of our population. It was a great thing to get them interested to such an extent in the revival. They have preached about it in their churches; they have stirred up their people to take part in it; and they have formed special bodies of their members, of both sexes, young and old, to help it forward. Revival meetings are being held in many of the churches, with very encouraging results. The inquiry meetings have been largely attended. The Friday prayer meeting was devoted to the subject of intemperance.

It is no small mercy to understand an affliction.

SCHOOL LIFE.

I sat in the school of sorrow—
The Master was teaching there;
Mine my eyes were dim with weeping,
And my heart was full of care.

Instead of looking upward,
And seeing his face divine,
So full of tenderest pity
For weary hearts like mine;

I only thought of the burden—
The cross that before me lay—
So hard and heavy to carry,
That it darkened the light of day.

So I could not learn my lesson
And say: "Thy will be done:"
And the Master came not near me
As the weary hours went on.

At last, in my heavy sorrow,
I looked from the cross above,
And I saw the Master watching
With a glance of tender love.

He turned to the cross before me,
And I thought I heard him say
My child, thou must bear thy burden,
And learn thy task to-day.

I may not tell the reason;
'Tis enough for thee to know
That I, the Master, am reaching,
And give this cup of woe."

So I stooped to that weary sorrow;
One look at that face divine
Had given me power to trust him,
And say: "Thy will, for mine."

And thus I learnt my lesson,
Taught by the Master alone;
He only knows the tears I shed,
For he has wept his own.

But from them came a brightness,
Straight from the home above,
When the school life will be ended,
And the cross will show the love.

Memoir of Rev. Thomas Clinton.

Rev. Thomas Clinton was born of Irish parentage, in the city of Philadelphia, Pa., in January, 1793, and died in St. Helena parish, La., October 28, 1875, in the eighty-third year of his age. In his childhood and youth he was truly a child of Providence, as he was in all his after life a child of grace. His parents were brought up Roman Catholics, but were awakened and brought to Christ through the instrumentality of the Methodists, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and had their two children, Thomas and an older sister, dedicated to God in holy baptism. During the summer or fall after his birth his parents died, with yellow fever, so near the same hour that they were interred in the same grave in the cemetery of the church where they held their membership. He received this information from the friend who took him from the couch on which his mother had just breathed her last, while his father was dying on another couch near by. We regret that we have not the name of this friend, but presume she was the wife of the man who became his guardian, and brought him up until he was old enough to be apprenticed to a brick mason to learn the trade. In 1797 his sister also died with yellow fever, and left him without a known relative on earth. The family that adopted him in helpless infancy were Methodists, and brought him up under the restraints of religion. We infer from what we have heard him say that their discipline was rather too exacting, for on one occasion he was so severely reprimanded for a childish misdemeanor that a feeling of despondency came over him at the thought of making any further effort to be good, and he was strongly tempted to end his troubles by drowning himself in a well; but was restrained by an unseen hand. This is the fault of too many parents and guardians; they reprimand the indiscretions of childhood severely, where only instruction and encouragement are necessary.

The family that had him in charge after the epidemic of 1797, in which his sister died, left Philadelphia and lived a short time in Baltimore, and afterward in New York, and about 1800 moved to Charleston, S. C., where he spent most of his youth. We infer from a memorandum he left that his guardian, after putting him to learn a trade, moved elsewhere, as he refers to a correspondence with him on the subject of his religious feelings and purposes. He took no very decided step in religion until he was fifteen years of age, when the South Carolina Conference held an unusual session in Charleston, commencing on the twenty-eighth of December, 1807. The second of January, 1808, was set apart for the ordination service in the famous old Bethel church, six deacons and five elders having been elected to orders. Youthful curiosity, he said, led him to be present. We presume the ordination sermon was preached on the apostolic commission: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature;" for this was the text that was made effectual in his awakening. He then and there resolved, at any cost, to become a true Christian, and immediately wrote to his guardian, who had always set a good example before him, of his purpose. His faithful friend replied very encouragingly, calling his attention to the fact that his parents had been rescued from the dangerous errors of Romanism by Methodist preaching, had united with the Methodist Church, and, after having him dedicated to God in holy baptism, had died in the faith, and then added: "How your parents would rejoice to see you preach that gospel to others which had been effectual in their salvation! Tom, are you willing to be a fool for Christ's sake? You may never be permitted to thump a velvet cushion, but in the highways you may tell to others what the Lord has done for you." From his first awakening he had an impression that if he obtained heartfelt religion he would have to preach the gospel, and the letter of his guardian tended to confirm this impression. He hesitated, and then determined to shun this duty—if possible, to do so without losing his soul. His plan was to seek and obtain religion out of the church, and after that determine what to do about preaching. He said he almost adored the Methodist preachers; often went to the altar for the prayers of the church; was often much encouraged in private prayer, which he loved; read the Bible and the standard works of the church; but for ten long, dreary years adhered to his purpose to be religious out of the church. During this time he had no assurance of his acceptance in Christ, and finally became very despondent about his salvation, and feared he would finally be lost, until, one day at table, he heard a pious lady make some remarks which cheered him with the assurance that there was salvation for him as soon as he abandoned his own terms and surrendered his whole heart to God. He hastened to make the surrender, and obtained a bright, overwhelming evidence of his acceptance in Christ Jesus. He was at once wholly given up to the impulses of his new-born soul. He had already become acquainted with the theory of entire sanctification as taught and explained by Mr. Wesley and other writers of our church, and at once became all athirst for the blessing. In a few days he had believed and entered into the enjoyment of perfect love, and long years after we have heard him say in love-feast that if he should apostatize and finally be lost he would be compelled to acknowledge, to all eternity, that he had obtained the blessing of a clean heart and the enjoyment of perfect love soon after his original justification. At this interesting period Mr. Clinton was living in Augusta, Ga., where he united with the church under the pastorate of the Rev. Samuel Dunwody, who, as soon as it could be done legally, appointed him class-leader, and, upon the recommendation of the society, licensed him to exhort. He now admitted his call to preach, and was soon after, under the presiding eldership of Rev. Samuel K. Hodges, licensed by the Quarterly Conference and recommended for admission into the itinerancy.

At a session of the South Carolina Conference, held in Charleston, commencing January 13, 1820, he was admitted on trial, and the Bishop wanting two volunteer missionaries for the Mississippi Conference, which then included Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, Nicholas McIntyre and Thomas Clinton offered their services and were accepted. They were appointed to the Tombigbee circuit; but the services of Mr. Clinton not being so much needed there, Thomas Griffin, the presiding elder of the Alabama district, sent him, as the junior of Thomas Nixon, to the Alabama circuit. This circuit was in the valley of the Alabama river; was a six weeks' circuit, and six hundred miles round, with daily preaching throughout the week, with occasional night appointments. Many of the settlers having just moved in that winter, before their provision crops were sufficiently matured for use, provisions became very scarce, so that our missionaries sometimes had to make a meal of immature roasting ears, and green pumpkins served up as squash, and their horses had to subsist on the native grasses. But Mr. Clinton was zealous, active and happy in his work. Of the twenty-seven years of his effective ministry, he spent five on large circuits in Alabama, one in southwestern Louisiana, and the remainder of his life was spent in southwestern Mississippi and the eastern parishes of Louisiana. Of the fifty-six years of his ministerial life, eighteen were spent on circuits, five on Wilkinson colored mission, and four on districts. The remaining twenty-nine years he was on the superannuated roll, but most of the time doing active service in the churches within his reach.

In person Mr. Clinton was quite under the size of ordinary men, his standing weight being only about one hundred and ten pounds; but he was compactly built and well proportioned, and in the prime of manhood was capable of great endurance, both in preaching and traveling. He was light complexioned; had an oval face and a long nose, and a countenance, when animated, expressive of great earnestness and indomitable courage. Though small in person, in all the effective years of his ministry he had a clear, round and manly voice. He was a close and successful student, confining himself mainly to what pertained to his calling as a traveling Methodist preacher, and became one of the best theologians in our Conference. In his earlier years his ministry was one of reproof, admonition, warning and earnest exhortation, and many of his sermons were terrible to all moral delinquents and transgressors. In his latter years he dwelt more on the domestic and social duties of Christians, with their heaven-born privileges and glorious prospects. In private life he was very exact and exemplary in attending to every duty, such as private and family prayer, reading the Scriptures, and the instruction and proper government of his children and servants. In January, 1828, he married Miss A. L. Hanna, a well-educated and deeply pious young lady, who was every way well qualified to be the honored companion of an itinerant preacher. She became the mother of ten children. One died in infancy, and five others in early man and womanhood. The last death was that of his youngest living son, who was a very promising young lawyer, of firm, outspoken piety, who was foully murdered by a negro acting as a stealthy highway robber. His only surviving son, Thomas Clinton, now a promising lawyer in New Orleans, informed the writer that he arrived at home in time to be present at the first family worship after the murder of the missing son had been ascertained. At the usual time in the evening the family was assembled, and the venerable patriarch led the devotions. First, in humble and confiding accents, he addressed God as "our Father in heaven," and then plaintively recited the many sore bereavements which he, in his infinite wisdom and goodness, had seen fit to lay on them in the early death of their children; but this last sad event was more afflicting than all that had previously occurred. Their other children had been permitted to die in peace at home, but this dear one, after having been mortally wounded by the lurking assassin and robber, had been left alone to die a lingering death in the woods; but amidst all these sad bereavements they had the infinite satisfaction of knowing that all their dear departed ones had died in Christ, and were now

"Far from a world of grief and sin,
With God eternally shut in."

As he advanced in his prayer his faith grew stronger; he began to see the bright side of the dark cloud; his soul finally became triumphant; his voice gracefully rose to its primitive tones, and flowed all in manly eloquence that moved every heart and moistened every eye. We have repeatedly heard Father Clinton say that he carried in his breast the comforting assurance that all of his children would ultimately be saved. Up to this date there is every prospect that this fond hope will be realized. Of his five children who have died in adult age, one, Rev. George H. Clinton, was an eminent minister, and the other four were all lovely and consistent members of the church many years before their death. The four surviving ones are also members of the church, and we have good hope that they will be well prepared in the end of life's journey to reunite with the family above.

After the lamented death of James, the four surviving children, all of whom had homes of their own elsewhere, thought it unsafe for their parents, in their extreme old age, to remain at the old homestead in St. Helena parish, La., and made arrangements for them to live in the family of their son-in-law, Rev. W. E. Ballard, of the Mississippi Conference, at Beauregard, Miss. They were removed to that place about the last of March, A. D. 1875. While there Father Clinton was active in all the duties of the ministry, so far as his age and feebleness would permit. He often preached with much feeling and power, and his sermons were highly appreciated both at Beauregard and Wesson.

He interested himself in the Sabbath schools, and was a great favorite among the children. He often visited and conversed with his neighbors about their spiritual interests, and seemed intent on doing good in every way he could. He was a cheerful, happy old saint. As the summer advanced he became more feeble, and about the last of July requested to be taken back near his family cemetery, as he felt that his end was near, that he might sleep with his children until the resurrection of the just. He was taken to the residence of Rev. Barnabas Pipkin, his brother-in-law, where, about the first of October, he took his bed, and died on the twenty-eighth of the same month. He had grown to maturity in Christian experience. His whole moral nature had become so transformed into the divine nature that he seemed to belong more to heaven than to earth. He repeatedly gave every assurance that all was bright and inviting before him. Before his death he suffered greatly from the character of his disease, but in paroxysms of acute suffering he was often triumphantly happy. He retained the use of his intellectual faculties to the last, though his speech failed him several days before his death. He seemed to be wrapped up in heavenly visions. On one occasion he was looking upward with intense interest, while his countenance was all aglow with a smile of heavenly origin. One of the family asked him what he was looking at. With a great effort he indistinctly whispered: "Angels." He then threw out his hand as though he was shaking hands with persons around the bed, with a countenance indicating unspeakable joy. Among his last utterances he said to his wife that his peace was perfect. Thus passed triumphantly away one of the most consistent Christians and faithful ministers we have ever known.

J. G. JONES.

CANTON, MISS., Dec. 18, 1875.

Col. J. B. Sale.

BY BISHOP PAINE.

John Burruss Sale was born in Virginia in 1818, and died in Aberdeen, Miss., January 24, 1875. His father, Rev. Alexander Sale—eminent for stern integrity, piety and usefulness—was a Methodist preacher, and removed to the vicinity of Courtland, Ala., in 1820. His mother—sister of the late Rev. John C. Burruss—was remarkable for good sense, piety and devotion to her family. Her noble son combined her taste for neatness, her love of order, and fine colloquial powers, with his father's integrity and contempt for vice, idleness and coarseness. In 1835 he entered LaGrange College, where he acquired a good education. Upon leaving the college he began the study of the law in the office of that eminent jurist, Hon. John J. Ormond, then associated with James E. Saunders, Esq. Having been licensed, he began the practice of law in Moulton, Ala., his partner being his old college classmate, Robert Armstrong, one of the most gifted and promising young men of the South, and whose early death was deeply deplored by all who knew him, as a public calamity. In his boyhood and early manhood young Sale was so vivacious, so full of the sense of the ludicrous, and so mischievous, that his father and friends felt much uneasiness as to his future. But, having resolved to curb himself and become eminent in his profession, he soon commanded the esteem and confidence of the bar and the community to such an extent that in two years his practice became highly remunerative. He had determined to be "learned in the law," and to this end to bend his powerful intellect and devote his whole life. This end he accomplished. His appointment as judge, while yet a young man, shows the estimation in which he was held, while the qualities displayed in discharging the functions of this important office added greatly to his reputation.

In 1842 he married Miss Susan Turner Sykes, daughter of the late Dr. William A. Sykes, of Decatur, Ala.—subsequently of this place. The issue of this marriage was E. Paul Sale, M. D., a son in every respect worthy of his ancestry. After his marriage he resigned his office as judge, and in 1846 removed to Aberdeen, Miss., and resumed the practice of the law in partnership with John Woodwin, Esq., of excellent memory. Afterward he was associated with the late Col. James Phelan, and latterly with Col. William F. Dawd. The peaceful Christian death of his first wife was blest to his conversion; and often, and to the day of his death, he declared to the writer that he knew he was then and there "born again." He seems never to have doubted it. At once he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and continued in it to his death. The deceased married, as his second wife, Miss Nannie Mills, daughter of Col. J. E. Mills, who left two children—Thomas Archibald and Susan Turner. His third wife was Miss Lou. Leigh, daughter of the distinguished Methodist minister, Hezekiah G. Leigh, of Virginia, founder of Randolph Macon College. No issue survives this marriage. His last marriage was to Miss Annie Cornelius, daughter of a well-known and respected lawyer of New Orleans. She and two children—Braxton Bragg and Sallie Cornelius—survive him. Notwithstanding the bereavements in his married relations, his home and its inmates were ever dear to him and worthy of him. No man loved home more. His home, his church and his profession engrossed his time and his heart; not, however, to the exclusion of events involving the great interests of his country and his race; for he was a patriot, and well versed in political history.

During the late civil war he raised a company of volunteer infantry of our best citizens, entered the Confederate army, and was distinguished for his valor in several hard-fought battles. His character and eminent abilities placed him in a high position at Richmond toward the close of the war, the duties of which he filled with credit. Col. Sale was a unique man. His characteristics were patent, and "read of all men." In person he was large, well proportioned, and by nature and habit adapted to rule. His mind was well balanced, richly stored and highly analytical. His knowledge of English language and criticism was remarkable. He combined a stern appearance with the manners of a gentleman. He was truthful, fearless, honest, and true as steel to friendship and duty. He had a contempt for every species of pedantry and false pretense. He had neither time nor inclination to enter into the ordinary exciting topics of the day. With him they were all shams and shows. He detested disorder and dirt. Order was a ruling passion. It was seen in everything—his chirography, his papers, his books, house, lot, and his person. Disorder gave him pain. As a lawyer he had no superior in the State; and while he combined all the qualifications to adorn the highest judicial bench in the Union, he had no aspirations for any office outside of his professional practice. His important law cases were studied profoundly, and his pleadings and documents were perfect. He was always ready and fully equipped. No one who had once encountered him in court felt safe in a second contest. Yet he was always careful to observe the courtesies due to his professional brethren, and what he conceded to others he demanded for himself.

Outside of his profession and the circle of his intimate friends he was often misunderstood to be cold and exacting. Vice and vulgarity, skepticism and dissimulation ever met his prompt rebuke; but that apparently stern, cold and iron nature concealed a warm and genial heart. His attachments were discriminative, but strong and lasting. He was a Methodist by education and conviction; and, though not demonstrative in his piety, he was unswerving in his attachment to the doctrines and polity of his church. He adhered to the type of Methodism held and practiced by his father and his associates in the heroic days of his history. He loved his church; was punctual in his attendance upon its services, and by his counsel and example uniformly and liberally sustained it. It required no persuasion to induce him to contribute his money for its support. Asked or unasked, he always gave it. It was from religious principle, and was not inferior in amount to that given by any of his brethren. The church in Aberdeen, the Conference collections for its widows, orphans and superannuates, and the cause of missions lost heavily by his decease. The country loses one of its most intelligent and best citizens, the bar one of its purest and greatest ornaments; and who can estimate the loss of his most estimable widow and family? The writer must add that he deeply feels a personal bereavement. From boyhood to his grave—as a member of a family circle dear to a memory of over forty years, as a pupil in college, as an intimate and long-tried friend, in social companionship, and as a Christian brother—in all these relations, becoming stronger and dearer by mutual sufferings and sympathies toward the close of his life, we feel most sensibly the departure of our beloved friend. Another of the few remaining links that bind us to the past is sundered; but, we trust and believe, only for "a little while." Gone before, but not lost.

The health of Col. Sale had not been good for some time. At the close of the war he returned to his home, made desolate by the death of his wife and child in his absence, suffering greatly by an injury received in his ankle, and from which he never fully recovered. He was also the victim of rheumatism, contracted in the army, and of dyspepsia—that terrible physical and mental tormentor. So that, notwithstanding his apparent robustness of health, and the immense mental labor he performed, the seeds of mortal disease had been for years secretly but surely subverting his constitution. Indeed this unceasing and worrying mental strain in the duties of his extensive practice no doubt seriously aggravated his complaints and hastened his death. For the last four months he had not been able to do any office work. Still he and his friends were hopeful of his recovery. Never can we forget the evening rides we enjoyed with him last summer and fall, made pleasant by his delightful conversation about old friends and incidents of years long past—about the living and the dead, science, history, war and warriors, peace and politics, religion and [illegible] great hereafter. We were both invalids, and our conversation turned like the meanderings of a stream to various topics, as feeling or fancy suggested. On such occasions he was an exceedingly pleasant companion. It was on these drives for health and mental recreation that we learned more fully his interior character and religious feelings; and the more we knew of him the more we admired and loved him. His decline for several weeks had not been rapid, but a few days before his death, when he complained of chills and great prostration of strength. Yet we could not think of him as a dying man, nor did he look or talk as such. We still hoped. But the fatal hour came on. We talked to him, prayed with him, and finally committed him to his God. No one but his Maker knows how much he suffered during his long confinement; yet he murmured not, but was calm and without fear. Even in his last moments, when every other vital organ was in ruins, his big brain was clear and performed its functions perfectly. It resembled a powerful engine in a steamship foundering at sea. His innate love of order and habit of self-control were even then clearly developed. He wished to have prayer, a few loved ones present, silence, but no formal farewell and no emotional scene around the bed of death. He gave directions as to his funeral arrangements, and when told by his son and physician that he was dying, and asked if he was ready, he calmly and emphatically replied: "I have not put off that to this hour. I have attended to that long before this. All is right there." Thus he lived and died—he lives to die no more.

ABERDEEN, MISS., Feb. 14, 1876.

PRAY SHORTER, BRETHREN—When Dr. Woods and Prof. Stuart were in the prime of their usefulness and fame at Andover, it occurred to the students that the prayers of the distinguished teachers at the seminary devotions were longer than necessary, and how to remedy the difficulty was a subject of much thought and conversation. No one was willing to "bell" either of the old professors. At length a committee of the students was appointed to confer with them. The committee divided itself into halves, and at the same hour one part went to Dr. Woods, told him of the delicacy which the students felt about addressing Prof. Stuart on the length of his long prayers at the chapel, and implored the mediation of Dr. Woods with the professor, to induce him to shorten his petitions. The rest of the committee also conferred with Prof. Stuart to the same effect, with regard to the prayers of Dr. Woods, and besought his intercession with the venerable professor of theology to abbreviate his chapel supplications. On the departure of the committee each professor instantly seized his hat and cane and started for the house of his associate. They met midway, near the old mansion house. Prof. Stuart, his eyes dancing with fun, at once half of the good deacon with the startling information that the students thought his prayers were too long. And immediately Dr. Woods gravely quenched the sparkling light in the Hebrew professor's face by telling him that the students held the same view in regard to his petitions. The two professors continued their walk and meditations. Both came to the conclusion that each of the other had been taken in his own net, and subsequently the chapel prayers were shortened, or else entirely relegated to the students.

THE CONQUERORS OF THE WORLD. The aim of Tieuhis was literally the conquest of the world—as he conceived it—and was nearer its accomplishment in his own life, and in that of two of his descendants, Kubla and Timur, than it had ever been before, or is likely to be again. The empire which he created comprised within its limits probably one-fifth of the whole human race, and extended from the Sea of Okhotsk, in the northeastern extremity of Asia, over the whole breadth of the continent, as far as the Black sea. If some as such ambition seems, it must have its source in some perennial springs of action common to our nature, since it constantly crops up with a certain periodicity in successive ages—fortunately far apart—in races still more widely separated by ethnographic characters and surrounding conditions. Assyrian, Babylonian and Persian, Greek, Roman and French, have each in turn sent forth heroes on this quest for universal empire. With the Romans alone it became the insanity of ambition of a people, who for successive ages sought to be the rulers of the world, and actually founded an imperial sway over Europe, from the Rhine to the Danube, and in Asia and Africa nearly as far as Alexander had penetrated on either continent. The whole of Asia and eastern Europe had not, however, been under the scepter of a single ruler until Timur swooped from his Mongolian steppes, the heir of the first Great Mogul, and encamped in the heart of Hungary and Poland, with a mixed multitude of tribes and nations for his army.—Fortnightly Review.

We are pleading for the union of all good men, and all true, patriotic presses, in the support of pure, honest, intelligent citizens, to work out a revolution in the civil affairs of the States and the nation.—Observer.

For the ills of this life, if there was no silence there would be no music. Ignorance is a spur to knowledge. Darkness is a pavilion for the Almighty; a foil to the polisher to make his shadows.—George MacDonald.

OUR GUEST.

BY HELEN ANGELL GOODWIN.

A lovely little lady
Has come to be our guest;
She found a chamber furnished
For her in every breast.

She cannot speak our language,
She cannot walk our ways;
And while neither purse nor promise
Our constant care repays.

Among the groves of dreamland
She wanders night and day;
Save when the calls of hunger
Or pain she must obey.

She cares not for the silver
And gold in all the banks;
She drinks at life's full fountain
Without a word of thanks.

Is there some good work waiting
These helpless little hands?
Or will the small feet wander
Afar from God's commands?

We cannot shape her future
Or save her life from care;
So we give her to the Giver,
Content to leave her there.

Beyond this world of trial,
Through gates of mortal pain,
A land of purer darkness
And silence yet remains.

And then the Golden City,
Within whose jasper walls
And pearly gates no sunbeam
Or moonbeam ever falls:

For the Lamb of God shall light it
With the glory of his love,
And peace and love eternal
Shall crown a ransomed race.

No sin or pain shall enter
That city undefiled,
God give us grace to reach it,
And take with us our child.

The Second Adventists.

Miles Grant, a leading minister among the Second Adventists, writing in the Methodist, gives the following account of the denomination:

The denomination commenced with the labors of William Miller. He first became interested in the study of prophecy about 1823. In the autumn of 1831 he began to tell his views to the public, and in 1832 a series of articles were published in the Vermont Telegraph making known his understanding of the prophecies. The interest increased very rapidly, and great revivals followed, his preaching and that of others who embraced and proclaimed the same. He believed and advocated that the Savior would come the second time about 1843. Thousands embraced his views and helped to spread them. His chronological conclusions were based on the standard chronology given in the margin of King James' version. His expositions of the prophecies relating to the symbols of Daniel and John, by the main, were not new; but the applying of definite time to the symbols was his special work.

Since his death a careful re-examination has been made of the subject, which resulted in producing a settled conviction in the minds of thousands that we are living in the closing period of the present dispensation.

The main body of the Adventists do not now preach or believe that any definite time of Christ's coming is known by any one; but all of them believe that the great day of the Lord is near, and that the subject should be kept before the people as a healthy stimulus for promoting Christian activity in the very neyard of the event. They believe the present state of the Roman power is such as may be expected just before the second advent of Christ; that the political and moral condition of the world, in connection with the general signs of the times, all indicate that we are living in the last days of the present order of things.

The Second Adventists have about one thousand preachers in the United States, and about one hundred thousand members. Proportionately their numbers are increasing more rapidly than in any other denomination. Most of their ministers are evangelists, and labor without any stated salary, depending for support on the free will offerings of the people. Their creed is the Bible, and Christian character is their test of fellowship. They publish several papers, the leading ones are "the World's Crisis, Boston; the Advent Christian Times, Chicago; Herald of Life, Springfield, Mass.; Messiah's Herald, Boston; and a monthly in Vineland, N. J., called the Bible Banner. These papers are widely scattered.

The church government of the Second Adventists is congregational. Their mode of worship resembles that of the Methodists. They are opposed to church fairs, festivals, bazars, and other such means for raising funds to support the gospel. They are earnest in their religious exercises and advocate a deep-toned piety; but, as in other denominations, all do not live up to what they preach. They are well posted in the sacred Scriptures, and ever ready to give a reason of their hope.

Their Doctrines.—The main body believe that the entire man sleeps between death and resurrection; that after the judgment the wicked will be destroyed, and forever cease to exist as conscious beings; that the saints will inherit the earth after the curse is removed, which will then become "the kingdom of heaven." They believe that after Christ comes and raises the dead, and changes the righteous living, the earth will be made new, filled with the glory of God, and given to the saints for an everlasting inheritance. They believe purity in heart is necessary as a preparation for the kingdom of God.

They believe that baptism should be by immersion, but do not make a test of fellowship. They invite to their communion all Christians of every denomination who may be present, and receive all such into church fellowship whenever they may wish to unite. Christian character is their test of fellowship, rather than any doctrinal points which may be peculiar to themselves.

There have been some branches broken off from the main body of the Adventists, which hold different views and have separate organizations. One branch keeps the seventh-day Sabbath, or Saturday. Another branch holds that the wicked dead will not be raised. Another that there will be probation for a portion of mankind after Christ comes. Another small branch advocates "trine immersion" and other peculiar views.

Besides these branches there is a portion of those who first believed in the views advocated by Mr. Miller that still hold to a belief in the doctrine of the eternal torment of the wicked, and the conscious state of man between death and the resurrection.

The Adventists have several missionaries in the Southern and Western States, also in California, where they have established a number of churches and have had interesting revivals.

During the last two or three years many preachers and lay members in other denominations have become interested in the doctrines held by the Adventists, and are looking at them with much favor. Some of the prominent revivalists on both continents are telling the people that we are near the coming of Christ. The spirit of union on this subject is entering into many Christian hearts, producing happy results.

In consequence of the peculiar views held by some, as already stated, the subject of Christ's personal and speedy coming has been brought into reproach, and thus many good people have been kept from looking at it with any degree of favor, and it has been neglected by those who should have given it their attention and support. There is occasion for rejoicing in the fact that the spirit of Christian union is now prevailing, and that this important subject is being brought prominently before the church.

Nurses and Nursing.

First, it is in things which of themselves appear trifling, and even insignificant, that the comfort of a sick-room is made or marred. For instance, an energetic and amiably-intentioned person places a cold pillow beneath the shoulders of a patient suffering from pneumonia—that is, inflammation of the lungs; a fit of coughing; perhaps a restless night, is the result. Five minutes' warming of the pillow at the fire would have prevented all this mischief, and even conduced to sleep.

Dress, again, is a matter of great importance in a sick-room; and here I must enter a protest against that very common practice of the amateur sick-nurse making a "guy" of herself. I really have seen such startling and unpleasant costumes donned "for the occasion" as seemed to me enough to cause delirium in the patient, if long contemplated—shawls and dressing gowns, and wraps of such an obsolete and awful character, that the shadow of the watcher cast upon the wall by the dim light of the night-lamp must form a horrible "old granny," and be by no means a pleasant reflection to meet a sick man's eyes, as he wakes weak and confused from an opiate-won sleep!

The best dress for a sick-room is plain black—for the simple reason that no stain shows upon it—an old silk is the most economical, but silk rustles, and is therefore objectionable. Black luster is very serviceable—not made long enough to trail, upset chairs, and get under the doctor's feet; and not having hanging sleeves, but fitting close and neat at the wrist, so as to be finished off by nice white linen cuffs. I have seen a hanging sleeve catch on some projecting point of chair or table, and convert a glass of egg-flip into a "douche" externally applied, swamping the patient in a yellow sea, besides sending her into hysterics. A habit of moving quietly about the room, and yet not treading "on tiptoe" and making every board in the floor creak its loudest, is also very advisable; and nothing can be better by way of "chaussure" than those soft, warm felt boots now so common; they both keep the nurse's feet from becoming cold, and make the least possible sound in moving about. Of course the manner of speaking in a sick-room is all-important. Oh, the horror of that dreadful "pig's whisper," which penetrates to the inmost recesses of the room, and wakes the sleeping patient, as surely as the banging of a door!

In some of the most severe diseases, such as cholera and diphtheria, the patient is often intensely conscious of all that is passing around him. The wish to know everything that is said and done is extreme, and nothing excites a patient so much as anything like whispering and mystery. The natural voice, only so much lowered as to be perfectly distinct, is then the proper tone for a sick-room. If silence is needed, let it be complete, and no whispering permitted either in the room, or, worse still, outside the door.

When active personal care of a sick person is undertaken, the finger-nails should be kept very short. I have seen a long nail tear open a blister, and expose a raw surface, causing great pain. For the same reason all removable rings should be taken off; and any ornaments that hang loose and make a jingling noise are best dispensed with, as they irritate and annoy a sensitive patient.

It seems to me that this very unpretending paper will be hardly complete without a few words as to the diet that is best for any one nothing as sick nurse in a long and trying case.

One great point is to let no silly notions of sentiment prevent you making a practice of taking substantial and regular meals; and when you have to sit up all night be sure and have food on hand, and never go more than three hours without eating. Now I am going to say what I know many will highly disapprove of—and it is this: when you are nursing a long and anxious case, and you want to be able to "stay" to the end, avoid all stimulants.—Chambers' Journal.

Lord Clare, who was much opposed to Curran, one day brought a Newfoundland dog upon the bench, and during Curran's speech turned aside and caressed the animal. Curran stopped. "Go on, go on, Mr. Curran," said Lord Clare. "Oh, I beg a thousand pardons," was the rejoinder; "I thought your lordship was in consultation."

Working Tools of Great Men.

It is not the tool that makes the workman, but the trained skill and perseverance of the man himself. It is proverbial that the bad man never yet had a good tool. Some one asked Opie by what wonderful process he mixed his colors. "I mix them with my brains, sir," was his reply. It is the same with every workman who would excel. Ferguson made marvelous things, such as his wooden clock, that accurately measured the hours, by means of a common pen-knife—a tool in everybody's hand; but, then, everybody is not a Ferguson. A pan of water and two thermometers were the tools used by which Dr. Black discovered latent heat; a prism and a sheet of pasteboard enabled Newton to unfold the composition of light and color. An eminent foreign savant once called upon Dr. Wollaston, and requested to be shown over his laboratories, in which science had been enriched by so many important discoveries, when the doctor took him into a little study, and pointing to an old tea tray on the table, containing a few watch glasses, test papers, a small balance and a blow-pipe, said: "There is all the laboratory I have!" Stothard learned the art of combining colors by closely studying butterflies' wings; he would often say that no one knew what he owed to these tiny insects. A burned stick and a barn door served Wilkie in lieu of a pencil and canvas. Bewick first practiced drawing on the cottage walls of his native village, which he covered with chalk; and Benjamin West made his first brushes out of the cat's tail. Franklin first robbed the thunder cloud of its lightning by means of a kite made with two cross sticks and a silk handkerchief; Watt his first model of the condensing steam engine out of an anatomist's old syringe. Clifford worked his first problem in mathematics, when a cobbler's apprentice, upon a small scrap of leather, which he beat smooth for the purpose; while Rittenhouse, the astronomer, first calculated an eclipse on his plow handle.

A SHARP REBUKE.—The Earl of Chesterfield was called the first gentleman of his age. It was a cardinal point of etiquette with him never to exhibit ill temper in company, or to be remiss in courtesy to any guest. But he was sometimes sorely tried by the rude and awkward manners of his son, Philip Stanhope, whom he tried in vain to educate to gentlemanly habits.

Philip was a great glutton, and could not restrain his appetite, even in company. On one occasion, when his father had invited a large number of titled guests, an elegant entertainment was provided. One of the rarer dishes was a platter of baked gooseberries, snowed over with rich cream. Philip had been helped bountifully by Lady Chesterfield, who knew his weakness. But when the servant was taking up the dish in clearing the table, Philip beckoned to him, and, taking it into his hand, began to tap up greedily the rich cream. Lord Chesterfield was disgusted, but without a change of face or voice to indicate the tempest of rage within, said in a calm tone to his servant:

"John, why do you not fetch a strop and razor—you see your master is going to starve himself?"

Philip's greediness was checked at that meal.

A balloon, which made a scientific ascent from Paris last month, suddenly fell to the ground when it had reached a height of two hundred and thirty meters. All the occupants of the car—eight in number—were more or less seriously injured, but no one was killed. The balloon fell in a market garden at Vincennes, which fortunately had been freshly dug up. It is said that the accident was due to the silk of the balloon being spoiled by snow and the hard frost.

The late Dr. Erskine, one of the ornaments of the Scottish National Church, was a clergyman of deep and earnest piety. One day, when something had occurred to irritate him, and to put him into so violent a passion that language seemed to be denied him for the time, Christianity putting a curb on the refractory tongue, the beadle rather archly queried: "Would an oath relieve ye, sir?"

Mr. Spurgeon, confessing an inability to manage a small church, says: "They are like those canoes on the Thames—you must not sit this way or the other, or do this thing or that thing, lest you should be upset. I happen to have a church like a big steamboat, and, whether I walk here or there, my weight will not upset it."

Action has its claims. Duty, done in hard and difficult ways, tests and proves the life that now is. And yet there is a time when the highest duty is to be still—to withdraw from the throng, to exert solitude, and invite the thoughts which are uttered by the still, small voice.

When a Gerkins man walked to Dumfries, in the long ago, to see a man hung, and the prisoner was respited, the disgusted traveler sat down in accurer and hoarsely inquired if his country was drifting back to barbarism.

Boswell, dining one day with Dr. Johnson, asked him if he did not think that a good cook was more essential to the community than a good poet. "I don't suppose," said the doctor, "that there's a dog in town but what thinks so."

During the session of a county court in the interior a witness was asked if he was not a husbandman, when he coolly replied, amidst the laughter of the court: "No, sir, I's not married."

We cannot, dare not, ask God to love a saint better than he does—even for one's self it is an ungospel prayer—infinite cannot be added to.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Unitarian church at Brookfield, Mass., has substituted water for wine at the administration of the Lord's Supper.

—According to their new Year-Book the Unitarians have 362 churches—215 with pastors, 147 without—and 144 ministers—218 settled and 182 unsettled.

—Mrs. Turner, of Liverpool, has sent a donation to the South American Missionary Society of £2,000, in memory of her late husband, Mr. Charles Turner.

—From fifteen to twenty of the middle class in Yale Seminary are expecting to spend the summer vacation of 1875 (four months) in preaching on the frontier.

—The Woman's Baptist Missionary Society of the East has received $8,575 63 contributions during the quarter. Between sixty and seventy mission bands are connected with it and in successful operation. Miss Harnell, of the foreign field, reported ten or twelve conversions in her school, and fifteen or twenty inquirers.

—The Jews in New York are agitating the subject of a Hebrew college. A meeting was held January 24, and a committee was appointed to consider the matter. It is not likely that a general college will be established—the Jews being satisfied with the institutions already in existence so far as the ordinary branches of learning are concerned—but one whose specialty shall be Hebrew.

—The Episcopalians of Philadelphia seem to contemplate a practical but thorough revolution in their church work. They have formed an association with a view to making all the seats in the churches free, and abandon the old practice of selling and renting pews. They design having regular weekly collections in the churches for the support of the preaching of the gospel and the benevolent work of the churches.

—The Baptist statistics for the year have been published in their Year-Book, just out. They foot up a total membership of 1,815,300, showing an apparent increase in the year of 51,129. But 31,451 members included in anti-mission associations have been dropped, so that it is claimed that the real increase is 35,583. One-third of the associations failed to report, so that their members are computed from last year's minutes.

—We regret to record the death, in Bombay, of Dr. Wilson, the patriarch of the Christian missionaries in India, where he had labored for nearly fifty years. In connection with the Scotch missions he did more than any other man in India for education. He was a man of great ability, vast information, no common culture, and boundless enthusiasm in his work. The Bombay University examinations have been postponed out of respect to his memory.

—In Montreal there are three Baptist churches. The First has called to its pastorate Mr. Burton, of London, England. It has a fine, central location. The present building was opened in January, 1842. It has recently been reconstructed, etc., at a cost of about $7,000. This was the only Baptist church in the city up to 1859, at which time a colony went out and formed the St. Catherine Street church, which has now a fine stone edifice, costing about $70,000.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL MISSION WORK AT MADRAS.—The Madras Standard, India, of October 18, has an interesting report of the Methodist Episcopal mission work of that section, under the charge of the Rev. C. P. Hard. The work for the quarter then closing indicated very encouraging progress. Thirty-five persons had been admitted to full membership, and forty men and twenty women received on probation during the quarter.

—An English exchange says: There is a church in Kobe, Japan, the standard of admission to which is probably quite as high as that of any church in any Christian land. Of the twenty male members of this church, thirteen go out as lay preachers to six stations, every week, and four more every month. Every man not prevented by age or other infirmity is pledged to active lay effort, at his own charges, and this pledge is made a condition of admission to membership.

—An interesting service held by Mrs. Wall, the wife of Mr. Wall, the English Baptist missionary at Rome, is the beggars' meeting. It is held weekly in a hired room in the Trastevere. A meal of bread is provided for them, and the opportunity is used to inform them about the gospel. Rome has always abounded with beggars, whose condition is now the more pitiable as the relief afforded by the convents has ceased, and the government, which suppressed these establishments, does nothing for the poor.

—English papers give an account of a very promising mission work established by Rev. John Brawn in a group of islands lying a short distance east of New Guinea, of which New Britain is the most prominent. The mission is among a barbarous and utterly heathen people, and the missionaries are converted Fijians and Samoans. The account of the initial trip of the head missionary, with his native assistants, some ten or twelve in number, in the missionary ship John Wesley, last summer, is full of interest.

MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.—The Chinese Recorder gives a list of 150 missionaries in that country stationed at 11 different points. One missionary has been in the field 38 years, another 31, and another 30; the others for shorter terms. In Japan there are 60 Protestant missionaries at 7 stations. Of the whole number, 10 are ordained, 4 are physicians and 52 are women. In Siam there are 21 missionaries at 4 stations. Of the 136 missionaries in China, 240 are from the United States, 191 from Great Britain and 32 from Germany; of the 100 in Japan, 76 are from the United States and 24 from Great Britain. All the Protestant missionaries in Siam are from this country.

Our Young People.

DOTTY AND GRANDPA.

BY L. G. WARNER.

Grandpa, grandpa dear,
I've come to sit on your knee;
Dolly's broken her arm, and Kitty's
Too sleepy to play with me.

Boyer's gone off with Charley;
It's tiresome trying to read—
Such slow work spelling out letters,
Oh, I'm very tired indeed!

Nobody's like you, grandpa,
And there's no place like your knee
For a little girl that's tired,
To curl up snug and warm.

How soft your hair is, grandpa!
I'll stroke it and smooth it so;
And if you've the least little needle in it
It will be sure to go.

Sister Nelly thinks her lover
So fine with his jet-black hair;
But a blue-eyes every month out,
I should think she would really care.

And the dear little funny wrinkles
That seem to begin round your eyes—
His face is so smooth and solemn
And then you are much more wise.

You tell me such beautiful stories,
And sing me such nice songs too!
Why, really and truly, grandpa,
I believe I'm all love with you.

There, now, I would like a story—
The Little Folks in the Wood
And you never would know I was sleepy,
I'll be so quiet and good).

House-Cleaning Under the Sea.

BY OLIVE THORNE.

There's a curious little fellow living in the sea, whose chief business seems to be house-cleaning. It is no affair of brooms and dusters, Balsominers and paper hangers; he is completely equipped for the work with a pair of scrubbing-brushes. Water, of course, is always ready to his hand, his house is just big enough to cover him, and nearly every moment that he is not occupied in getting his dinner he is busily engaged in scrubbing his shell house.

His brushes never get out of the way, for they are fastened to him—in fact they are at the ends of his first pair of legs. Into every crunny and angle, under and over, inside and outside his house, he vigorously thrusts them, taking off every particle of dirt, and keeping it in a state of beautiful polish.

These scrubbing legs are pinions affairs. Each one is covered with hairs standing out all round, like the bristles on a bottle-brush, and at the end of each is a sort of hand, or pair of pinchers, which is used to pick off any object which the brushes will not remove. When his house is all in perfect order he turns his attention to his legs and his long antennæ, and never rests till each one is clean and ready for use. This is done not by scrubbing-brushes, but by his own jaws.

This neat little fellow is a crown; and perhaps you have seen some of his relatives on the table with their tails curled up under their bodies, and turned of a bright red color. But you must not think red is his color when in life. Lobsters, crabs and other shelly creatures dress themselves in red for the table, though in life they content themselves with modest grays and browns. The crown when alive is translucent; that is, the light shines through him, so that sometimes it seems as if he were lighted up inside, like a lantern. Then his shell house—so red when cooked—is a pretty sort of greenish gray color, with stripes of black and buff, and bits of shining white, while his legs are ornamented with bands of blue and gold color. His tail, which is also beautifully colored, consists of plates that slide back and forth over each other, and when spread out make a broad and strong sort of fan. They are edged and dotted with pale red and brown, and have tiny red stars scattered over them. In fact there is hardly a creature of the sea where there are so many strange objects more delicately and beautifully dressed than the little three or four-inched prawn.

When at home in the ocean he delights in dark, deep holes to live in, and when brought up from these rocks his colors are seen in all their beauty, but they are too delicate to endure the vulgar light of day. So, although he is an interesting little fellow to have in an aquarium, his bright colors all fade out, and he looks so much like a shadow gliding about that he has been compared to a ghost.

When a prawn is seen in the evening by candle light his great eyes, which stand up on top of his head, look like balls of fire, as you have perhaps seen the eyes of a cat.

He's an inquisitive little fellow, and very much interested in everything that is going on. If we watch his ways with interest he does the same by us, and no doubt he wonders a great deal what sort of monsters we are. He will dart up to the top of the water and stay there a long time, staring at one, but if a slight movement is made toward him slap goes his broad tail, and back he springs out of sight, into some quiet nook, in an instant, or he will seize hold of some weed at the bottom of the aquarium, and gaze curiously to see what the monster will do next.

Jerking himself backward is a favorite movement of his, and he does it by means of his strong, fan-like tail. When he desires to retire suddenly he bends a joint in his body and brings his tail up with a sharp slap on the water, which, of course, sends him quickly back.

He can walk, however, if he likes; indeed he is particularly well provided with legs; he would not need more if he was made to spend his life on foot. Five pairs he uses for use, and five pairs for show, called false legs. He can walk about on the ten useful legs, and paddle about in the water when not in a hurry with the ten false ones, which are behind the others.

The first pair of feet are the scrubbing-brushes I told you about, and the second pair he uses to seize his food. Very droll it is to see him eat. He is fed with meat—no "green stuff" for him—and as soon as he sees it coming toward him he snatches for it with his hands, or pinchers, jerks off the part he does not want and throws it away, then proceeds to pick out the dainty bits he prefers.

This innocent, harmless little fellow has, however, one weapon. A formidable-looking one it is too, being a broad, still, two-edged sword, with deep teeth in the sides, and held straight out before his head, as though in warning to every one to look out for himself. Those who have kept him for years in aquariums, and closely studied his ways, say that the prawn is never seen to use this weapon, though it is so sharp and looks so dangerous.

The prawn has a sort of cousin—the shrimp, which is much liked for eating, especially in England, where it is found in crowds on the sand near shore. It is caught by a sort of dredge drawn by a horse a little way out in the water. This little fellow has a curious fashion of throwing the sand up in a little shower around him, and sinking into it, where he cannot be seen. He does it by means of his false feet, which wave back and forth, and brush up the fine sand, while he sinks into the hole thus made. When the sand falls back it hides him.

Prawns and shrimps grow like other little fellows who wear armor—by shedding their skin. This comes off so perfect that it is a most beautiful and delicate object to look at as it floats about in the water, and equally interesting in a microscope. Christian Union.

Legends and Superstitions.

Traditions, legends and superstitions, closely linked as they often are, remain very distinct in themselves and in their influence. A tradition may be true; a legend is not only untrue, but improbable; and a superstition is a foolish belief in the supernatural and impossible. The first two are apt to be full of interest and charm; the last is always a blight wherever it may settle. The world abounds in wild and marvelous stories that are believed implicitly by the uneducated. For instance, in almost every country there are legends about long sleepers. According to them, Charlemagne sleeps in Hess, seated on his throne, with crown on head and sword in hand, waiting till Antichrist shall come; the seven youths of Ephesus, who refused to bow down to the idol of the Emperor Decius, sleep on, their faces fresh as roses, till the resurrection day; Epimenides slept fifty-seven years; a Christian priest sleeps in St. Sophia till the Turk shall be cast out; three Bohemian miners sleep in the heart of the Kuttenburg; and Rip Van Winkle slept twenty years in the Kaatskills. In the great hills of Thuringia still sleep Frederic Barbarossa and his six knights. A shepherd once penetrated into a long, winding cave in the heart of the mountain, and there found the seven, all asleep, the Emperor's red beard having grown through the marble table. The noise of footsteps awakened him, and he asked:

"Do the ravens still fly over the mountains?"

"Yes," replied the shepherd, "they do."

"Then we must sleep another hundred years," answered the monarch, and turned again to rest.

In Switzerland Tell's William Tell's sleep in a cave. A brave boy once crept in.

"What o'clock is it?" asked the third Tell.

"Noon," replied the lad.

"Oh, dear! the time has not yet come," said Tell, and he lay down again.

There are many superstitions about the man in the moon; and almost every country in the world has a story about him. In New England the nurses tell the children that this man was found by Moses gathering sticks on a Sabbath, and that, for being so wicked, he was doomed to rest in the moon till the last day.

"If you don't believe it," they say, "look in the Bible. It is all told in the fifteenth chapter of Numbers."

The Germans have the tale this way: Ages ago there went one Sunday morning an old man into the forest, to cut wood. When he had made a bundle he slung it on his staff, cast it over his shoulder, and started for home. On his way he met a minister, all in his bands and robes, who asked him:

"Don't you know, my friend, that it is Sunday on earth, when all must rest from their labors?"

"Sunday on earth, or Monday in heaven, it is all one to me," laughed the woodman.

"Then bear your burden forever," said the priest; "and as you value not Sunday on earth you shall have Monday in heaven till the great day."

Thereupon the speaker vanished, and the man was caught up, with cane and faggots, into the moon, where you can see him any clear night.

In Norway they think they see both a man and a woman, and the story goes that the former threw brambles at people going to church, and the latter made butter on Sundays. In the clear cold nights of winter they will point out the man carrying his bundle of thorns and the woman her butter-tub. N. S. Dodge.

TARTU ORACLE.—Between twenty and thirty years ago three little English boys were amusing themselves together in a wood-lodge one summer afternoon. Suddenly one of them looked grave, and left off playing. "I have forgotten something," he said. "I forgot to say my prayers this morning; you must wait for me." He went quietly into a corner of the place they were in, knelt down, and reverently repeated his morning prayer. Then he returned to the others, and was soon merrily engaged in play again. This brave boy grew up to be a brave man. He was the noted Capt. Hammond. He was a faithful servant to his earthly sovereign, but, better still, a good soldier of Jesus Christ never ashamed of his service.—The Children's Friend.

How to Do It.

The psalmist seems to be talking to himself when he says: "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee." It was the stronger part of his nature endeavoring to rally and brace up the weaker. It is as if there were in us a double self, and that we have the power to stand out of ourselves, so as to survey our infirmities, and to deliver the needed reproof and exhortation.

The burden has many aspects, such as worldly care, affliction, Christian duty and responsibility, and, above all, the load of sin. It requires little skill to analyze the nature of the burden. This is but too manifest. The real difficulty is how to make God our burden-bearer, how to do that which we would do, so that the heart may find relief. Whether the privilege be opened to us by others, or urged by our own better spiritual natures, the perplexity is the same. It often takes a lifetime of sorrow and unrest to reach the blessed secret, and to learn the art of reposing in God.

We may attain to it, in some degree at least, by considering the character of God. He is an awful being, "glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders." But if we look through the medium of the atonement, he is gracious, merciful, long suffering. "He knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust." He is filled with tenderness and compassion. "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." Christ unfolds the character of God to his disciples with inimitable beauty. He is "your heavenly Father," most considerate and beneficent. To the penitent and trustful soul there is a wonderful fullness of condescension and compassion. And his wisdom, power and goodness are active in providence. As a faithful Creator he careth for us. His love is assured in Christ. The gift of the Son is the expression and measure of God's love to the world. With such views of God the humble, submissive heart may well regret to him the cares that overwhelm it.

Let us go another step and appropriate the promises. Think of such as these: "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest." "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." To enjoy the sunshine and to be warmed by it we must place ourselves under its beams. So it is in regard to the promises. We must get on promised ground. Promises are directed to certain characters, conditions and experiences, to the humble, contrite. Look at the beatitudes. The blessed ones are they that mourn, the poor in spirit, the meek, those that hunger and thirst after righteousness. We must place ourselves within the range of these rays of consolation. We must make them personal, write our own names in them, and thus bring them to us. "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want." "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." This is the right of every penitent sinner, of every perplexed and sorrowing disciple, to put his own name in the promise, as if God mercifully intended to speak to him and to call him out from the multitude. The act of casting our burden upon the Lord is largely in this act of personal appropriation of the promises, hearing in them the voice of God directed to us, and appealing to our acceptance as the ones for whom they were intended. In great sorrow and affliction we too often regard the promises as general in their character, or we shrink from the appropriation as savoring of presumption. But let us remember that the divine compassion has made them for penitent sinners, and that God has opened them as wells of consolation to the weary and burdened pilgrim in this desert land.

Another measure of relief to burdened souls is in seeking the direct assistance of the Holy Ghost. He is with good reason called the Comforter. In all of his offices the end is comfort. When he awakens, when he reproves, when he strives, the purpose is to lead us to the God of all consolation. In the conversion of the soul, in the assurance of pardon and sonship, and in the work of a mature sanctification, there is comfort. And in affliction especially it is the Spirit that helpeth our infirmities. Whatever the burden, whether of sin or of earthly trials and afflictions, the Holy Ghost is the comforter. He is divinely wise and skillful, and knows how and where to apply the healing balm. "How much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him." The promise of Christ to his sorrowing disciples, and to us as well, was: "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another comforter, that he may abide with you forever." The comfort of the Holy Ghost is the want of sorrowing and bereaved hearts. It is the great want of penitent seekers who are groaning for assurance of salvation from sin.

The thoughts of troubled souls, however, must center on Christ. He is a merciful and faithful high priest, and "tempted in all points like as we are." Sin excepted, he was made like unto his brethren. "He is able to succor those that are tempted, because he himself was tempted." His sympathy with human sorrow, and his power to sustain us under it, were exhibited at the grave of Lazarus. He was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, that he might minister comfort to the afflicted. Christ is able and willing to take our burdens of trouble and carry them for us. And as the sin-bearer—the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world—he offers relief to the penitent. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." The secret is in coming, and coming is simply believing. Faith in him as the propitiation for sin—for our sin—as the atoning sacrifice, as having borne our sins in his own body on the tree, will take away the burden of guilt and condemnation. Bunyan's pilgrim lost his burden at the foot of the cross, and it is here that every sinner must cast his burden upon the Lord.

Passing Events.

The most exciting topic of late in New Orleans has been the impeachment of W. P. Kellogg, de facto Governor of Louisiana. The vote on his impeachment in the House of Representatives was taken on Monday, the twenty-eighth of February, and a committee immediately proceeded to the Senate to notify that body of its action. The Picayune, in the following paragraph, tells how the Senate disposed of the matter:

When the debate in the House had been closed, the majority report adopted, and a committee appointed to go before the bar of the Senate and notify that body of the impeachment of Gov. Kellogg, the second act of the farce began with the second scene. The announcement of the House's action having been duly made at the bar of the Senate, that body resolved itself immediately into a court of impeachment. The constitution provides that the chief justice shall preside over such court, and by some more fortuity of chance or calculation the chief justice was on hand, with Justice Talliferro to swear him in. The court of impeachment having been duly organized, it might have been supposed that at least the forms of a trial would be gone through with. No such thing; the very first thing the Republican senators, acting in the capacity of judges, did was to offer an order setting forth that the proceedings of the House were irregular; that no specific charges had been made, and that no committee of managers on the part of the House had put in an appearance. Subsequently a committee of gentlemen, bearing credentials properly authenticated by Speaker Estilette, did appear, and then the objection was raised and sustained that this committee was not in fact a committee of managers, and had no right to be heard. The minority in the Senate was not allowed in a single instance to argue the questions of law and fact involved. The case was hurried through, and the Governor declared acquitted of charges which the Senate had never heard and which the House was not allowed an opportunity to prefer. The Conservative senators attempted to enter protests against these summary proceedings, and were denied the privilege of doing so. So it ended for the present. We have called these proceedings a farce. Upon second thought we recall the term, and declare them a tragedy. Tear off the masks from the actors' faces, and you will see the hideous features of partisan greed and corruption, unrelieved by a single gleam of justice.

Tuesday was the day of the usual Carnival follies and excitement. The city was filled with strangers and visitors from all quarters. There was the grand procession of Rex at midday, and the famous Mystick Krewe at night, with balls, dancing and revelry ad libitum, lasting into the early hours of Wednesday. It was organized dissipation on a gigantic scale, a wild orgasm of reckless jollity and extravagance, and a most costly and demoralizing expedient to infuse a momentary vitality into the channels of stagnate trade. The money spent in this madness would have been more wisely appropriated if given to build the Texas railroad. Will our people ever awake to the true interests of this decaying city?

The Southern States Agricultural and Industrial Exposition was opened at the Fair Grounds on Saturday, February 26, Governor Hendricks, of Indiana, delivering on the occasion a very able and instructive address. As usual, the chief features of the exposition are such as no Christian man can countenance. The exposition is open on Sunday, the dancing platform is prominent, and pigeon-shooting and horse-racing are the popular spectacles. Alas for New Orleans and for Louisiana! morals and religion go for nothing. The laws of God are defied, and Christian principle and opinion are not worth respecting. It only remains for those who have any conscience for the observance of the Sabbath, and who cannot consent to be partakers in other men's sins, that they give the exposition a wide berth. If pigeon-shooting, horse-racing, promiscuous dancing and Sabbath desecration are necessary to the promotion of agriculture and industry, it were better to let them dwindle.

How these immoral and ungodly expedients can help our agricultural and industrial interests will ever be a mystery to the unsophisticated. Radical rule is bad enough, and is a calamity and a blight well-nigh ruinous; but the misfortunes and poverty of the State are largely due to our own folly and ungodliness. At a time when sobriety, industry and Christian virtue and integrity need to be fostered, the tendency would seem to be to cast off all restraint, and to encourage profligacy and vice. May God have mercy upon the country and save the people!

Watchfulness.

The watchfulness which Christ so often enjoins upon his disciples is not that vigilance which is aroused by a sudden and transient sense of danger. An occasional sense of spiritual peril, and a consequent alertness of all the powers of the soul in guarding against the impending evil, may consist with habitual "ease in Zion" and an almost uniform state of carnal security. There are those who, even in the "judgment of charity," cannot be called watchful Christians, who are sometimes alarmed at their evident jeopardy, and whose vigilance at such times is as wakeful as their fears are intense. But the watchfulness born of sudden fear passes away with the circumstance that evoked it, and, folding their hands again, they fall asleep at their post.

Christian watchfulness is that gracious habit by which our souls stand on perpetual guard against all the onsets of the powers of darkness, all the seductive influences of this wicked world, and all "carnal desires of the flesh." The habit can be superinduced upon our incautious souls only by devout meditation upon the preciousness of the interests imperilled by heedlessness, and the multiform and constantly threatening dangers of our Christian pilgrimage. Its nature is forcibly illustrated by what is the most prominent characteristic of the American Indian. From boyhood he finds himself to be in constant peril from wild beasts, and his not less savage foes. He knows that dangers attend him all through life. The venomous rattlesnake may be coiled immediately in his path; the panther may be hidden in the foliage of the tree under which he must pass; bloodthirsty wolves may be following fast upon his track; hidden by any rock or hillock, an enemy may be adjusting the poisoned arrow to the bow-string, or leveling the deadly rifle at his heart. He lives and moves in the midst of perils, until every sense is a wakeful sentinel. The slightest noise arrests his attention. Nothing that moves within the range of his vision escapes his eye. He indulges in no reverie as he walks or sits. He is vigilant without any conscious effort to be so. Watchfulness is his habitual state. It would require the stimulus of multiplied alarms to render civilized men half so wary; and yet the Indian, almost a stranger to the emotion of fear, is never off his guard. This habitual watchfulness has become "second nature" with him; because the dangers against which it is his protection have threatened him every day and every hour.

But the dangers against which he guards himself with such unremitting caution are infinitely less numerous and appalling than those which beset the pathway of the soul from earth to heaven. Malignant and wily spirits of darkness find access to our minds and hearts, and revel in suggesting evil thoughts, and exciting unholy desires and passions in our souls. We are in the midst of a world in revolt against God, and whose influence upon us is a perpetual solicitation to sin. Our moral natures have been so disordered by inherited evil that even the divinely implanted affections have been converted into snares. Our self-love is in constant danger of degenerating into selfishness. Appetites and passions which are necessary to the completeness of human nature, and which, under the control of conscience, are its beauty and strength, easily gain the ascendency over principle, and debilitate and destroy character.

Spiritual foes assail us from every direction, through every faculty of mind and every affection of heart; and the watchfulness that befits our circumstances is a habit answering in its ceaseless vigilance to our incessant spiritual danger. The effect which our devotion to business or domestic claims is having upon our devotion to God demands attention. The influence that worldly-minded associates are exerting upon our habits of thought and feeling requires scrutiny. To what extent our innocent amusements are affecting our spirituality needs to be prayerfully inquired into. Our smoldering passions, our kindling desires, our errant thoughts, our traitorous imaginations, must all be perpetually guarded. Knowing our peril, the Master has warned us: "I say unto all, Watch!"—Southern Christian Advocate.

Independent African Methodism.

Under this heading Zion's Herald publishes a communication from the Rev. B. F. Tanner, D. D., editor of the Christian Recorder, of Philadelphia, organ of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, and of course he is a colored man. "Independent," as used by him, indicates that the churches are composed of colored men only. There are three distinct branches of Independent African Methodists—the African Methodist Episcopal Church, the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, and the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church. Besides, there are, here and there, independent congregations not connected with any one of these churches.

The African Methodist Episcopal Church was formally organized in Philadelphia during the month of April, 1816.

The African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church is of later origin, a few years only—began in the city of New York. The reason why they did not and do not go with the African Methodist Episcopal Church was and is, belief in a third ordination. But since 1868 they allow their chief pastors to be called Bishops, and authorize a form of installing but not of ordaining them—electing them for four years only.

Of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church Dr. Tanner writes:

"It was organized in Clarksville, Tenn., in 1872 (Jackson, Tenn., in 1870,) by the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in conformity to a resolution passed at their previous General Conference. It is but just to say that in sending Hagar away they were humane enough to give her bread and a bottle of water, in the shape of a well-accredited episcopacy, a hymn-book, a discipline, a catechism, and a weekly paper—the Christian Index. And title deeds to the church property which they had used as members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.) We can almost imagine we can get how the shouts old man Allen would raise, sent up had similar humanity been shown at his moral expulsion from home into a more than the wilderness of Bucks Co.

"We take pleasure in noting the life this church manifests. Its four Bishops are certainly men of energy, and, judging from appearances, are doing a fine work among the people to whom they are limited by organic law!"

We have italicised a sentence to bring out more clearly the contrast drawn by Dr. Tanner; and, to show it still more clearly, we quote a passage from his account of the origin of the African Methodist Episcopal Church:

"As early as November, 1787, the colored people of the Quaker city, in conventional form—after having considered 'the evils under which they labored, arising from the unkind treatment of their white brethren, who considered them a nuisance in the house of worship'—decided upon a separate service. In their attempt to carry out this decision they were greatly opposed by the officers of the Methodist Episcopal Church; and, being threatened with expulsion if they did not surrender the subscription books they had been using to procure means with which to build themselves a house, they resigned, 'being fully satisfied that they should be treated without mercy.' In six years they esteemed themselves 'outcasts.' In 1793 Richard Allen, their leader, purchased a blacksmith's shop, and, having removed it to his own property, converted it into a church, where the colored Methodists of the city usually worshiped; and where, in 1816, the African Methodist Episcopal Church was formally organized by the election of this heroic man as its first Bishop."

No comment is necessary after this contrast—nothing but an expression of surprise that the enemies of Southern Methodism should have ventured to criticise and condemn, as they have often done, the course adopted at the organization of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church. Those enemies—Northern Methodists certainly must have forgotten, or never have known, the facts which led to the organization of the African Methodist Episcopal Church in Philadelphia.

Southern Methodists feel a lively and increasing interest in "Independent African Methodism," and would rejoice to see its several branches unite in one church.—Western Methodist.

Creditable.

Under this heading the Southern Christian Advocate tells how the infamous and notorious Victoria Woodhull was received by the people of Macon, Ga. We have been informed that fifteen hundred people attended her Sunday night lecture in New Orleans. All honor to the Telegraph and Messenger. We wish our secular papers everywhere were as discriminating, and as faithful to the moral welfare of the country. The Southern says:

It was recently announced that the notorious Victoria Woodhull—placarded on showy posters, "Queen of the Rostrum"—would lecture in this city on a certain night. A day was advertised for the sale of reserved seats; but, to the credit of our people of all classes, not a single application for a ticket was made. The prospect was not inviting, so the "queen" canceled the engagement and spared so old fogy a community the infliction of her presence. It affords us no little satisfaction to chronicle this fact to the honor of Macon, especially as we learn that in several cities of the South this woman of infamous notoriety has been encouraged in her mission by large audiences. It will be a sad day for the South when its people can listen with relish to such monstrous social heresies as this libel upon her sex is said to advocate; it would be an unspeakable calamity for her to secure among us any tolerance of the foul and impious principles of which she is said to be the devotee and propagandist.

Very many of our people, especially in the larger cities, rely wholly upon the judgment of the secular press as to the entertainments they may attend with propriety; and hence a very grave responsibility at this point, not always appreciated, attaches to its editors. While we may not expect the secular papers to limit their indorsement and commendation of "amusements," etc., to such only as are consistent with a religious life, we have the right to demand, in the name of all that is pure and decent in the homes they enter, that, if they do not denounce, they shall at least not countenance such flagrant assaults upon domestic peace and social purity as this Woodhull lecturing involves. The encouragement of such a woman with such a mission, by a journal which enjoys the patronage of decent people, is a crime against society which justly invokes unmeasured reprobation. It gives us sincere pleasure, in this connection, to express our belief that Macon is largely indebted for the good name it has made in this matter to the high-toned course pursued by its daily paper, the Telegraph and Messenger. Many were uninformed as to the character and doctrines of this "Queen of the Rostrum," and if their morning paper had given her the indorsement which she received from the press of some other cities they would perhaps have gratified the idle curiosity to "hear a woman speak." As it was, the advice to "let her severely alone" was so unanimously followed as to furnish the first instance in the history of the city of an advertised "show" without a single application for a seat.

Where is the Line?

There ought to be, says the Richmond Christian Advocate, a well-marked line between church people and worldly people. Where is it? Who can trace it? In the Bible we know it is plainly drawn; but outside of that good book it is hard to find. We admit that now and then a man or woman may be found in our churches between whom and the world a clear and well-marked line of separation is drawn; but such persons are like angels' visits—they don't cross your path very often, or you don't cross theirs. Take the average professor of religion anywhere, and say in what does he differ from the average man of the world. How will you tell that one is in the church and the other is not but by being told that Mr. A. has his name on the church roll? If you should meet the two at a party, or a ball, or a fair, or a circus, or an opera, or a theater, by what sign could you tell the saint from the sinner? Could you tell the difference in dress? Nay, verily. By the conversation? by the deportment? Nay, verily. If you should look into the manner of living, of spending time, of using all those golden hours that will one day assume for us all their real value, could you tell the difference? Try trade; go on 'change—do business of any kind; go drive bargains, or see them driven, by church men and worldly men. Can you approach and draw the line and say: This is God's man—that is the world's man? Try the world of fashion; go stand by the gay crowd as it rushes by, and note, if you can, the people who are heaven-bound. Can you tell who they are? Try again; don't be discouraged—you may yet find the line. Go out and ask help for a good cause; make the plea as strong as you can; let the case you present strike right to the heart. If there be such an organ in the breast of the listener; and when you have finished your round, and your weary feet have borne you home, can you tell where the line is as you look over your list? Do you see the line? Can you tell by the giving who is on the Lord's side of the line? Are you discouraged? Never mind, we will try again. Let us go into the church. Sit where you can see the worshipers as they enter. Where is the line? Have you found it? Did all flounce down alike? Did they all whisper and titter? Did they all turn and stare at every new comer? Did they fidget, and cross over, and pass bouquets in the gallery? Did they do their singing by proxy, and stand or sit as mute as mice while God was being praised for them? Have you found the line? How many can you place on the Lord's side of it? Bewildered, are you? Well, we must try again, but not now. [illegible] search for the line has been w[illegible] fatiguing, but there is a line betwe[illegible] God's people and the world, and [illegible] can be found, and will be found o[illegible] day.

Christian reader, can you [illegible] clearly the line between you and th[illegible] world?

Decline of Skepticism in Germany.

It was stated lately with much circumstantiality in the London Times that during a year or two past there has been a great decline in evangelical religion in Germany, manifesting itself among other ways by the paucity of theological students; and the writer who made the statement was disposed to attribute the decadence to the growth and prevalence of rationalistic ideas. A contributor to a recent number of the Bibliotheca Sacra, however, denies the assertion of the Times, and moreover is of the opinion that skepticism itself is on the decline in Germany; and he cites the following facts in support of his view: 1. That in the German universities the rationalistic lecture-rooms are now empty, and the evangelical crowded, while fifty or eighty years ago the rationalistic were crowded and the evangelical empty. 2. That historians of the rise, progress and decline of German rationalism have been appearing for the last fifteen years in the most learned portions of the literature of Germany. 3. That such teachers as Tholuck, Julius Muller, Dorner, Twesten, Ullman, Lange, Ruthe and Tischendorf, most of whom began their professorships with great unpopularity in their universities, on account of their opposition to rationalistic views, are now particularly honored on that very account. 4. That every prominent German university, except Heidelburg, is now under predominating evangelical influences, and that Heidelburg is nearly empty of theological students. 5. That the attitude of the general government at Berlin has destroyed the force of many of the political causes of disaffection with the State church. That the victory of Sedan and the achievement of German unity diminish the chances of demoralization from European wars, and contagion from France. 7. That in the field of exegetical research, while rationalism has caused the discovery of many new facts, and the adoption of a new method, the naturalistic theory by Paulus, the mythical theory by Strauss, the tendency theory by Baur, and the legendary by Renan, have been so antagonistic to each other as to be successively outgrown, both by Christian and by rationalistic scholarship."—Christian Intelligencer.

The memoir of Rev. Thomas Clinton, referred to in the subjoined note, will be found on our second page this week.

JACKSON, LA., Feb. 24, 18[illegible]

MR. EDITOR: According to your request, I send you herewith the memoir of Rev. Thomas Clinton, prepared by Rev. John G. Jones, and read before the last session of the Mississippi Conference. It might be well, for the benefit of all concerned, to publish that the document prepared by Bro. Jones was copied verbatim into the Conference journal, and a literal transcript was forwarded Dr. Summers for publication in the General Minutes.

C. G. ANDREWS,
Sec. Mississippi Conference.

Dr. A. R. Winfield gave us a call this week. He is in our city as a representative of Arkansas in the Emigration Convention now in session in New Orleans. We are glad to see that the good doctor is in splendid health, and as much as ever brimful of work for the church. He reports affairs in Arkansas, of both Church and State, as in a hopeful and improving condition.

The minutes of the Louisiana Conference have been mailed to our ministers so far as we know their post-offices. Will the following parties send us their address, that we may send them their allotted portion of said minutes: J. Cassidy, W. J. Atwood, James Owen, H. M. Ragan, W. B. Tilley, W. R. Whatley?

Rev. Alexander Clark, editor of the Methodist Recorder, has been ill for some time, and unable to attend to his editorial duties. The Recorder of February 19 tells us that he is improving slowly. We sincerely hope and pray that he may be soon restored to health and to his accustomed labors.

The Bishops' meeting will be in Nashville on the first Wednesday in May. The Board of Missions will hold its annual meeting the Friday and Saturday following, May 5, 6. The annual meeting of the book committee will take place on Thursday, the fourth day of May.

CORRECTION.—Bro. Babington's school at Franklington was reported in the ADVOCATE as at Franklin, La. It should have been: "Robert Babington, from Franklington, Mississippi Conference, $15 for China mission."

We are indebted to our friend and brother, Rev. R. A. New, M. D., for a copy of the proceedings of the Mississippi State Medical Association, 1875, volume 7.

The Methodist Recorder has a subscriber eighty-five years old, who earned the money to renew his subscription by chopping wood.

Spasmodic Christians.

The real religion, says the Methodist, finds its best expression in regious habits. Religious fits are ally not much better than any ther kind of fits. We sometimes ink they are worse, for some perons get the false notion that having eligious fits is having religion. The asmodic element in a church is pt to be a greater load than the lady f unconverted attendants. Somebody stirs up this class, and their st dollar is contributed to some ocasional charity, while the regular llections are thin, and the church ns in debt for its regular services ecause the spasms must be gotten p to get any help from half the peoe. There are in a given church venty men who work fifty-two eeks in the year. They are always nt, and always working and pray-g. Half as many spasmodic folk me now and then, work now and en, pay now and then. Any extement of a religious sort will take em ten miles to a special service; ey will not cross the road regularly attend their own prayer meetings. heir influence is bad, their future readfully uncertain. They become ormons, Millerites, or Seventh envenists, or they may flop over to infidelity. Pastors don't know hat to do with them; their brethn live in perpetual fear of them. If ey are not annually converted they ll go to the bad, and, if they are, ey will raise the roof of the church their enthusiasm, and convince e community that the working ore of people have no religion to eak of, or that the church breeds ry unwholesome character. Do n in big even in this matter. Be enusiastic the year round, and we all all enjoy it. But your fits ken fits. The church wants workg Christians who are at it three ndred and sixty-five days in the ar. The conversions are so numer- this year that we have stopped nting; A great army is being isted. This great company will pe the future, and everything depend on their being working ristians. Pray, don't swell the my of the people who have fits. n't be spasmodic. Settle down to ness, to regular daily work. Get ait you can keep up, and jog steadily till the journey ends.

ays one of the papers, which asnes to govern public thought exsively, "of course Germany needs ce, but Prince Bismarck should say so, lest the skeptical should ht it." This is tantamount to ing there is so much trickery in lomacy that statesmen must ext people will not believe, but disieve, what they say. Probably first impulse of most persons is discredit a statesman; because, te too often, statesmen have emyed language not to convey their uine meaning, but to conceal it. s Talleyrand is understood to e maintained that the chief use language was to be a vail, behind ich, as a screen, a writer of speakmight hide himself from prying pection. The latest thing in premiums to subscribers is an Indiana invention. The Ave Maria, a Catholic paper, announces that "the holy sacrifice of the mass is offered up every Saturday, at Notre Dame, for life subscribers, with a certain number of communions on the same day—from fifty to seventy-five—for the living and the dead. Subscribers for one year and upward share the benefit of a mass once a month. A complete list of the deceased subscribers is kept at Notre Dame, and thus they are remembered, not only in life, but also in death."

TO OUR AGENTS.

When subscribers pay, let us know of once. We are sending bills to subscribers, and if their payments to our office are not promptly reported bills may reach them for amount already paid, not reported to this office.

CHEAP DRY GOODS.—There is not in this country a place, in our opinion, where dry goods can be bought on better terms than in New Orleans. We should advise all persons throughout the range of our circulation, before buying in New York or Western cities, to compare their prices with those of Mr. Samuel L. Boyd, 165 and 167 Gravier and 92 Common street, whose advertisement appears elsewhere.

GROCERIES AND SHIP CHANDLERY. A very full and complete assortment of domestic and imported staple and fancy groceries, and everything required in a first-class ship chandlery establishment, may be found at the house of G. Sclaccaluga, importer, and wholesale and retail dealer, at 137 and 139 Old Levee Street, between Jefferson and St. Peter streets, New Orleans.

MACHINERY.—One of the most enterprising of our business firms in New Orleans is that of H. Dudley Coleman & Bro., 12 Union street, New Orleans, dealers in machinery, steam engines, corn and saw mills, cotton presses, mill stones, irons, and other articles in this line. Their business has grown largely in the past few years, and will continue to prosper under such enterprise, and energy as inspire their movements.

PERIQUE TOBACCO.—Those who want genuine Perique tobacco may be sure of finding it at the agency duly authorized by the producers. Mr. Edmond Bourgeois, at No. 19 Conti street, is the agent of the principal producers and manufacturers of this tobacco. See his card in today's issue.

DISEASES OF THE EYE AND EAR are painfully prevalent, and there are no organs of the human body in reference to the ailments of which delays are more dangerous. It is often the case that the skill and experience of a surgeon who has devoted a lifetime to the study and treatment of the eye and ear may not only save the patient much suffering but preserve the partial or entire use of those organs through a long life, which might be entirely lost through neglect, or destroyed by unskillful treatment. In this connection we beg to call the attention of our readers to the card of Dr. C. Beard, who is an oculist of undoubted skill and long experience, and who has resided in this city for a great number of years, during which time he has maintained a high reputation in the specialty to which he has devoted his lifetime, cure and study. His office is No. 11 Dauphine street.

LEATHER.—French and American calf, kip, morocco and sheep skins, as beautifully finished and as well tanned, as any we ever saw, may be found at the establishment of Mr. A. F. Ricau, 36 Chartres street. We have full occasion to buy many things at Mr. Ricau's without his knowing who we were, and always pass by other establishments to go to his when we need such articles, because we always get the best. His advertisement will be found elsewhere.

Messrs. CRADDOCK & Co., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, are the proprietors of the preparation of East India Hemp, for the cure of consumption and bronchial affections. These gentlemen have the certificates of a number of persons who have been benefited by using their preparation. Sufferers from any of the diseases men tioned would, no doubt, do well to correspond with Messrs. Craddock & Co.

CHOICE FAMILY GROCERIES.—Albert G. Phelps, Esq. grocer, at the corner of Felicity and Prytania streets, is receiving by the arrival of each New York steamer fresh additions to his large and choice assortment of groceries and family supplies. Those who want fresh and choice articles will find them at Mr. Phelps' at moderate rates. We take pleasure in directing attention to his advertisement elsewhere.

BLACK AND COLORED CLOTHS.—We know of no better house at which to buy cloths, velvets, silks, flox skins, or anything in the line of tailors' supplies, than the house of M. A. Geiger, 33 Chartres street, corner of Custom House. The material of the best suit we ever had was bought at this house. If you need anything in the line of goods we can recommend you to call on him.

BOOTS AND SHOES.—By reference to the advertisement of Mr. M. Volker, in another column, it will be seen that home made shoes are offered at $3 per pair. They will, we are told, be guaranteed to cost cheaper than in store in the city.

MEDICAL.

I MUST OWN that your Simmons' Liver Regulator fully deserves the popularity it has attained. As a family medicine it has no equal. It cured my wife of a malady I had counted incurable—that evil Shane of our American people, Dyspepsia. She desires that all millions and people might know the virtues of this God-given remedy. Hoping that the above will appear in your Almanac of 1876, and be of some use in extolling the virtues of your excellent medicine, I the wish of your fun ble servant,
A. E. P. MERRY,
Professor in Nicholas Public School,
Parish of Terrebonne, La.

I have used Simmons' Liver Regulator for two years, and recommend it as a very superior medicine for Dyspepsia and Liver Disease.
GEORGE W. SMITH,
Kentucky Conference,
Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Your valuable medicine (Simmons' Regulator) has saved me doctors' bills often. I use it for everything that it is recommended for, and never knew it to fail. I have used it to cattle and drobs with my mules and horses, giving them about half a bottle at a time. I have not lost one that I gave it to. You can recommend it to every one that has stock as being the best medicine known for all complaints that horse flesh is heir to.
E. T. TAYLOR,
Agent for Grangers of Georgia.

Hampton (Abs.) Banner.

Simmons' Liver Regulator doubtless is one of the best medicines ever compounded from the great botanic garden of nature, and contains no life-destroying component hidden under some technical name, but is a purifier, rejuvenator and regulator not only of the liver, but of the whole system.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Utilizing Chicken Feathers.

"According to statistics very carefully compiled," says a writer in La Nature, "we throw away yearly a quantity of chicken feathers the intrinsic value of which is equal to the money which we pay out for cotton." A startling statement, but the author considers it true; and he proceeds to explain how the feathers are prepared to make them valuable. The operation is to cut the plume portions of the feathers from the stem by means of ordinary hand scissors. The former are placed in quantities in a coarse bag, which, when full, is closed and subjected to a thorough kneading with the hands. At the end of five minutes the feathers, it is stated, become disaggregated and felted together, forming a down, perfectly homogeneous and of great lightness. It is even lighter than natural eider down, because the latter contains the ribs of the feathers, which give extra weight. The material thus prepared is worth, and readily sells in Paris, for about $2 a pound. About 1.6 Troy ounces of this down can be obtained from the feathers of an ordinary-sized pullet; and this, on the above valuation, is worth about twenty cents.

It is suggested that, through the winter, children might collect all the feathers about a farm, and cut the ribs out, as we have stated. By the spring-time a large quantity of down would be prepared, which could be disposed of to upholsterers or employed for domestic uses. Goose feathers may be treated in a similar manner, and thus two-thirds of the product of the bird utilized, instead of only about one-fifth, as is at present the case.

The chicken down is said to form a beautiful cloth when woven. For about a square yard of the material a pound and a half of down is required. The fabric is said to be almost indestructible, as, in place of fraying out at edges, it only seems to felt the tighter. It takes dye readily, and is thoroughly waterproof. There appears to be a good opportunity here for some ingenious person to invent machines to cut and treat the feathers.—Boston Journal.

Age of Apple Trees.—A writer in the Country Gentleman says: "It seems to be the common belief that there is no limit to the natural age of apple-trees. But this is certainly a mistake. We all know that the peach-tree usually fails to be profitable at twelve to fifteen years of age, and the cherry and plum average only twenty to thirty years; the pear, in favorable circumstances, forty to fifty years—in rare cases a much longer time. So also the apple-tree has its natural limit, and although, like man's life, the duration of the period of health and vigor varies greatly, according to constitution, nurture, climate, etc., its approaching termination is clearly indicated by signs of debility and disease. On very deep and favorable soils, and where the trees are not damaged by severity of climate, apple-orchards are occasionally found bearing fair crops of fruit at eighty to one hundred years of age, but these are nearly as rare as for their owners to live so long. Very few farms have soil of the best kind for an orchard, and everywhere our climate is either too warm, or at times too cold, for the best health of the trees. Injury by severe cold, blackening all the wood, except as new growth is formed, I am convinced is a very common cause of the premature failure of orchards; but starvation, in consequence of exhaustion of the soil, is still more common, and this is a more difficult matter to remedy than most people suppose, especially when trees have attained full bearing size."

Spirits of Ammonia.—There is no telling what a thing will do till you try it. I knew ammonia, diluted in water, could restore rusty silks and clean coat collars, but, when I got a grease spot on the carpet, I tried half a dozen things before I thought of that, and that was just what did the work effectually. I put a teaspoonful into a teacupful of hot water, and took a cloth and wet the spot thoroughly, just rubbing it slightly, and the ugly spot was gone. It is splendid for cleaning your silver; it makes things as bright as new without any expenditure of strength; and for looking-glasses and windows it is best of all; and one day, when I was tired and my dish cloths looked rather gray, I turned a few drops of ammonia into the water and rubbed them out, and I found it acted like a charm, and I shall be sure and do so again some day. I suppose housewives have a perfect right to experiment and see what results they can produce; and if they are not on as large a scale as the farmers try, they are just as important to us, and may make our work lighter and brighter too. Now I do not believe in luxuriating over a good thing all alone, and I hope all the housekeepers will send and get a ten-cent bottle of spirits of ammonia and commence a series of chemical experiments and see what they can accomplish with it. Take the boys' jackets, the girls' dresses, and, when you have cleaned everything else, put a few drops in some soft water and wash the little folks' hoods, and report progress.—Farmer's Wife, in Tribune and Farmer.

Propagation of Celery.—Celery is a native of Norway and Sweden, where it grows near the edges of swamps. This plant is rarely cultivated as it should be, hence the stunted specimens which appear in our markets. A deep trench should first be dug, at the bottom of which a layer of sticks of wood, say six inches thick, should be placed. A drain-pipe being placed endwise upon one or both ends of the layer. The stick should be then covered with about a foot of rich mold, wherein the plants should be set in a row, and about five inches apart. The plants should be kept well watered, the water being supplied through the drain-pipes, so that, passing through the layer of sticks, which serves as a conduit, the water is supplied to the roots of the plant. In earthing up care should be exercised to close the stems of the plant well together with the hand, so that no mold can get between them. The earthing process should be performed sufficiently frequent to keep the mold nearly level with the leaves of the outside stems. If these directions are carefully observed the plant may be grown at least four feet in length, and this without impairing the flavor, which deterioration is commonly noticed in overgrown vegetables and fruits.

Whipping Horses.—Prof. Wagner, in writing upon this subject, says: "Many think they are doing finely, and are proud of their success in horse-training, by means of severe whipping, or otherwise arousing and stimulating the passions, and then through necessity garnishing the will through which the resistance is prompted. No mistake can be greater than this, and there is nothing that so fully exhibits the ability, judgment and skill of the real horseman as the care displayed in winning instead of repelling the action of the mind. Although it may be necessary to use the whip sometimes, it should always be applied judiciously, and great care should be taken not to arouse the passions or excite the will to obstinacy. The legitimate and proper use of the whip is calculated to operate upon the sense of fear almost entirely. The affectionate and better nature must be appealed to in training a horse as well as in training a child. A reproof given may be intended for the good of the child, but if only the passions are excited the object is depraving and injurious. This is a vital principle, and can be disregarded in the management of sensitive and courageous horses only at the risk of spoiling them. I have known many horses of a naturally gentle character to be spoiled by whipping once, and one horse that was made vicious by being struck with a whip once while standing in his stall."

Liquid Grafting Wax.—The Horticulturist gives the following formula for making Lefort's liquid grafting wax, which is said to have been highly commended in France, and until lately kept secret:

Melt one pound of common resin over a gentle fire. Add to it an ounce of beef tallow and stir it well. Take it from the fire, let it cool down a little, and then mix with a tablespoonful of spirits of turpentine, and after that about seven ounces of very strong alcohol, sixty-five per cent., to be had at any druggist's store. The alcohol cools it down so rapidly that it will be necessary to put it again on the fire, stirring it constantly. Still the utmost care must be exercised to keep the alcohol from getting inflamed. To avoid it, the best way is to remove the vessel from the fire when the lump that may have been formed commences melting again. This must be continued till this is a homogeneous mass similar to honey. After a few days' exposure to the atmosphere, in a thin coat, it assumes a whitish color, and becomes as hard as stone, being impervious to water or air.

Potted Ham.—After a ham is nearly eaten, there remains a good deal that is not nice enough for table. Cut this off, chop fine as powder; put a layer of ham in a jar, sprinkle pepper, cloves and vinegar over it, then a layer of ham, and so on until the jar is nearly full; finish with spice, and cover with vinegar an inch in depth; let stand two or three days. It is delicious for tea or luncheon. Cold meat may be prepared the same way, and is economical, as well as very nice.

Washington Pie.—One-half cup of butter, two of sugar, three eggs well beaten; better with the yolks and whites beaten separately, one cup sour milk, one teaspoonful of soda, four cups of flour. If prepared flour is used, then soda need not be added. Bake in jelly-cake pans. When done, pile two or three layers of the cake one above the other, spreading jelly or jam between each cake.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 24, 1875.

Mr. EDWARD L. HALL—Sir: I have examined the sample of Crystal Polishing Powder left with me by you, with the following results:

I find it to contain no acids or alkalies, on which account it will be entirely free from corrosive action when supplied to polished metallic surfaces. It contains no poisonous substances, by which any accident or injury could happen while using it. The particles of the Powder are of angular, and not rounded, as in most kinds of sand, and in many other polishing agents. The particles are extremely small and hard, which, with their angular shape, give it especial value as a rapid and fine polisher. Yours truly,

ALFRED W. PERRY,
Professor of Chemistry,

THE ONLY TRUE AND PERFECT HAIR COLORER

THE MYSTERY,

Or Turner's Hair Tint!

HARMLESS! BEAUTIFUL! PERMANENT!

This preparation has received the indorsement of the scientific world, and wherever introduced has superseded all other preparations of the kind. No washing or preparation of the hair is necessary before using.

Has been from all interviews heretofore, composed of Sulphates and other compounds, which are injurious to the Hair.

Prepared by Absorption.

And its use saves both time and labor, as a few drops applied with a comb once a month or so, to the Hair or Whiskers, answers the purpose, the natural color being so perfectly assimilated by its detection. Its great recommendation is in its specific power of tint, producing any desired shade, from light brown to the deepest black, and not in absence of that dry and burned appearance produced by other Hair Dyes. The Mystery can be applied to a single hair or upon that have changed etc be restored to their original shade without applying all over the head, as is necessary when using other Hair Dyes.

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP.

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound, its well-established virtue and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Throat and Bronchia is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at any length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Diarrhœa or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most efficacious in preventing that most awful scourge when timely resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainly of cure, its truly extraordinary medicine has, over most compounds of the same nature, the decided advantage, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children, as it requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, not only because the bottles contain more than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this Sirup will keep for years without fermenting, and it can be used in families whenever needed by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Sirup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night may take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a good night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day in suitable quantities, at intervals of three to four hours. For sale by

A. CARROUCHE,
Agent for New Orleans, 39 Chartres St.
And by all druggists. 1y17

Scientific.

—A science college has just been formally opened in Leeds, England, by the Duke of Devonshire, though it has really been at work for a year. The college has already got a considerable endowment; £30,000 have been raised by subscriptions; a further endowment of £400 a year has been obtained through the Endowed Schools Commissioners, and the cloth-workers have given £300 a year, and founded four scholarships of £25 a year each, for furthering instruction in the textile industries.

RECOVERY FROM THE STROKE OF LIGHTNING.—In his valuable work on "The Maintenance of Health," Dr. Fothergill has the following on resuscitation after lightning stroke: "Persons struck by lightning are not always dead when they appear to be so. There are few recoveries from this state, because no means are tried to restore the sufferer. In the tropics there are many instances of persons struck down by lightning, recovering after a heavy thunder shower; and it would appear that cold affusion to the body has a decided action in such cases. The inured cannot be harmed by the free use of cold water, and if only an occasional recovery took place it would be well worth the pains bestowed. The persons so injured should have cold water poured, or even dashed, freely over them."

—The touchstone, which has served for ages as a means of determining approximately the purity of gold, has been a frequent object of study with mineralogists, geologists and chemists. The name has been applied by modern savants to a number of very different minerals. According to M. Damas, in a recent number of the Annales de Chimie et de Physique, the good, true and only touchstone, suitable for our actual requirements, and which should alone bear the name, is a fossil wood, still retaining carbon within the silica with which it is injected. Specimens having all the qualities of good touchstone, and giving a scoria of silicon when burnt, still retain the form of branches of trees, the species of which even may be determined. He has had a fragment of good touchstone analyzed, and communicates the result in this paper.

—Dr. Ascherson contributes to a recent number of the Botanische Zeitung some interesting notes on the vegetation of the great Lybian desert. Many things which are deciduous with us prove evergreen there. The peach leaves remain on the trees till the new leaves push in the spring. The weeping willow does the same, as do many others. But this is to be expected from their behavior here; for it always takes a sharp frost to cause them to fall, and it is evident that only for this they would in our climate retain their leaves to the new year, or perhaps longer. The great problem is how that trees under some circumstances retain their leaves so long, or rather why they color and fall in the autumn before cold weather comes, as so many do in our country. There have been a large number of explanations offered; all correct from certain points of view, but which do not appear as yet to be reducible to a general law underlying all.

—M. Lostal, railway contractor, has communicated to the Society of Mining Industry at St. Etienne the result of his observations on the effect of lime in preserving wood, and his method of applying it. He piles the planks in a tank, and puts between all a layer of quicklime, which gradually slaked with water. Timber for mines requires about a week to become thoroughly impregnated, and other wood acquires remarkable consistency and hardness, and, it is said, will never rot. Wood has been prepared in this manner for several mines, so that the plan will shortly be tested on a considerable scale. Beechwood has been prepared in this way for hammers and other tools for several iron works, and it is said to become as hard as oak, without losing its elasticity or lightness, and to last much longer than when unprepared. It has long been known that wood set in lime or mortar is preserved from decay, but no systematic plan for its preservation has until now been attempted.

—A new light for photographic purposes has been devised by Mr. Tailler, the president of the Photographic Society. Desiring to obviate the danger attendant on the use of the new light produced from bisulphide of carbon and nitric oxide, he experimented with saltpeter and sulphur, and has succeeded in obtaining a light which, when a few minor details of a mechanical nature have been arranged, promises to be all that can be desired for photographic purposes. Briefly described, the process consists in heating saltpeter in a hard glass tube to a temperature beyond the point of fusion, and then dropping in a piece of roll brimstone. One ounce of saltpeter, fed with eight to ten grains of sulphur at a time, will keep up a brilliant light for about ten minutes at a nominal cost, when suitable apparatus is devised; for owing to the intense heat the wear and tear of apparatus is a considerable item in the expenditure account. A spirit lamp is sufficient to melt the nitre, and, that state obtained, it may be removed, sulphur alone being necessary to keep up the action as long as the saltpeter lasts. One part by weight of sulphur is required for three of saltpeter.

Blessings long desired are sweeter when they come; if soon given, they lose much of their value. God reserves for thee that which he is slow to give thee, that you may learn to entertain supreme desire and longing after it.—Augustine.

"That man," said Sydney Smith, "is not the discoverer of art who first says the thing; but he who says it so long, so loud and so clearly that he compels mankind to hear him."

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
Wednesday morning, March 1, 1876.

The river is 4 feet 3 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending February 29:

Mississippi river and bayous..... bales	5,261
Red river	3,150
Ouachita river	3,261
Railroads	3,710
Lake	41
Mobile	146
Texas	26
Total	15,595

Our cotton market for the past week has shown great irregularity for low, inferior and trashy cotton, while even running lists, and bright, clean cotton has been sought for and sold at full prices. The movement was as follows, as reported on the boards of the Cotton Exchange:

Thursday.—Sales, 5,700 bales. Our market languid. New York, unsettled. In Liverpool, decline of 1-16. Receipts, 9,901.

Friday.—Sales, 5,800 bales. Receipts, 4,764 bales. Market irregular. New York, quiet. Liverpool, dull and easier.

Saturday.—Sales, 8,400 bales. Receipts, 4,026 bales. Market steady. New York, dull. Liverpool, unchanged.

Monday.—Sales, 5,301 bales. Receipts, 12,902 bales. Market unchanged, although brokers claimed a reduction in prices. Clean cottons brought outside figures.

Tuesday being Carnival, the Cotton Exchange was closed and business generally suspended.

EXCHANGE QUOTATIONS.

FOLEY'S

Celebrated Gold Pens

AND PENCILS.

THE FINEST AND BEST.

CIRCULAR.—To those engaged in mercantile pursuits, any invention that will facilitate their labor is highly worthy of notice, as well as of extensive patronage. One of the most important inventions of the present age is that of a pen that possesses the necessary qualities of firmness in mark and durability in use. Pre-eminently such are those of JOHN FOLEY, manufacturer of fine GOLD PENS AND PENCILS, No. 2 Astor House. Their superior value is tested by the long time he has been engaged in our city in their manufacture. We, the subscribers, who know the value of FOLEY'S PENS from constant use of them for a number of years, cheerfully recommend them to those who wish for the best and most perfect Gold Pen ever made.

DR. C. M'LANE'S

LIVER COMPLAINT,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increase on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder-blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for a rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. M'LANE'S LIVER PILLS, in cases of AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them A FAIR TRIAL.

P. S. Doctors and Physicians ordering others than Fleming Bros. will do well to see that the capsules distinctly read, "M'Lane's Liver Pills, prepared by Fleming Bros., Pittsburgh, Pa.," the only genuine and original. Purchasers wishing to get the pills mailed, would forward price, book, post paid, in letter of the United States, or the box of Pills, twelve three-cent postage stamps, or one six Vermifuge for fourteen three-cent stamps. Orders from Canada must be accompanied by twenty cents extra.

is reported that the House Judiary Committee has conclusive dence that Babcock obtained surreptitiously, from the White House, of Pierrepont's notorious letter. There is considerable comment toght on the President's action in withholding the acceptance of Mr. henck's resignation until the latter ed from England, exempting the er from arrest.

It seems clear that the Judiciary mmittee have evidence showing t Pierrepont was guilty of gross sconference in the whisky trials on Babcock's behalf. The committee is thoroughly investigating h a view of impeachment, if the sent impressions are demonstrated be correct. Pierrepont acted, of rse, on Grant's order, and if the is impeached the other cannot ape.

GALVESTON, March 6.—The News ial from Brownsville, Tex., says: revolutionists under Diaz are ily gaining strength, and consid- le consternation prevails among government adherents in the ns along the Mexican border. ny families are seeking protection this American side at Rio Grande y, Edinburg and Brownsville. tamoras is considered the present active point of the Diaz party, alough it is a strongly fortified city. LISBON, March 2. Lady Augusta ley is dead.

The Standard's Berlin special dis- reports that inundations in the rn provinces are increasing. persons have been drowned Posen. The railway from Posen is threatened with total de- ction by the floods.

HAVANA, March 3. The City of Havana, from Vera Cruz, has arrived. As the steamer was leaving Vera Cruz telegrams were received from the interior announcing the triumph of the government at all points. The different revolutionary plans published show there has been no understanding among the rebel leaders.

The government has asked a loan of $500,000 from the merchants of the capital, which was immediately granted, and the money placed at President Lerdo's disposition.

VIENNA, March 5.—The Porte, following the amicable advice given by the great powers, has granted the insurgents complete amnesty. Every preparation is being made by Austria and Hungary to accelerate the return of the refugees to their homes. The Porte promised the refugees that on their return they will not be subjected to any punishment, and be protected against molestation; they will be supplied gratuitously with material for the construction of their houses, and with grain for sowing. All titles will be remitted for one year, and other taxes for two years.

BOMBAY, March 5.—Intelligence has been received here that the plague has appeared on the banks of the Euphrates.

The Revolution in Mexico.

From private letters received yesterday from the city of Mexico we learn that the revolutionary States of Guerrero, Michoacan, Jalisco, Durango, Sonora and St. Louis are at last peaceful. Escobedo, after having rendered valuable services in Michoacan, has been recalled to take command of the northern region at Zacatecas.

Gen. Donat Guerra, who pronounced a few days ago against the government, has not been able to secure but a few followers. Gen. Porfirio Diaz, who is the rival of President Lerdo de Tejada, is at Monterey, in northeastern Mexico, without troops or money. Gens. Negrate and Rocha are fugitives, and Corio and Pontones fly before the government forces.

Gen. Alatorre has received a severe check in Oaxaca, but he has been reinforced, and must have ere this taken the field again and punished the insurgents. Gen. Carrillo, who pronounced against the administration in the Cerro Puebla, has not been successful. His movement is not of much importance. A revolutionary leader, he is bitterly hated by the liberals, who have refused to affiliate with him.

It is asserted that all the revolutionary chieftains are at open variance with each other. Each one seems to be operating on his own behalf, and there is neither plan nor concert among them.

After writing the above we learn that the news from Oaxaca is most encouraging. The rebel chiefs have quarreled among themselves and separated, each one taking with him his forces. This leaves the road to the city of Oaxaca open to Gen. Alatorre, who, upon being joined recently by Gen. Corella, at once took the offensive.

We also learn that Gen. Donato Guerra, who lately pronounced in Jalisco, attacked Lagos and was repulsed. The government forces pursued him, and succeeded in dispersing his command.

Gen. Carrillo attacked Tatlanqui, Sierra de Puebla, and was defeated. He fled to the mountain fastnesses, followed by a few of his cavalry.

We sincerely believe that the opposition to the government of Lerdo de Tejada is insignificant. May God speed the banner of Mexico in her present struggle for freedom, order and prosperity.—New Orleans Picayune, March 5.

From the Work.

FRANKLINTON CIRCUIT, SUMMIT DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: From the description I received of the work, and being young in the ministry, I of course felt discouraged; but upon arriving here and being so kindly received by the good people my discouragement at once vanished. There was no home provided for us, but a kind brother took myself and family to his house, and we were made to feel quite at home by his excellent wife and interesting family until a permanent home could be provided for us.

We applied to the people for help to purchase a house for a parsonage, and soon, by their liberality, we had money enough to make a payment on the property, which we did, and now we have a home for the preachers in the town of Franklinton, in a good locality, with a good well in the yard, garden, and a small piece of ground fenced in for the use of the preacher.

We have also a new house of worship almost completed, all paid for and money in the hands of the committee. We held our first Quarterly Conference in it on the twenty-ninth and thirtieth of January. Bro. Godfry, our presiding elder, preached with great acceptability to a large and attentive congregation.

I take this to be one of the best countries to which a preacher can be sent, not only to do good, but to get a support. The people are liberal and kind-hearted, and are not encumbered. They also know how to make their preacher feel at home among them. The stewards—God bless them!—also know their duty. The ADVOCATE finds a hearty welcome with almost every member of the charge. Yours fraternally,

RUFFIN T. DAVIS.

FRANKLINTON, LA., March 3, 1876.

The Influence of the Secular Press.

WHAT SHALL WE AND OUR CHILDREN READ?

MR. EDITOR: The Western Methodist some weeks since protested strongly against the prostitution of the press in publishing column after column in the interests of the Woodhull and her teachings. The protest was prompted by the fact that the theater had been crowded to hear the notorious woman lecture the preceding Sunday night. The daily press of Nashville was as blameworthy as that of Memphis. The theater was full in Nashville. But the Southern Advocate of last week has an editorial giving credit to the daily press of Macon, Ga., which spoke against the lectures, and not a ticket was sold in the city, when glaring posters placarded the name of Victoria Woodhull, the "Queen of the Rostrum," who would lecture in the city on a certain night.

What a wonderful influence for good or evil the press is wielding! How much of vice and corruption might be restrained by the daily papers of all of our cities! How much of infamy is being exposed and punished through the influence of editors who have been engaged in probing the festering social ulcers in various portions of our country!

Shall we as Christians give any countenance to those papers which connive at vice, or fail to rebuke whatever is dangerous and degrading? What do we place in the hands of our children to read? We are anxious to educate our offspring. What intellectual pabulum do we provide for them at home? If inclined to gain information or seek entertainment from books or papers, they will be sure to read something. If we fail to furnish good reading for our children, have we any reason to complain; when we leave them to buy or borrow such as they happen to find convenient, if they contract a taste for the light, trashy, if not worse literature that is apt to reach them? Our church and Sunday school literature, of course, have claims upon our patronage above all other publications. But then we must not expect to confine our families entirely to strictly religious reading.

Alfred Martien, 21 South Seventh street, Philadelphia, publishes weekly Young Folks' News, at three cents a number, or $1.25 a year, with a chromo. Miss Helene Hicks, the editor, knows well how to cater to the appetites of children. The stories are attractive and instructive. About three illustrations embellish each number.

Wide Awake, a monthly magazine for girls and boys, with bright illuminated covers, is most beautifully illustrated with superior wood engravings. The March number has seven full-page illustrations, besides thirty smaller pictures. Thus the twenty-five articles are as instructive as interesting to the children. It will certainly keep our young folks wide awake with intense interest. The wee ones are not neglected. There is a department "for the very smallest wide-awakes." If "a thing of beauty is a joy forever," then this gem will make joyous the nurseries of many homes in America. This illustrated magazine is published by D. Lothrop & Co., 38 and 40 Cornhill, Boston, at twenty cents a number, or $2 a year—seventy-two pages.

The Galaxy well deserves the name. The contributors for its pages constitute a luminous galaxy, who send forth monthly clear, strong streams of light upon the literary world. The papers of Richard Grant White, on English words, and Justin McCarthy's, on English characters, are very instructive. I know of no American magazine more deserving of an extensive patronage.

S. M. CHERRY.

BRENTWOOD, TENN., March 1, 1876.

Letter from East Tennessee.

MR. EDITOR: Inasmuch as you do not often hear directly from this part of our widely-extended Zion, would a few items be out of place? I am glad to be able to report that in the Holston Conference, notwithstanding all the opposition and persecutions through which we have passed, Southern Methodism not only holds her own, but is making rapid progress. Notwithstanding many of our houses of worship were taken from us and held for a long time after the war, and some of our preachers unmercifully beaten, yet the Lord has been with us. We have regained about all of our church property where suit has been brought, and all, no doubt, in consequence of the validity of the Plan of Separation, although some have said: "A fig for the Plan of Separation." And right here I would observe that it has occurred to me that, inasmuch as so little is known by the masses of the people in reference to the Plan of Separation, would it not be well to have it published in the minutes of all the Annual Conferences that publish their minutes, as it would not only be the means of much light being given on this vexed question, but also might result in many more copies of the minutes being sold if it was known that they contained this much-needed information? And again, as it would occupy but a few pages in the minutes, would it not be well for them to show the great difference that there is between the two Methodist Churches as to the equality of the races? There are no doubt, many that have been persuaded into the Northern Methodist Church, who, if they could only be convinced that that church is really in favor of negro equality, would return. The law-making power, and many of their preachers as well as Bishops believe in, and, sad to say, practice it; and in order to convince them let it be shown that their last General Conference elected Gilbert Haven a Bishop with a certain knowledge of his odious views on that subject before he was elected—that is, that he was not only in favor of civil, social and religious equality, but was notoriously in favor of the amalgamation of the races, and is yet earnestly contending for it.

We are having many glorious revivals in our Conference. One district reports five hundred and thirty-two conversions in the last ten weeks.

I take this method of sending kind remembrances to my old comrades in arms in the Alabama Conference. You may hear from me again.

Yours, H. P. WATSON.

ROGERSTOWN, TENN., Feb. 18, 1876.

Seashore Camp Ground.

MR. EDITOR: The winter has gone, spring is fresh and green all around us, and summer will speedily be upon us. Is it not time to be thinking of our approaching summer camp meeting on the sea shore, and preparing for it by forestalling the future, and ordering our engagements and arranging affairs so as to make it convenient, and prevent disappointment to ourselves and others?

It is gratifying to know that inquiries are already being made for good building lots by parties desiring to build, and the prospect is that a large number of new tents will be erected this year.

The trustees have purchased the property immediately adjoining the camp ground on the west, including the "cold springs," and at an early day will lay out another row of building lots on the west, corresponding to the third row on the east. This purchase will increase the deby of the camp ground, but the ladies of the Methodist churches of this city, we learn, are uniting their counsels and labors together in this behalf, which will result, we doubt not, in going far toward liquidating the entire indebtedness. Will you bespeak them the assistance and co-operation of all the friends of Methodism and camp meetings when they shall call for it?

A visit of the committee, last week, to the camp ground found the works of improvement laid out in an advanced state toward completion, and the grounds will be in a better condition in 1876 than in any previous year. Threatening trees have been felled, stumps have been removed, the surface graded, and two hundred trees have been set out—magnolia, oak and China—for shade and ornament.

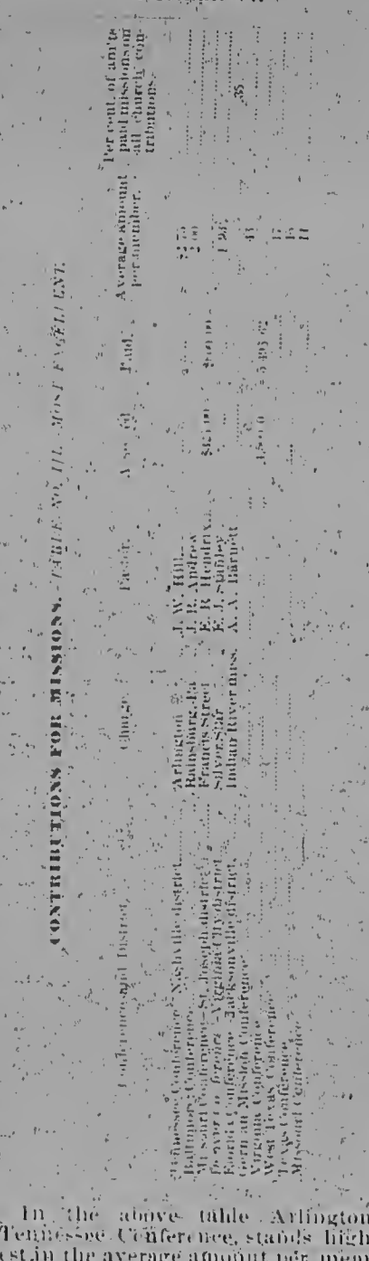
At an early day the trustees will meet on the camp ground, of which due notice will be given in the ADVOCATE, to all persons interested, to be present and select their lots for tent-building.

TRUSTEE.

Good Bishop Hall says: "Every day is a little life, and our whole life is but a day repeated."

The Gospel of Numbers.

NUMBER VI.



In the above table Arlington, Tennessee Conference, stands highest in the average amount per member; Francis Street, St. Joseph, Mo., highest in amount above assessment. Indian River mission, Fla., bears the palm of missionary zeal, having paid the highest per cent. for missions as compared with other church contributions. Rainsburg, Pa., is placed in this table, because it is next to Arlington in the average per member, and, more than that, is a new charge, without churches or schools. We bring in Silver Star, in Montana, both because it is third, and deserves to be heard as a voice from the far West, where Methodism is feeble. The German Mission Conference is first among the Conferences in the average per member; the Virginia Conference first in amount paid above assessment. West Texas and Texas come in deservedly as indicating the missionary zeal of the West. Heroes have established Methodism in that region, and their children reflect the spirit of their fathers. Missouri rightfully has a place in this list as proof that averages can be carried upward in large Conferences, even when they are new, provided the preachers say it shall be done.

While these figures are an advance on the past, which is cause for devout thanksgiving, yet what intelligent Methodist is satisfied with these amounts? Surely, by God's blessing, now that the facts are before us, we can reach fifty cents per member for foreign missions next year. Brethren, is it not our duty? and does not our Father promise strength and ample means to accomplish duty if we seek? What Conferences will place fifty cents as the minimum on their Conference banner for the year to come? This surely can be, must be, reached. The board is using every endeavor to expend the means afforded by the church with skill and economy. Our missions are daily increasing in interest and promise. More than all, our Master bids us and expects us to go.

Next week we will give a comparative view of Conferences last year with the year before. We still ask for corrections before these figures go into our annual report.

SPAIN AND THE VATICAN.—The late elections in Spain seem to have created an open breach between the government of King Alfonso and the Ultramontanes. The Spanish bishops, with the exception of one or two of the more moderate, followed the defiant example of the Archbishop of Valencia, who fulminated a circular to the "faithful," forbidding them to vote for any person who was even inclined to support the limited religious toleration permitted under the new constitution. After defining the syllabus of the Pope as "the infallible instructor of every Catholic in religion and morals," and after pointing out its condemnation of freedom of worship, the archbishop in his circular insolently pronounced religious toleration and freedom of worship to be "an unqualified absurdity, an unpardonable folly, and a measure as impolitic as it is opposed to sound principles." Incensed by this method of attack, the government journals are raising a cry against the priesthood as not merely standing in the way of all reform, but scandalizing the nation by their personal misconduct. Says one of them (the Cronista): "Simony is carried on to an extent incompatible with any decency, and it would be ridiculous hypocrisy to conceal one's knowledge of it. Benefices and canonries are hotly bid for, however slender the remuneration, as often the only duty annexed to them is the celebration of an occasional mass, and this is easily evaded. Absentees from their cures are numerous, and many of them use their ecclesiastical incomes for the purpose of leading lives as irregular as can well be imagined." A little more ventilation of this sort will have a wholesome effect upon the Spanish atmosphere, now so murky with Romish intolerance and superstition.—Christian Intelligencer.

MR. EDITOR: I have just received the minutes of our last Conference. They are in good style. I find, however, some errors in the widows' and orphans' statistics. My records of receipts show the receipts from the districts to aggregate the sum of $1,675.80; the minutes say $1,514.22. See the following comparative statement:

	My Record.	Minutes.
New Orleans district	$242 60	$255 38
Delhi district	279 45	281 40
Homer district	217 50	196 60
Shreveport district	269 45	272 44
Alexandria district	102 75	91 75
Opelousas district	107 75	167 60
Whole amount disbursed	$1,675 80	$1,511 22

These errors have grown out of the fact that the brethren have probably made mistakes in their statistical reports, not stating correctly the sums handed to me. I see some appointments overstated and others understated. Unless we can be more accurate in our statistical reports it will be better to omit the particulars and simply report the aggregate. I am sure that some of the brethren will be astonished to see themselves credited with so much; while others will be wounded at finding so little and in one instance none at all credited to them. Yours fraternally,

B. F. WHITE.

Missionary Notes.

—Some of the missionary treasuries are greatly embarrassed, and one is declared bankrupt. The missionary cause is now before our New England churches. Don't fail in the missionary collections. Our missionary work must be sustained. Let no society fail to take a missionary collection. If ever so small, take it. Our missionaries are making great sacrifices, and toiling hard in the home and foreign fields; don't forsake them. Christ died for the heathen, and if we are Christians we shall strive to save all for whom Christ died.

—All our foreign missions are prosperous, and because the Lord is giving them great success, and the work increasing on their hands, they are asking for additional laborers. Shall their requests be granted?

—The Presbyterians propose to raise a dollar per member for missions for the Centennial year. Can't the Methodists do as much?

—The Moravians are the banner missionary church, considering their numbers. They have 355 missionaries in the field, and a missionary fund of $106,000.

—The sum sent from England and America to heathen countries is one of the greatest difficulties with which the missionaries have to contend.

—The native church at Kobbe, Africa, requires all of its members to be active in aggressive Christian work, or assist those who are.

—There are in India 900,000 Christians, less than one in 200 of the population. In ten years a great work for Christ has been done in Egypt—ten churches raised up, consisting of 400 members.

—Christianity is the only hope of the world, and the sooner we give it the world the better.—Zion's Herald.

WHITE FIELD LABOR IN THE SOUTH.—The New Orleans Price Current says: "How is it that white men can now labor in the rice fields of the South, where formerly the climate was considered an insurmountable barrier? Has the climate changed? No! Only the mistaken ideas of the insalubrity of the climate, false impressions about the height to which the thermometer attains in midsummer, have, by dint of self-investigation, aided by the press, been dispelled, at the least, in small circles; but there are still many in the West and North, and also in Europe, who mentally compare the fertile lands of the Gulf States to the pestilential Roman campagna. White labor, and particularly the participation of the planter or farmer himself in the labors of the field, have of late tended to shorten the period necessary for the cultivation of most of our crops. The application of science to farming, which naturally follows in the wake of white labor, will not alone raise larger crops on a given area, but also improve the quality of the harvest. Once let it be generally understood that a white man can work in the field in this State, as well as anywhere else in the West or North, with better health, more comfort, and with at least a double profit, and thousands of small farmers from the fertile sections of other States will take up the rich alluvial lands of Louisiana which are awaiting the husbandman's calling."

THROUGH.

BY LAURA S. GILBERT.

To-day's work is very hard—
Harder far than we to-day may say
Not a sun-ray left to glimmer,
Nothing cheerful by the way
Can I see through.

Many cruel trials stare before me
Poor the recompense it seemeth
But Je sus—the angels guard me—
Neath the vail the light still gleameth
To lead me through.

The task is hard, but I will do it
Stings and thorns may wound me sore
But I'll reach a dream of beauty
Far be yond all human lore
If I'll press through.

Only God, I am so weary
Not of serving, not of waiting,
But of lifting crossed dreary,
From each day and hour dating,
Am I almost through?

Lest perhaps the mighty river
Is just dashing at my feet,
And perchance the holy Giver
Waiteth there my soul to greet
He'll lead me through.

Alabama Conference.

REMINISCENCES.

Thomas S. Abernethy was licensed to preach in Tennessee in 1823, and came to the Mississippi Conference, into which he was admitted on trial that winter, and after spending thirteen years in the itinerácy he located, and was in that relation ten years. Re-entering, he traveled four years, and again located, which was at the time of the writer's admission on trial. He only remained local two years this time, when he was readmitted, and has continued ever since in the itinerant work. It will be seen that he has been fifty-two years a preacher—forty in the traveling connection, and twelve in the local ranks.

Entering the work in the Mississippi Conference, he labored in that body until the organization of the Alabama Conference, when he became a member thereof by falling in its territory. In the early days of his ministry he traveled large circuits, which were very important fields, where Methodism was established, and in some of which it is now strongly entrenched. It may not be amiss to mention some of the appointments he filled. In 1824 he was on Marion circuit, Ala.; Thos. Owens, preacher in charge; in 1825, New River in Mississippi, John Callier in charge; in 1826, Chickasawha in Mississippi, J. P. Haney being his assistant; in 1827, Claiborne Ala.; in 1828, Marengo, John A. Cotten his helper; in 1829, superannuated; in 1830-1, Prairie, Creek; in 1832, Greensboro, Erie, etc.; in 1833, Black Warrior; in 1834, Marion and Selma. These were points where he labored prior to his location. During his later years he was on Sumpterville, Belmont, Suggsville, Uniontown, Spring Hill and Black's Bend circuits, and one year presiding elder of the Camden district.

"For several years he did missionary work among the colored people. About twenty-five of the forty years that he was a traveling preacher his name stands on the effective list. Bro. Abernethy, in the days of his manhood and strength, was a preacher of fine ability, and, possessing great geniality as well as other excellent traits, was highly esteemed by the people whom he served. Of course he was eminently useful, and very considerable success attended his ministrations. He had the highest appreciation and admiration for Episcopal Methodism, and yielded the fullest loyalty and devotion to its growing interests. The educational, the Sunday school and other enterprises of the church received his warmest commendation and support. His last charge in the regular work was the Black's Bend circuit, in 1875, your correspondent being his presiding elder. He entered upon the labors of that year in good time, and prosecuted them with zeal; but owing to exposure in his work he contracted a severe cold, and his health began to fail, and by the first of July was so enfeebled as to be compelled to give up the work. Since that time he has been a constant sufferer from an asthmatic affection. He is now at his home in Marengo county, Ala., and unable to preach. The following, from his pastor, the Rev. Gabriel Hawkins, deserves to be recorded. "I saw Bro. Abernethy the other day, and remembered you to him. He reciprocated the kindly greeting very cordially. Said he loved you, and sent his warmest love to you, and wanted to be remembered in your daily prayers. He is much better than he was a few weeks back. Was at my appointment last Sabbath. He longs to get well enough to preach once ... Seems fully in the spirit of ... divine Redeemer, and in heart with us in 'spreading scriptural holiness over these lands.' He stands in readiness at any time for the call of his Master from labor to refreshment." That call may come very soon, for our brother has passed his threescore years and ten. Bro. Hawkins might collect from this venerable servant of the church some thrilling and valuable incidents connected with his life and labors. The pioneer laborers will soon all be gone, and the written records of their labors are very meager indeed; and, while it is possible, let the materials be secured that may be of the utmost importance in furnishing the history of Methodism in Alabama.

Joseph T. Talley entered the Georgia Conference in January, 1833; traveled two years and located. Was readmitted in January, 1842, and, after spending nine years more in that body, transferred to Alabama. Here he labored only one year at that time, when he was granted a location. In November, 1860, he re-entered the itinerant work in the Memphis Conference, and in 1864 received a transfer back to the Alabama Conference, and is still a member thereof. In Georgia he spent two years on missions, and the Americus, Albany, Cuthbert, Lumpkin and Marion circuits received his services. While in the Memphis Conference his labors were in that portion of the body lying in the State of Mississippi. In Alabama his work was on Hayneville, Kingston and other charges. Out of forty-one years of preacher life twenty-five have been in the traveling connection, and in the most of these his name stands among the effective workers. Those who know him well represent Bro. Talley as having been a preacher of earnestness, zeal and power. His unaffected meekness and devout piety have insured for him the respect and love of his brethren.

Owing to a severe lameness he has not been able to get about with that facility and ease necessary to the fullest success in the itinerancy. The writer is fully prepared to sympathize with him because of this disability. His name stands on the list of superannuated preachers, but his home is in Texas, and he is employed this year to supply the Ridgeway circuit, in the Texas Conference.

William B. Adams became a traveling preacher in Alabama in January, 1850, and after seven years in the regular work located, but was local only one year. Twenty-five out of twenty-six years he has been in the Annual Conference. Six years he did the work of a missionary to the blacks in Alabama and west Florida. Some twelve years he was engaged in the circuit work, Jackson and Campbellton (in Florida,) and Woodville, Geneva, Big Creek, Rocky Mount and Troy receiving the benefit of his ministerial and pastoral labors. For a few years he has not been assigned to the fields of active service, but has preached more or less all the time. Being a man of much energy and of industrious habits, he was diligent and zealous on the charges to which he was sent. He has had considerable success in building up the church by adding to its membership. It was a point with him to get souls converted and brought into the folds of Zion.

In 1869, 1870, 1871 and 1872, while your correspondent was his presiding elder, he found Bro. Adams a willing and earnest worker in the Master's vineyard, even to the full extent of the strength of one of his years. He is now a supernumerary, and resides in Pike county, Ala.

Holiness Of Different Kinds.

MR. EDITOR: Several writers seem much interested in the discussion of this important subject. The phrase, "Created holiness," seems liable to objection. Holiness is a thing of too abstract a nature to be distinctly conceived apart from some object with which it is supposed to be connected. The epithet holy is in the Scriptures applied to many inanimate objects. Holiness must be supposed to belong to such things, either as an attribute of their existence, or as a result of the uses in which they are employed and the relations which they are made to sustain to other things. In these cases the word appears to carry with it the ideas of separation, purification and consecration to divine service. In this sense the sanctuary, the Sabbath day, the vessels of the tabernacle, the law and the priests are said to be holy.

The term holiness may doubtless be also legitimately employed, in what may be called a negative sense, to represent the moral condition of an intelligent being. When applied in such a case, holy signifies pure and innocent, implying simply the absence of pollution and guilt. In this sense, no doubt, Adam was holy at his creation. In this sense of the word the advocates of "created holiness" are unquestionably right.

But we understood Rev. S. P. Richardson, who we believe published the first article in opposition to "created holiness," to employ the word holiness in a sense different from either of the above. He maintained the doctrine which had been elaborated by Dr. Bledsoe in his Theodicy, and in several articles in the Southern Review, that holiness in a free moral agent is not an object of creative power. They use the term in the sense in which the Scriptures use it when they say, "Sanctify yourselves, therefore, and 'be ye holy,'" and when they declare that "without holiness no man shall see the Lord."

The advocates of created holiness will scarcely be prepared to affirm that God can create holiness in this sense, since this would be equivalent to charging God with all the sin, as well as with all the misery, in the world; or else, with rejoicing in the misery and guilt of his creatures, refusing to prevent them when he could. We do not think they will accept such consequences; hence they will not advocate a doctrine which necessarily results in them. If God can create holiness in free moral agents, then he must do it. But he does not do it. Then we infer that he cannot.

So, then, the parties in this discussion are not really opposed to each other. Each would doubtless admit the other's position in the sense in which the other intends himself to be understood.

The one party never intended to assert that God could create obedience; the other never intended to deny that he might make a pure and innocent creature. Both would doubtless agree that the maintenance of a state of purity and innocence—that is, practical holiness—depends upon the co-operation of man with the plans of divine grace. H.

[And with the above sensible exposition of the matter, let the discussion rest for awhile.—EDITOR ADVOCATE.

Mighty to Save.

MR. EDITOR: Arriving at our field of labor on the last day in the old year, we held watch-night service, bid farewell to the sad old year, transferred it, and the accumulated burden of misgivings and shortcomings that rested upon us, to his mercy who said: "I will give you rest." After silent prayer and consecration the silence was broken by the singing of the hymn:

"Lord, in the strength of grace,
With a glad heart and free."

We found a spiritual dearth. Here is an infallible test of the status of personal religion: if the church is rushed into darkness in less than five minutes after the benediction, if there be no friendly greetings in the aisles, no lingering-behind element in the church, piety is at a very low ebb. To our sorrow we find it so. Bickerings, strifes, frivolity, uncharitableness, worldliness, especially in the line of dancing, etc., predominated to an astounding extent. Class meetings were a thing of the past. O with what pain and tears must their pastor have gone forth sowing the seed, and watching it fall upon such rocky ground! What could we do in this emergency but go to him who is "mighty to save?"

We had found such churches before. We wrote out a list of the unconverted in the church, and laid it before the Lord, claiming their salvation through Christ, acquainting them of the fact that some one cared for their souls. Class meetings, two prayer meetings each week, and a meeting for the propagation of holiness, were commenced. As soon as we had done our duty—sought out the "old ways"—we had come back to Methodism; and after a week of humiliation and prayer we realized the fact that our God was still "mighty to save." An old sister, after a membership of twenty-two years, became deeply convicted of sin. Night and day for a week, without rest and scarcely any sleep, she sought peace with God. O with what vehemence did she urge her plea! She fasted, she wrestled, she wept. The majesty of her earnestness shone forth in these words, as the big tears rolled from beneath her spectacles: "I will not eat or drink or sleep until I find peace with God." As the dear soul was preparing the writer a cup of coffee she said: "I prayed, and a sweet peace stole over me." She now, being a widow, holds family prayer.

A young man came to the altar. The Lord saved him. It seemed but a slight transition for his soul to pass from darkness to light, on account of his thorough earnestness, and his child-like confidence in the power and willingness of God to save. He joined the church and went right to work for Jesus. Yesterday he claimed the blessing of perfect love in the holiness meeting; and now he feels: Woe is me if I follow not Christ and strive to save souls. He is studying for the ministry. May the Lord grant that he may become an able minister of the gospel, and adorn the itinerancy, as did his father, the late Rev. S. J. Davies.

Following our esteemed Bishop's advice, given at Conference, on the subject of family prayers, we have most incessantly urged it upon our people. Several have taken it up. In one house the children commenced. One has been converted, another has received the blessing of sanctification.

From our holiness meeting a mother and son went home, determined to give themselves no rest until they found it in the blood of Jesus. They are both now rejoicing in its possession. At the conclusion of our last holiness meeting two claimed the blessing, and eight or ten were striving to enter into the holiest through the blood of Jesus. No one felt inclined to leave. One person rose. All tremulous with emotion, and in absolute agony of soul, she cried: "Lord Jesus, I don't want to leave until I have the blessing." Then she fell down upon her knees and prayed. We all followed her example. Soon supplication was changed into thanksgiving, agony to joy, and she rose with a "Bless the Lord, O my soul," upon her lips.

We have six to receive into our church, all of whom are reveling in the luxury of reconciliation and peace with God. These are the beginnings—silvery streaks that tell of future sunshine, drops that tell of future showers, tastes from the vintage of Eschol, olive branches that bespeak for the church future rest.

ALFRED E. CLAY.

Cassandra's Warnings.

MR. EDITOR: Two articles, published some time ago in the Contemporary Review, bearing the above title, call attention to some of the threatening signs of the times in England. The most serious of the perils to which English society is exposed is "what the writer calls 'the divorce between the national creed and the highest intelligence of the nation.'" Mr. Gregg, the writer of the article referred to, affirms that in England, and indeed in nearly all Christian countries, the highest intelligence, or what is considered the highest intelligence, is not in harmony with the nation's creed. In other words, we are notified that the emissaries of infidelity, who have long been diligently at work in journalism, lectures, books, etc., have succeeded in producing a deep impression upon multitudes of cultivated minds that Christianity, as it is generally understood by our evangelical churches, and preached every Lord's day by our evangelical ministers, is a fable.

We have been informed also, in the Duke of Somerset's "Christian Theology and Modern Skepticism," published in England and republished in this country by the Appletons, that this spirit of unbelief with regard to the evangelical doctrines of our churches is so prevalent that none of the existing denominations may be expected to survive the changes of the next fifty years.

Again, Dr. A. T. Bledsoe, the learned and acute editor of the Southern Review, in a recent issue of that journal, speaks of "the deep-seated and widespread infidelity of the present day." Dr. Hoge, of Richmond, also, in a recent address before a large assembly in Baltimore, declared that "a tide of infidelity had set in and was sweeping over the world; that all popular literature was pervaded by it." We are told also by Prof. David Swing, of Chicago, that the number of "Jews, Catholics and infidels has become so greatly increased in this country that the government has no more right to teach the Bible in public schools than it has to teach the Koran." And the editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE not long since had to rebuke some journalists in the Crescent City, who "treat the Bible with about the same respect as is accorded to Gulliver's Travels or to the adventures of Baron Munchausen."

In view of these and other portentous "signs of the times," what is the duty of all true soldiers of the cross? Not to close their eyes and deny that there is any danger, but to stand upon the watch-towers, look out for the enemy; gird on the gospel armor, and fight bravely for "the faith once delivered to the saints." Let us guard more zealously than ever against the inroads of a licentious press; let us liberally support our own literature; and, above all, let us follow the example of Jesus, who went about doing good.

OBITUARIES.

MRS. ANNIE C. FLANDERS, was born in Coleraine, Ireland, on the first of November, 1822. She was of English and Scotch parentage, and was raised a Presbyterian. She came to New Orleans in 1837, and was married to Capt. W. C. Flanders August 21, 1838. She died January 26, 1876.

At the time of her marriage there was no Protestant church in the Third District, where she resided. Some eighteen or twenty persons, however, formed themselves into a weekly prayer meeting. Sister Flanders was one of this band, and signed the petition to Conference for a minister. Rev. Dr. Watkins, being sent, organized the Spain Street mission, out of which grew the present Morgan Street church. Among the very first of those who joined said church was Sister Flanders, joining on probation in January, 1840. She loved the services of the sanctuary, and, unless unavoidably kept away, every Sabbath found her in her place at church.

Our sister was widely known; most tenderly was she loved by a large circle of kindred and friends. Though she was quiet, gentle and undemonstrative, yet her influence for good was felt wherever she moved. The light, the joy and the great warm heart of her home, she was its center of love, around whom entwined the family affections. By her neighbors and friends she was prized for her kindly attentions, and many acts of disinterested friendship and love. Those who were in trouble and affliction ever found her a sympathizing and ready friend, and the poor will, for long years to come, remember her with grateful hearts; white and black, rich and poor, alike mourn for her.

Sister Flanders had many cares, and at times was subjected to heavy afflictions. One after another her little ones died, and her heart seemed ready to break; yet during this season of sore trial her faith in God was firm and unshaken. She sought to lead her children into "the ways of pleasantness and the paths of peace," and God blessed her therein, for her surviving daughters are all adorning by their walk and conversation the Christian profession they early made.

Sick for months, Sister Flanders was often in great pain, but she never murmured or complained. She laid all on Jesus, saying that he would do with her as might seem best to him. She desired to live only for the sake of her family; but, if God wanted her, she was ready to go to him. She exhorted all to live for Christ and to meet her in heaven, not even forgetting her sisters in Philadelphia, to whom she sent messages of love. In her latest moments, when she could no longer speak, a sister, laying beside her and holding her hand, sang softly in her ear, "Jesus, lover of my soul." At the line, "While the nearer waters roll," the dying saint pressed the hand of the singing sister, meaning, doubtless, to betoken that Jesus was with her, and, holding her in his loving embrace, was passing through the waters with her, and bearing her up, over and beyond the tide, to the sweet, eternal rest that remaineth to the people of God. Without a sigh she "fell on sleep," as though she had but closed her eyes for the rest of a single night. With most tranquil and fearless composure she sank to the rest for which she had been prepared by the influence of a lively faith, and by a course of uniform and exemplary godliness. She lived well and she died well. Found "faithful unto death," she hath "the crown of life."

J. T. S.

MISS MATTIE HAMILTON MCCAULEY, youngest child of Hamilton and Martha B. McCauley, of Madison county, Miss., died at the residence of her brother-in-law, W. R. Stuart, in Ocean Springs, Miss., on the nineteenth of February, 1876. Miss McCauley was religious from her early childhood, but at a meeting in Sharon, Miss., in 1862, she was formally received into the Methodist Episcopal Church South by the Rev. H. H. Montgomery. Her life was in accord with the profession then publicly made, and her progress in the grace and knowledge of Christ was manifest to the end of her life. She was firm in her convictions of right and duty, and most conscientious in conforming her life to the gospel standard. Some portion of every day was set apart for prayer and the study of the Bible, and the services of the house of God were always greatly prized and enjoyed. The books she read, the pictures and works of art which adorned her room, and the tenor of her conversation exhibited a pure and cultivated taste, and a spirit deeply imbued with devotional feeling. With little demonstration, with profound humility, she walked quietly and tranquilly with her God. Her last years were largely devoted to her invalid sister, Mrs. W. R. Stuart, in whose home her beautiful and unselfish ministry afforded a daily illustration of the sweetest and noblest traits of the Christian character. Her helpful presence in that home was a perpetual sunshine, and a benediction upon all that it contained. On the morning of her death she was apparently in her usual health, breakfasted with the family, and spent some time in pruning some of her favorite shrubs and flowers. The first intimation, shortly after she had retired to her room, was a cry of distress. She was found in almost speechless agony, suffering probably from neuralgia of the heart, and about twelve meridian, two hours after, she was at home in heaven. No dying testimony was left, and happily, none was needed. She lived with reference to the final hour—her lamp was burning, she was ready. A sainted father, and a brother whose dying words were blessed to her own religious awakening, preceded her to the tearless shore. A mother, sister and brother remain to cherish the memory of a noble and beautiful life, and, in God's own time, to follow her to that bright world, where they shall see the King in his beauty, and behold the land that is very far off.

LINUS PARKER.

ARTHUR SKIPPER was born December 3, 1795, in Oree district, S. C., and died at the residence of his son-in-law, William Robbins, in Bibb county, Ala., on the nineteenth day of January, 1876, in his eighty-first year.

When about twenty-five years of age he was married to Miss Nancy Dorsey, of Georgetown, S. C., and soon after his marriage removed to Perry county, Ala., where he professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. After a few years' residence in Perry county he removed to Scottsville, Bibb county, Ala., where he remained for a number of years, highly respected and esteemed by all who knew him. Being a zealous and faithful member of the church, his house was a home for preachers where they were ever welcome to its hospitalities. Some years ago he moved from Scottsville to Mississippi, but after the death of his wife he returned to Alabama to spend the last days with his daughter. His last illness was painful and severe. For about four years he suffered with a cancer on the hand, and it is difficult even to imagine the severity of his sufferings. Notwithstanding this, he often spoke of his change, and, though sometimes in seeming doubt, he often expressed himself being fully satisfied of his acceptance with God, and expressed a desire that the will of the Lord be accomplished. His last moments were rational and peaceful, and at about three o'clock on the afternoon of January 19 he quietly breathed his last.

R. A. MIEARS.

BRO. J. A. COOPER died October 16, 1875, aged forty-three years. He was converted, as trustee and steward, with the Citronelle circuit. His place was vacant at our last quarterly meeting. His death was felt to be a loss to the church. God can supply his place, and he alone. Bro. Cooper was an honest man. It might truthfully be said of him that he justly, loved mercy and walked humbly with God. His example gave encouragement to all who wished to keep the commandments and administered reproof to transgressors. He felt his end approaching and put his house in order. He did not have, for some time, a bright assurance given by a gracious Father to the children of his affection; but it is reported that he had a short while before his death have found him whom we all need—Jesus." We are cheered by the hope that our brother has indeed passed from death unto life—from earth to heaven. We extend to the family our Christian sympathy.

F. M. PETERS.

IN MEMORIAM.

MRS. N. B. WIER, after a long and painful illness with hemorrhagic malarial fever, departed this life on the eighth day of December, 1875, in the sixtieth year of her age.

In early life she attached herself to the Methodist Church, and was happily converted at a secret prayer meeting held by herself and schoolmates. She had been a consistent member of the church for more than a century. In moral worth and the Christian graces she had few superior. In the full possession of her mental faculties, she met death calmly, without regrets for the past or fears for the future. With confidence and composure she looked forward to a blessed immortality and died in the full triumph of a living faith.

D. M. K.

MAYO CREEK, La., Jan. 15, 1876.

DIED, in Selma, Ala., December 31, 1875, Mr. J. H. SMITH. Brother Smith was for years an acceptable member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and died in great peace. He was truly a good man, an exemplary Christian, and loved the church. He was sick for nearly a year, but bore his sufferings patiently, and his last breath was spent in prayer. He now sleeps in Jesus and has entered into rest. May God bless the bereaved widow, and extend over her the sheltering wing of his providence and grace.

He that speaks the truth will find himself in sufficiently dramatic situations.

A CANTICLE.

BY JULIET C. MARSH.

When I can look at summer's light go down,
Across gray meadows that have lost their bloom,
And watch the leaves drop slow and dry and brown,
Throughout the chilliness of the autumn gloom,
When I can see all nature turn to dust,
And have no fear—knowing another spring
Will the old sweetness bring—
Then I have learned to trust.

When I can haste, with willing, humble feet,
To bid a beggar enter from the rain;
When I can stoop, with human jollity sweet,
To take a hand that has a human stain;
When I for every sinner have a plea,
Seeing the angel possible in each face,
And find in all some grace—
Then I have charity.

When I can trust for goods, both small and great,
And have no anxious thought for day or year;
When I can love all men, and cast out hate
As utterly as I have cast out fear;
When I am through with all that life can give
Of anything—the sweet and bitter done,
When all the thread is spun—
Heard have learned to live.

The Churchman.

Disraeli in His Old Age.

I question whether I ever saw an older face than that of Mr. Disraeli seems to be in certain lights. We have older men—far older men—in our public life here, where a man of fifty is still only a political stripling. Mr. Disraeli is set down in the "Parliamentary Companion" as scarcely yet quite seventy. I believe some good-natured person has lately taken pains to prove that he is a year older. Still, even if that were so, seventy-three years would place him in the second rank, according to seniority, of our statesmen. But Disraeli has not yet accepted the decrees of fate. He has not yet put off the appearance and the ways of youth. He dresses like a young man; he tries to talk like a young man; at a distance, and when he is erect and not in motion, he still looks almost like a sort of young man. But the face, with its fallen cheeks and lips, its deep shaky wrinkles, its awful hollows, its frequent convulsive movements, the thin wisps of hair striving to keep their color and to cover the bald places, the yellow, muddy, pasty tint spreading from forehead to chin, the eyes that are occasionally aroused under the impulse of some excitement to an unnatural glitter—all this seems to suggest one of the most fearful forms in which vindictive old age punishes and humbles those who have shown themselves obstinate in resisting her approach. Sometimes, I cannot look at the prime minister of Great Britain without being reminded of Mrs. Newton in "Dombey and Son." Sometimes, indeed, a more picturesque and heroic idea suggests itself, and Mr. Disraeli looks like a broken, worn, plucked, tattered, old eagle, whose fights and foes have left him almost nothing of his early self but eyes and claws and beak. But always the face suggests that, like Campbell's "Ontalissi," "it is" death-cold." It is curious to observe the little pause which Mr. Disraeli makes at the bar of the House—or at least the place where the bar ought to be—before he ventures on the task of walking up the floor to his accustomed bench. Evidently he desires to show an appearance of energy and youthful vigor as he passes up the floor under every eye. He stops for a moment at the bar and steadies himself as you sometimes see a man who has drunk too much endeavor to steady himself before crossing a street. He surveys the distance, makes perhaps a little false start or two, and then goes at it. The attempt is usually very successful—a little too well done, perhaps, for reality. He accomplishes the journey in one stroke, if I may use such an expression, without stopping to take breath or faltering, but with a sort of determination and dignity which shows how much it costs to be young and jaunty still. Peel is believed to imitate Lord Palmerston." But Palmerston at fifty had no more idea of collecting his strength, of "pulling himself together" for a jaunty walk up the floor than a man of forty would. He bowled along without thinking of it. I fear our statesmen are growing degenerate. Mr. Gladstone retires at sixty-six, and Mr. Disraeli has to affect to be still young and sprightly. I heard Lord Lyndhurst make a very effective speech in the House of Lords where he was ninety years old; and Earl Russell is still busy in writing books and pamphlets upon all manner of subjects, whether he knows anything about them or not, and corresponding with the representatives of foreign revolutions, whether he understands what they want or not; and he is, I think, eighty-four years old; and he made the acquaintance in the presence of the Countess of Albany, the widow of Charles Edward, the Young Chevalier! Just turn that matter up in your mind. The House of Lords was addressed more than once in session by a nobleman who had in his day talked with the widow of Bonnie Prince Charlie! There, if you like, is a statesman who might properly be allowed to pause and gather strength before attempting a rapid walk up the floor of a Parliamentary House.—Justin McCarthy, in the Galaxy.

Welsh Preaching and Preachers.

The great Welsh preacher was a kind of bard. He knew nothing of his sermons; he carried no notes or writings with him to his pulpit or platform; but he made the lore and doctrine of religious metaphysics as rich to the minstrelsy and music of speech. On the other hand, he did not indulge himself in casting about wildfire. All had been thoroughly prepared and rooted in his understanding; and then he went with his sermon, which was a kind of high song, to chant it over the hearts of the multitude. We shall have occasion to show, by many instances from the lives of their great men, how their own hearts had been marvelously prepared.

There is a pleasant anecdote told of one of them, Griffyth of Caernarvon, how he had to preach one night. Before preaching, staying at a farmhouse on the spot, he desired permission to retire to a private room before the service began. He remained there a considerable time. The congregation had assembled, and, still he did not come; there was no sign of his making his appearance. The good man of the house sent the servant to request him to come, for the people had been for some time assembled and waiting. Approaching the room, she heard what seemed to her to be a conversation going on between two persons in a subdued tone of voice, and she caught from Mr. Griffyth the expression: "I will not go unless You come with me." She went back to her master and said: "There is some one with Mr. Griffyth, and he is telling him he will not go unless the other one will come too; but I did not hear the other reply, so I think he will not come to-night." "Yes, yes," said the farmer; "he will come, and I warrant the Other will come too, if matters are as you say between them; but we had better begin by singing and reading until the two come." And the story goes on to say that, at length, Mr. Griffyth did come, and the Other with him; for they had a very extraordinary meeting that night, and the whole neighborhood was stirred by it, and numbers were changed and converted. It was Williams of Wern who used to tell of this pleasing anecdote; it is an anecdote of one man, but, so far as we have been able to see, it illustrates the way in which they all prepared themselves before they began to speak.

It must not be supposed from this that they imagined that prayer was to dispense with preparation. Their great preachers studied hard and deeply; and Williams, of Wern, one of the greatest of them all, says: "In order to be a good preacher, usefulness must be the grand aim; usefulness must choose the text and divide it, usefulness must compose the sermon, and sit at the helm during its delivery. If the introduction be not clear and pertinent, it is evident the preacher does not know whither he is going; and if the inferences are of the same character, it is obvious he does not know where he has been. Unstudied sermons are not worth having. Who would trust his life in the hands of a physician who had never thought of his profession?" But they never permitted the understanding to supersede emotion; and when they met the people face to face, they went prepared, warmed and kindled, and ready to warm and kindle.

Thus their sermons became a sort of inspired song, full of imagination—imagination very often and usually deriving its imagery from no far-off and recondite allusions—never losing itself in a flowery wilderness of expressions, but honestly ministered to by the things and affairs of ordinary life, and therefore instantly preacher and people, in emotion, were one.—Parton Hood.

A SILVER QUARTER WITH A HISTORY.—Fifteen years ago Mrs. Louis German lost a silver twenty-five cent piece, upon one side of which he had engraved his name and place of business. The piece was bright and new when he engraved it, and wore it as a charm to his watch chain. As the trinket was of small value, it was, of course, forgotten soon after its loss, and after a year or two Mr. German never expected to see it again. A few days ago an Indiana farmer drove into New Albany to purchase goods, and in the money paid for them was the identical piece of coin bearing Mrs. German's name. The gentleman, a New Albany merchant, who received the money came over to Louisville yesterday, and returned it to the owner. The piece bore upon its surface the appearance of having been in constant use. As there has been no specie circulation during the last fifteen years, the finder of the quarter adopted it as an ornament for his guard or chain.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Hardly anything is known of the wealth of the Rothschilds; but a French writer of repute estimates the combined wealth of the united family at $3,000,000,000. It is altogether fabulous sum for one family, and yet it may be within the limits of truth. But the London World, which ought to be good authority on the subject, says of the late Sir Anthony Rothschild that it should be the boast of his family that he "died and left but little behind him." That little, however, enabled him to bestow pittances of £15,000 per annum on his widow, £70,000 upon his son-in-law a Christian, and £200,000 to each of his daughters. His title and his real estate went to his nephew. These sums are insignificant, and do not by any means afford an indication of his individual right to a share of the Rothschilds property, the vast amount of which none but the members of the family can know.

"I gaze on beauty, and may be myself deformed: I admire the light, and may yet dwell in darkness; but if the light of the countenance of God rests upon me, I shall become like unto him; the lineaments of his visage will be on me, and the great outlines of his attributes will be mine. Oh, wondrous glass, which thus renders the beholder lovely! Oh, admirable mirror, which reflects not self with its imperfectness, but gives a perfect image to those that are unlovely.—Spurgeon.

When all that is worldly turns to dross around us, books only retain their steady shine. When friends grow cold, and the converse of intimates languishes into vapid civility and commonplace, these only continue the unaltered countenance of better days, and cheer us with that true friendship which never deceived hope or deserted sorrow.—Washington Irving.

The movement of duty, under the influence of holy love of God, constitutes what we call good works.—Erskine.

Wit of Sidney Smith.

"I am convinced digestion is the great secret of life; and that character, talents, virtues and qualities are powerfully affected by beef, mutton, pie crust and rich soups. I have often thought I could feed or starve men into many virtues and vices, and affect them more with my instruments of cookery than Orpheus could do formerly with his lyre."

His passion for London was remarkable. "All lives out of London are mistakes more or less grievous, but mistakes. I have no relish for the country—it is a kind of healthy grave. I look forward anxiously to the return of bad weather, coal fires and good society in a crowded city. Rational conversation in sufficient quantities is only to be had from the congregation of a million of people in one spot."

"While traveling on the sea coast for Mrs. Smith's health he said he was taken by the officers of the Prerogatives service for a brandy merchant waiting an opportunity to smuggle goods on a large scale."

He closes a letter with: "I wish you many long and hot dinners with lords and ladies, wits and poets."

"Why so modest as to stand for a place in Scotland? Who humbled you into a notion that you were so destitute of probity, originality and talents as to stand a chance of success? I left you with far more adequate conceptions of yourself, and left you with a permanent and injured blush for your venal city; and in a short time you deem yourself qualified in corruption to be a candidate for its honors."—Letter to Francis Jeffrey.

"Parr knew perfectly well his conviction is infinitely beyond his books, as his fame is beyond his merits."—Christian Observer.

One of the most interesting things in the Holy Land is the fact that one meets everywhere, in daily life, the things that illustrate the word of the Lord. The streets of Jerusalem are very narrow, and no one is allowed to go out at night without a light. Throw open your lattice in the evening and look out; you will see what seem to be little stars twinkling on the pavement. You will hear the clatter of sandals as the late traveler rattles along. As the party approaches you will see that he has a little lamp fastened to his foot, to make his step a safe one. In an instant the verse comes to your memory, written in that city three thousand years ago: "Thy word is a lamp to my feet and a light to my path."

CARRYING WASHINGTON ON THE BACK.—After the Revolutionary war Washington and many of the army officers, then living in New York, and frequently in each other's houses. My grandfather, Dr. John Cochrane surgeon-and director general of the military hospital of the army, residing at one of these, had directed his son, my uncle, then a lad, to come in the evening and escort him home. As the son of the doctor he was admitted to the dining-room, where, in the midst of their hilarity, he saw Gouverneur Morris, who was talking, turn suddenly toward Washington, next to whom he was seated; and, clapping him on the back, heard him cry out: "Wasn't it so, old boy?" Washington, my uncle said, sat unmoved, and a death-like silence fell upon the whole company, which soon, after quietly broke up. It was understood that the scene was occasioned by a wager that a liberty could be taken with Washington.—John Cochrane, in the New York Sun.

A Scotch minister was once busy catechising his young parishioners before the congregation, when he put the usual first question to a stout girl whose father kept a public house, "What is your name?" No reply. The question having been repeated, the girl replied: "Name o' your sin, Mr. Minister; ye ken my name weel enough. D'ye no say, when ye come to our house o' a night, 'Bet, bring me some ale?'" The congregation, forgetting the sacredness of the place, were in a broad grin, and the parson looked daggers.

Fontenelle, who lived nearly a century, in his old age retained his relish for asparagus. He liked it served with oil, while his friend, Cardinal Dubois, liked it with sauce. One day, when the cardinal was coming to dine with him, he ordered one-half of the asparagus to be served in oil and the other half in sauce. Just at the dinner hour news came of the sudden death of the cardinal. Instantly Fontenelle called out loudly to his cook: "All the asparagus in oil!" The phrase has become a proverb.

Two sons of the Emerald Isle paid a visit to Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, recently. They visited the water works. Looking on with amazement at the great turbine wheels while in motion, one exclaimed to the other: "Faith, Pat, the Americans must be quare people; they must have their wather ground before they can drink it."

Never yet did there exist a full faith in the divine word, by whose light as well as immortality was brought into the world, which did not expand the intellect, while it purified the heart; which did not multiply the aims and objects of the understanding, while it fixed and simplified those of the desires and passions.—Coleridge.

If you are a wise man you will treat the world very much as the moon treats it—show it only one side of yourself, seldom show too much of yourself at a time, and be calm, cool and polished; but look at every side of the world.

A Swiss paper has the following: In a Broadway shop window is displayed this notice: "Boy wanted, that has fully rested himself and is not too intellectual."

Every person complains of the badness of memory, but none of their defective judgment.

Religious Intelligence.

—Rev. Alphonse Dupont, formerly a Roman Catholic priest, has taken orders at Syracuse in the Episcopal Church.

—When last heard from, the members of the Livingstonia mission (Free Church of Scotland) had entered upon the Zambesi river and were preparing to go into the interior.

—The president of the Catholic Association of Great Britain, the Duke of Norfolk, calls for subscriptions to aid the persecuted German priests, and heads the paper with $5,000.

ENGLAND.—Lord Garvah was recently baptized into the fellowship of Rev. Mr. Churrington's church, in East London. He is twenty-six years old, and gives evidence of genuine conversion.

—The California Advocate says: Bro. Gibson held his first Chinese love-feast on Sunday. Thirty-five persons gave a relation of Christian experience, and thirty persons partook of the communion.

—The Young Men's Christian Association of Cleveland have erected a building especially for the newsboys and bootblacks of the city. Special exercises are held for them in the Young Men's Christian Association chapel on Sabbath afternoons.

—During the month of September two ship-loads of slaves, rescued by British cruisers, were landed at Frere Town, the new settlement on the Island of Mombas, Eastern Africa. Many of these freedmen are mere children, and come into the hands of the missionaries in the most wretched condition.

—The secretary of the Northern Presbyterian Missionary Society reports that of the $550,000 which was appropriated to the work of the present year, $467,789 had been raised in the first eight months, ending December 31, 1875. This leaves $382,-211 to be accounted for in the next four months, and is an average of $95,500 per month.

—The Waldensians have now nearly as many communicants outside of the "valleys" as in them. It is, therefore, probable that a general assembly will be formed for all the Presbyterians in Italy, with two inferior synodical church courts—one for the mountains and one for the plains. Thus the Waldenses, divested of all remaining exclusiveness, will be a national church for all Italy.

—Two coadjutor bishops are proposed for those parts of India where the greatest number of converts have been gathered. Rev. E. Sargent, a veteran agent of the Church Missionary Society, is to be the bishop for Tinnevelly, and Dr. Caldwell, of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, is to be the bishop in Travancore. Both are liberally-minded men, of a different stamp from the present bishops of Calcutta and Bombay.

SOUTH AFRICA.—The South African Christian conference, which was recently held at King William's Town, was an occasion of great interest. It consisted of the European Christians, assembled to confer together on matters connected with their mission work, and to seek the divine blessing upon it. Wonderfully did the blessing of God rest on the assembly, and glorious results followed. These are among the blessings which have followed the Conference: The restitution of the Bible society; the establishment of an experienced Christian soldier as town missionary and garrison Scripture reader; the formation of an Association of young men for the study of God's word. But that for which most praise must be given is that the scattered churches and missions of South Africa were, in the person of a few of their representatives here, gathered together in one body round their Lord and King. Prayer was made for this Conference at Capetown, Queenstown, Pieter Maritzburg, Durban, and other towns, throughout its sessions; and the North and South met in prayer, in one spirit, with the church assembled at King William's Town. The subject was: "In him dwelleth all the fullness of the godhead bodily." "And ye are complete in him who is the head of all principality and power." Praise, praise, praise the Lord, for he has in spirit visited his people in South Africa!

—The Missionary Herald very properly draws attention to a letter from Marsoyan, Asia Minor, appearing in its August number, and affording a very happy illustration of what can be done for Christ by direct personal effort. One of the missionary ladies, Mrs. Schneider, lived near one of the worst streets of the city. From this street she began, in a small way, to gather a Sunday school. For some time there was much mockery and opposition; but the houses of the opposers were fearlessly and faithfully visited until they became friends. They came to the Sunday school, and came to read on week-days. An evening school was opened for those who could not come in the day-time, and soon it became manifest that the religion of Jesus was taking hold upon that wicked street. The school increased from a few boys and girls to 100; then the men began to come, and nearly double this number on an average attendance. And now the available spaces of the house are packed with eager classes of old and young. For this Sunday school, gathered almost entirely from non-Protestant, non-chapel-going people, Mrs. Schneider would like to have a mud chapel built, which American friends will surely not refuse to do. A quarter of a mile away Mrs. Leonard has gathered a school in the same way. It numbers more than 100, and is composed almost entirely of non-Protestants. At the same hour 400 adults and children are being taught in the churches, while in another place a young shoemaker, not a church member, is teaching a little school, composed of his Armenian neighbors. The Armenian authorities have become alarmed; but their orders avail nothing against this tide of direct effort for the outcast.—Independent.

THE HONEY BIRD.

The honey bird, my children,
Lives far and far away,
Where burning suns are heating
Through Africa's tropic day.

There, deep in somber forests,
Are colonies of bees,
Who hive their golden honey
In hearts of hollow trees.

The hunters seek to find it;
Their eyes are sharp and bright;
Their forms are lithe and agile;
Their steps are quick and light.

But they might seek forever
Forever and a day;
Unless to find the honey
A bird should show the way.

A lovely bird that flashes
With sudden gleam of light;
And then, returning, utters
A cry of rare delight—

A cheerful "Follow! Follow!
As if it fain would say:
"The bees and I are neighbors,
And I can tell the way."

That ringing "Follow! Follow!"
Allures the hunters on Until their quest is ended;
The feast of nectar won.

And which hath sweeter promise,
The honey bird or bee,
I ask you, little children,
It is not plain to me.

We cannot all make honey;
But some can find it out,
And show its hive to others—
A gracious thing, no doubt.

And in this world of trickery
And tangles, if you please,
One likes to know the birds who
Are neighbors to the bees.

Little Willie.

MY DEAR CHILDREN: I will tell you of little Willie, a dear little boy, who was a boy in the ante-bellum days. When he was very young—just beginning to talk—he was taught by a loving mother to say his prayers: "Now I lay me down to sleep." When he grew older there was a revival in his town, and he was very attentive. Although only about seven years old, he would attend the night service, and never go to sleep, and was always at the altar for prayer. His papa thought him too young; but he would say: "I am no younger than the little Samuel you tell me of in the Bible, who was called of God." After that his father had nothing more to say; so little Willie was always at his place. After the close of that meeting he would get the children, and especially the little negroes on his father's place, and read to them from the Bible; and in a chair for a stand would preach to them. He did this till his twelfth year, when I heard him preach an excellent sermon. He felt he was called of God to preach the gospel, and was licensed to exhort by the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and filled many vacant places. As the war by this time was on us, and fathers, sons and brothers had hearkened to the call, and gone out to battle for our rights, Willie did all he could, and was successful in keeping up the Thursday night prayer meeting. At first many went from mere curiosity to hear the boy preacher he was very small for his years. So earnest was he, and so upright was his daily walk, that he was loved and honored by all, and did much good. Many were brought to the foot of the cross, and found comfort in the love and forgiveness of our blessed God.

Time rolled on, the Yankees gained ground, and soon the little village of Willie's home was in danger of being destroyed by fire, as Gen. Sherman had issued orders for its destruction. Every one was in trouble. Our hearts trembled within us. What must we do?" was the cry. When the church bell tolled its solemn call—for the hand that held the rope was much troubled—Willie said: "Come and let us pray together to the Lord. He alone can help us." A few of the faithful met with him. All day they cried for help. The Yankees began to come in; for four days they came. For four days this faithful band prayed around the altar of God. "Let us give up the enemy is on us." "No; let us still trust in the Lord. No home is yet destroyed. Let us still pray." On the fifth morning a lovely Sabbath the enemy began, at early dawn, to form into line. What are they going to do? The fife and drum are sounding the body is in motion. Soon we see them pass quietly away, Gen. Sherman at their head. Not a thing was rifled, not a house burned. Slowly they move along. The joyful news spreads—they are leaving. The joy bells ring out clear and strong. "Come and worship under your own roof," they seemed to say; and I tell you the building could not hold all that went up to the house of God to worship that day; and Willie's discourse would have done honor to an older head than his. Can you doubt that the prayers of the faithful few were the means of saving that village? I don't. Willie, when I last heard from him, was a faithful minister a member of our Conference.

Now, my little friend, it is with you to make as good a man as did this boy. Soon our old men will pass away, and you must fill their places. Begin now to call on God for help; and who can tell but that you may one day be as useful a minister as the most eminent who now stands upon the walls of Zion?

From Our Little Friends.

HOUSTON, TEXAS, Feb. 18, 1876.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: It has been but a few months since I wrote to your valuable paper, and I thought I would write again and tell you about my missionary hen. Ma gave me one over one year ago, but she has never done much for the missions. But I think she will redeem herself before long; if she don't I shall get another very soon. It is true she has aided the missionaries some, which is better than nothing. I think Dannie D. Willis' hen much smarter than the lady's he mentioned. I would like to have one just like Iris.

I would like so much to see Grandpa Goodale. In my mind's eye I can picture him—a very old man, sitting by a big warm fire, in an easy chair, with spectacles on, paper and pen in his hand, writing for us children. But may be I am wrong. I don't think Tom Sinkle's yarns amount to much; but his words amount to very big ones. I like Aunt Mollie's stories she tells Tom. I will stop—this letter is growing too long. Your little friend,

MR. EDITOR: I have noticed that a great many children write letters to the ADVOCATE, and I thought you would like to hear from a little boy who lives way down south in Florida. I am nearly twelve years old. My father lives in the country, two miles and a half from the village of Bartow. We have a nice new school-house built a mile from our house, where I go to school. I am studying reading, spelling, dictionary, definer, grammar and arithmetic. We boys generally play base at recess, and have fine times. My father preaches at Bartow once a month, and we go there to church. We have some nice sweet orange-trees, and every year I help to gather them for market.

Dan's Dinner.

A TRUE STORY.

Dan is a watch dog in an iron foundry, and is always fed by his master at one o'clock. Dan knows the time, and is as punctual as the clock, waiting in the appointed place with an air of calm satisfaction delightful to behold. The other day his master came in with his meat, but was called away at the instant; and, as it was not quite time, he hung it upon a nail, meaning to return directly. Dan didn't like that arrangement, but sat down and waited, with a resigned expression, both funny and pathetic. The clock struck, but no one came, and Dan barked to remind his master that dinner waited. Master didn't hear, and there hung the delicious meat, just out of reach, in the most tantalizing manner. Dan bore it as long as he could, thought over his wrongs, and growled over his opinion that it was a mean shame to keep a hard-working fellow waiting when he was raveneously hungry. Presently he made up his mind that he wouldn't bear it. He had a right to that meat, and he would have it in spite of other people's neglect. Up he jumped, took a good look, gave a spring, and—didn't get it. Over and over he tried, growing excited as he leaped up and bounded down, each time getting just one momentary sniff as he snapped and missed.

One of the workmen, attracted by the noise, peeped in at a window behind him, and, enjoying the fun, hoped when Dan would give it up. But Dan had no thought of giving it up, for "Never despair" was his motto; so he jumped and pawed and snatched till he was exhausted, then he sat down to consider the matter.

Being a sensible dog, he soon had a bright idea, and astonished his watcher by dragging and pushing, with teeth and head, a chair to the wall, just under the meat. Having fixed it to his mind, he stepped into it, reached up, and with a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull together, brought down the meat. He surveyed it with an air of pride, as well he might, after such a struggle for it, and then devoured it with a relish which hunger and hard work always give to one's meals; while the man went away to tell the story, and glorify sensible old Dan.—Chatterbox.

FORCE OF HABIT.—There is an Eastern tale of a magician who discovered, by incantation, that the philosopher's stone lay on the bed of a certain river, but was unable to determine its exact locality. He therefore strolled along the bank with a piece of iron, to which he applied successively all the pebbles he found. As one after another they produced no change in the metal he flung them into the stream. At last he hit on the object of his search, and the iron became gold. In his hand; but, alas! he had become so accustomed to the "touch and go" movement that the real stone was involuntarily thrown into the river after the others, and lost to him forever.

"WE ARE THE BUDS."—Once a Sabbath school teacher was trying to make a class of little boys and girls understand the lessons on St. John xv, 7. He said:

"Jesus is the vine and we are the branches. We get our life and happiness from him."

"Yes," said a little boy, "Jesus is the vine, grown-up people are the branches, and we are the buds."

The Long Run.

There is a long future for man, embracing the fleeting years on earth and the endless hereafter. Taking both worlds into the account, it is better to do right than to yield to what seems to be a temporary expediency. If godliness were not profitable for all things, and if it had no promise for the life that now is, it would still be wise to choose that course which in the end assures our eternal happiness. Our present condition, however uncomfortable, is as nothing compared with that which may be endlessly miserable. The Christian, in the long run, comes out the best. Lazarus was the successful man, and Dives was a complete failure. John the Baptist lost his head and gained a crown, while Herod wore an earthly crown and lost his soul. The good men who have failed in this world have often been the most successful. Those who have lived, and died in poverty, rather than surrender their consciences and sell their souls, have gained an incorruptible inheritance. As far as there is a just and holy God, and a future life, it is best to be upright, honest and religious, whatever present sacrifices these may demand. If truth crushed to earth should never rise again in this world, we should hold to it, nevertheless, because there is to be a reckoning, and a final triumph of the right. In view of this consummation, if there be no nearer deliverance, good men can wait, even as God can, and maintain their integrity until all wrongs are redressed at the judgment bar. They are to do what they can for the right, and for the overthrow of every form of vice and corruption, but they are not to become faint-hearted, or to question the wisdom of keeping themselves clean from the polluting bribes which the compromise of principle might secure.

But there is a long run of affairs in this world, and with reference to this the right is always to be chosen. The half-educated boy who jumps at office into a business or profession seems to have the advantage of another who waits for more complete discipline and culture; but in the end, other things being equal, the lad that tarried comes out ahead. In the pursuit of gain there are constant temptations to reckless speculation, to lottery gambling and other expedients, by which money may be made quickly and easily. In business of every sort there is so much fraud and dishonesty that the upright man finds it difficult to sustain himself and to meet the tide of competition. It has come to be doubted whether a man can succeed in trade and be perfectly conscientious and truthful. Such is the pressure of clap-trap, humbug and duplicity that some even doubt the possibility of making a competent support by means strictly honorable and pure.

If this were so it should make no difference. But we believe, even in this wicked world, there is a reward for the righteous, and that honest men can make a living. They must not expect to amass wealth suddenly, they must not aspire to high style, and to keep up with the pretentious ways of the rich. Neither must they aim to succeed by any other arts than those of plodding industry and frugality. No man can live without work, and be honest. Neither is he likely to long maintain his integrity if he spends money before it is earned. The honest and industrious may get along slowly, but they will get along, and in the end they will be more prosperous than those who have sought what they considered an easier road to fortune. In the long run character wins. "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor rather than silver and gold." The choice is made without regard to consequences, and because there are better things than great riches; but there are in it the elements of a true worldly prosperity. Some rascals die rich, but a great many more die in poverty. Notwithstanding the circumstances which for the past ten years have been exceptionally favorable for peculation and fraud, the honest men are better off than the rogues. Our young men may be sure that all real success can and must be secured by honest industry and honorable enterprise. These qualities are best in the long run, even in a business point of view.

In matters of public interest that engage our attention as citizens there is a short-sighted view which leads to disaster, and a patient prescience which brings about a permanent prosperity. A State lottery puts $40,000 into the public treasury, but it educates the people to gambling, leads our young men away from the paths of honest toil, and in the end fills the land with vice and idleness, and impoverishes the country. In our political relations and responsibilities there may be compromise where principles are not involved, but the Christian citizen must do right. He cannot vote for thieves or drunkards; neither, in hope of some immediate advantage, can he have fellowship with the throne of iniquity. Our Southern people have before them a very simple and easily-comprehended policy. They must do right, plant themselves upon the constitution, and in all things be just, law-abiding, and never sell out their birthright of honor and liberty for any mess of political pottage. The present anomalous condition cannot last long. Vigilance, wisdom, prudence and patience will win some day.

It looks like a slow way to convert the world to begin in the home nursery and the Sunday school, and to plant Christian schools all over heathen lands. It will take a good while to stop drunkenness and other vices by guarding the children against them, but it will pay at last.

And thus we might go on with our homily. In our individual interests we must take in both time and eternity; in our earthly plans and pursuits we must look to the end; in the great questions of policy in Church and State the long run should have the preponderating influence. Truth and righteousness are things that wear, and that conquer if we give them time enough. They may seem to be out of fashion, dead and imperative at certain periods, but they are still strong in the throne of God, and will ultimately assert their sway. The ephemeron's world is the leaf on which it dwells, and its life is bounded by a sunny day; but God's providence takes in generations and ages, and its unfoldings cover a vast field. On this wide field the ancient seer was confident of the divine oversight and faithfulness: "For the eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward him." The greed of pleasure and gain which sacrifices character and forfeits the favor of God is a stupendous folly. Goodness has bottom, and will gain the prize. Eye-service and time-serving, and all kinds of trifling with conscience and right, will end in confusion and humiliation. Those who reject the prizes of dishonesty and lying, and stick to principle, have something left, even if the end be poverty; and those who have chosen Christ rather than defile their souls have "that good part" which shall not be taken from them. Mary's choice was best in the long run, so was that of Moses; so is ours, if we have taken God for our portion.

Vera Cruz.

VERA CRUZ, February 15, 1876.

MR. EDITOR: After a tedious trip of five days we dropped anchor this morning within a quarter of a mile of the castle of San Juan de Ulloa, and three-quarters of a mile of the city of Vera Cruz. A very stiff norther prevents our landing, and will during the day. This is a very exposed roadstead, and requires good anchors and heavy cables. The best of Vera Cruz is the outside of it. It has an antique aspect, with its mosque domes and campanile towers, originally white, but now having somewhat the creamy look of old lace. It is four blocks wide from the sea, and some twelve or fifteen long. The wall which surrounds the town is twelve feet high, built of coral, with loop-holes fringing the line of stone under the cap—formidable in the old musket and smooth-bore period of military science, but now a study for tourists with antiquarian tendencies.

On our way down the coast we stopped five hours in daylight opposite Tampico, and as long opposite Tuspan. This made the trip five days, which might else have been accomplished in sixty hours. The Mexican government pay the Messrs. Alexandre $1,700 subsidy for each trip from New Orleans to Vera Cruz per steamer, and in the contract was included the touching at these two ports. It is to be hoped that the contract will be so changed as to give travelers who wish to visit Mexico the advantage of a quick route. It would increase the number of visitors four-fold in twelve months. I know of no direction in which citizens of St. Louis, New York, Chicago, Baltimore and New Orleans can for a small sum see so much that is of the highest interest, both historically and geographically. The city of Mexico is a miniature Cadiz. The Andalusian style of its architecture, and the rich deposits of literary and art wealth made by the church in the zenith of its power, are still here, and are but little affected by the long years of revolution which have swept this bountiful, beautiful land. The Mexicans can play at war and cards a long time without making much havoc. They do not, like Americans, put all up at once: pronunciamientos and counter revolutions are frequently confined to a very small part of the whole territory. The damage may be confined by a range of hills. The recent news, for instance, of the political aspect of parties in some of the States on the Pacific slope has not a feather's weight, and indicates nothing more than the dying note of the waves of war that have rolled on and over Mexico for the past fifty years. Men accustomed to the habits of camp life, and the excitement, noise and news of battles, cannot be quickly satisfied with the tame pursuits and atmosphere of peace. The trumpet blast, now and then, of some impatient guerrilla chieftain will startle the mountain solitudes, and send a tingle through the blood of his old followers. But Mr. Lerdo is both moderate and firm, and I may be relied on to give permanent prosperity and security to Mexico.

So soon as travel fairly pours its tribute into the hitherto inaccessible heights and plateaus of the Cordilleras, and the quick instinct of trade and commerce give to the people a taste of the wealth they command in the perennial yield of their tropical suns and fertile soil, a new impulse will possess them; they will find in the toil of peaceful agriculture, and in the skill of artisan handicraft a far healthier and more grateful excitement than victory or contest ever yielded. Ten years of peace will insure thirty years. The State is now approaching the critical event of an election for president of the republic. I have no doubt it will pass the ordeal safely and fairly. Providence has in reserve for these people a great history, and some great spirits, it will be seen, have been evoked by the success and justice of the past few years. An open Bible is in itself one of the mightiest of forces, conserving and enlightening the common people, bringing them quickly into family order, and planting in the heart of the citizen the law by which conscience will hold him more firmly to his duty and his government than if surrounded by a hundred bayonets. This Bible is now in the hands of thousands of Mexican families who will never again be without this candle of the Lord in their homes.

At Tampico and Tuspan we took in two hundred barrels of honey, several tons of sarsaparilla, bales of caoutchouc, and sacks of coffee, a lot of fine-grained cedar, rich as mahogany, and a dozen sacks of chewing gum, of light salmon color, for children's use. It issues from a hard, close-grained wood of deep-red color. It is much like gum elastic after being chewed a little, stretches and pulls just about right for the boys and girls who can't chew tobacco. It is another want-creating commodity. I secured a lump for our folks. I learned from the consul of Tuspan that quite a number of Americans had settled in the surrounding region directly after the war, but they have generally gone back. They could not buy land—the natives being unwilling to see so enterprising a style of farmer among them as Jonathan has proved himself in Texas, Sonora and California. Besides, they generally went into the sugar culture, which does finely; but their capital was inadequate, and they failed for want of the kind of machinery necessary to make it successful. Game is very abundant; we had specimens of the wild turkey and wild duck brought on board, and one man had a very softly-dressed and beautifully-spotted tiger skin. The vanilla, the cocoanut, the pine-apple, the banana, the plantain, the orange and lime all add their rich juices and flavors to the wealth of the agricultural products of this luxurious tropical coast. Then in the streams and lagoons by the sea fish and oysters abound. What could be more tempting to one who only lives to live? How fortunate it is that the uneasy Anglo-American imagines that there is no place like North river and Chicago, and that Dakota especially, with the thermometer ranging from 40° below zero to 105° above, with four-fold musquito bars, and without sign of tree or forest or herds, is the very route for a railway, and the very spot to which emigrants from Georgia and Alabama should by all means go who are in search of an earthly paradise!

We shall, I hope, be in the city of Mexico by to-morrow evening. At present there is no abatement of the norther. Truly yours,

J. C. KEENER.

City of Mexico.

THE APPROACH TO MEXICO.—OUR CHURCH.—PREACHERS.—AND SCHOOLS.

CITY OF MEXICO, Feb. 22, 1876.

MR. EDITOR: For the first time I entered the city of Mexico on the train by daylight. A traveler looks in vain for the "lakes" which he expects to see on each side of the road as he nears the city. They are here in very wet weather, but now are marshy flats, with occasional lagoon-like stretches of water—shallow, brackish ponds. The time of leaving Vera Cruz by rail is half-past eleven at night. Before the morning breaks all the beautiful scenery about Cordova has been passed; but on going from Mexico to Vera Cruz this part of the route is passed in the daytime—a better arrangement than formerly. Before one never saw the last eighty miles of the great plain of Mexico excepting by the moonlight, which so confuses the landscape that one imagines rather than sees what he is passing. The snowy tops of Popocatepetl and Iztaccihuatl were bathed in sunlight, and as if they held audience with the fleecy-tinted clouds just below them. The train whilled on and on into the circle of great hills and mountains that stand round about this city of an hundred domes and ten thousand saddest memories. All about the outskirts are small squares of adobe walls, with something like a house inside—dreary, cemetery-looking hovels of the poor people, the very poor, unrelieved by plants or grass, or comforts of any kind.

The cultivation for miles just before reaching the city consists of the maguey, the graceful fountain of intoxicating aguapie; and on the platforms of the depots hundreds of huge skin-bottles filled with this native drink lie together like hogs, with their heads off, set on end. One entire train is appropriated to this freight, as the milk trains of the London railways. If a curse, it is a fearful one in its flow, for one-half the plain is covered with rows of these strong, radiating leaves. The plants grow to a great size, covering, I suppose, ten feet square. When it gets ready to throw up its seed-stalk, which springs up quickly some twenty feet, a large amount of sap collects. It is at this crisis in its life that the central leaf is cut out, and a hollow made in the plant to catch the exuding fluid. One plant will bleed six or seven quarts a day for several months, and then dies. Nothing more is required than to put the fluid in a bottle with a little of the old juice, and presently the fermentation perfects it for use. It keeps out whisky; and that is the best thing that can be said for it.

Immediately on my arrival I went round to our chapel, which the Spanish preachers have named "Templo Evangelico." It is but a few minutes' walk from the Iturbide Hotel—the St. Charles of Mexico. The house was beautifully lighted with gas chandelier, and looked all that I could have desired it to be for our present missionary purposes. The melodeon was on the right of the pulpit, and an excellent performer and choir rendered the hymns in a style that would have been very acceptable to Carondelet street. Two Spanish preachers, Sosthenes Juarez and Jose Elias Mota, occupied the pulpit, very neatly dressed and unaffectedly proper in their bearing. I listened to a sermon from the elder one—Pro. Juarez. He has been refined and softened in all his nature since I last saw him—is it not of the Holy Spirit? So, too, Mota impresses me most favorably as a gentle and pure man. They have been praying most earnestly for a revival—an outpouring of the Spirit of faith and of power. Will not the church at home, as it reads this sentence, put up one silent prayer in holy accord with this desire? We have all but a revival! What a "but" is that! The congregation was very much larger than I had ever seen—the house about one-half full; but it has fallen off, I understand, from what it was when Bro. Daves left. His not returning seems to be very generally, I may say universally, regretted by these people. He was just getting hold of the language and the hearts of the Mexicans. The young men were clustering around him, and after many heart-straining months of preparation he had come to the time of harvest, when he felt it his duty to leave. To use his own language, we must "look upon it as another leaf of God's providence in the Mexican work"—and it may be in our whole mission work. May God order it all for good! It is indeed his own work—calling these poor Mexicans through much blood, and a long, rayless night into the full possession of his holy law, and to the liberty of his children, working upon them from within, and rallying us to them from without. This gives me more comfort than all besides: the reflection that the Holy Spirit has taken the eternal fortunes of this people into his own hands. We follow. Mota told me to-day that our church numbers now seventy-five.

On yesterday morning I was round to see the boys' and girls' schools. Our girls' school is a very hopeful one. The dress and faces of the larger girls indicate intelligence, and that they are of the middle class. Some fifty attend. The boys' school is not so large; boys very poor, though a few of them quite promising. There is also a night school, which as yet I have not seen.

Now, as I was once an editor, I know that this is a good place to stop, and so bid you farewell for the present. Yours truly,

J. C. KEENER.

Passing Events.

—The Carlist civil war in Spain has at last come to an end. Don Carlos, however, declares that he retires from the conflict for the present for the sake of the country suffering distracted and desolated by it, and reserves to himself the right to renew the strife at any future day. The defeat of Carlism may be regarded as a reverse to Vaticanism in Spain. It will also be unfortunate for the patriots of Cuba. The Spanish government can now employ its entire resources, if need be, in subduing the rebels in the ever-faithful isle.

—The most exciting topic of the hour is the exposure and disgrace of Secretary Belknap. The President's private secretary and household pet, Babcock, by the help of Pierrepont and presidential influence, barely escaped conviction, and his acquittal by a jury leaves him suspected and condemned by public opinion. Now the case of the Secretary of War opens the most humiliating and disgraceful of all. And Gen. Schenck, minister to England, a disgraced criminal, is on his way home, and saved from arrest thereby the President's considerateness in not accepting his resignation until he was safe on the high seas. It now looks as though the entire administration would be involved, and that Grantism and Radicalism would go down under an infamy and corruption which have tainted the whole political body.

—The jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi are progressing hopefully. The channel has been deepened from seven feet to a present depth of say fifteen feet. The first vessel, drawing fourteen feet, passed through the jetties to sea on the fifth instant. The channel is washing out rapidly, and the success of Capt. Eads' enterprise is regarded as assured. Now let the railroad to Texas be completed, and New Orleans will be herself again, and more prosperous than in her palmiest days. In addition to these improvements, the Mississippi levees must be and will be made secure after awhile, and then but one other thing is needed—a good Conservative State and national government.

Lent has begun, and in certain circles there will be some abatement of fashionable dissipation. People who danced and frolicked up to daylight of Ash Wednesday seized their prayer-books on the first morning of Lent, and began most vigorously to cleanse themselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit. For forty days and nights there will be temperance, prayer and godly living, and we hope for even a longer time. Lent is very well and profitable, provided it is not looked upon as a penance and compensation for sinful indulgences before and after. May the Holy Spirit fall upon all the people, so that once for all and ever they shall put on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provisions for the flesh, to fulfill the lusts thereof.

The revival meetings in St. John, N. B., in connection with the labors of the Rev. A. B. Earle, are continued with increasing power and very encouraging results.

One hundred and ten missionaries in China have approved of the call for a conference of all the missionaries in China to be held on May next, at Shanghai, similar to the one lately held in India. They will probably discuss the propriety of a translation of the New Testament in literary style, for the use of Protestant missions alike; and endeavor to devise some method of reaching unanimity in the use of Chinese term for "God" and "Spirit," over which there has been long and often humiliating contention among the corps of missionaries. The topics which are actually placed on the schedule for discussion are: A sketch of Protestant missions in China; Confucianism, Buddhism and Taoism in relation to Christianity; colportage, preaching to the heathen, medical missions, and women's work; the relation of Protestant missions to education, schools, Christian literature and secular literature; church membership, and the assistance which may be rendered to missions by foreign residents. The native church, the training of native agents and pastors, the stimulation of the native church to more aggressive Christian work and family religion, will next be discussed; while ancestral worship, the duties of missionaries as to the vindication of the treaty rights of native Christians, the principles of translation into Chinese, the independence of the native church, and the necessity of greater effort on the part of the different societies, will also be fully ventilated.—Northern Christian Advocate.

NORTH CAROLINA METHODIST CENTENNIAL.—Rev. L. S. Burkhead, writing to the Raleigh Christian Advocate, says:

We expect a grand gathering at our Centennial celebration in Raleigh. The exercises will begin on Tuesday, March 21, at ten o'clock A. M., in Metropolitan Hall, and will be continued until Sunday night, March 26, 1876. Three of our honored Bishops will be present. Also Dr. Wadsworth, of Mobile, Ala., and Rev. Dr. Edwards, of Richmond, Va., former pastors of Edenton Street church, are expected to be with us, with many other distinguished ministers and laymen whose names are not in our programme. We will try to do all in our power to make the occasion a great blessing to the Church and State. That we may not be disappointed, we beg you to unite with humble, devout prayer to almighty God for his benediction upon us.

EXTRAORDINARY REVIVAL.—Rev. William H. Wilson, pastor of our church in Moorefield, West Virginia, says the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, sends us a postal card with the following account of a most extraordinary work of grace in that place:

MOOREFIELD, WEST VIRGINIA, February 14, 1876.

REV. JOHN POISAL, D. D.: We are in the midst of a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the charge. Last Sunday was the most glorious day in the history of this station. Fifty-nine happy new converts were received into church fellowship, after which, morning and night, penitents crowded to the altar. So far, between seventy and eighty have professed faith. Work going on gloriously. Penitents at the altar day and night—twenty-three last night. Pray that it may roll like a tide of glory all over this valley.

Yours fraternally,
WM. H. WILSON, Pastor.

The Rev. William R. Nicholson, D. D., was on February 24 consecrated Bishop of the Reformed Episcopal Church, at Philadelphia, in the presence of a large congregation. The sermon was preached by Bishop Charles Edward Cheney, of Chicago. The consecration services were performed by Bishop Cummins. The ceremonies were of a simple character. While the candidate knelt in front of the chancel, the laying on of hands by the bishops and other presbyters took place, and during this the charge a copy of the Scriptures was handed to the new Bishop. After the prayer for the church militant, by the Rev. Joseph W. Wilson, of Peoria, the holy communion was administered. Among those present were Bishop Simpson, of the M. E. Church; the Revs. Mason Gallagher, W. B. Feltwell, Mr. Postlethwaite, of Baltimore; Mr. Tucker, Mr. Babcock, of New York, and Dr. Sabine, of New York.

The Baltimore Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South met in the Braddock Street church, Winchester, Va., at nine o'clock on Wednesday morning, March 1.

Religious services were conducted by Bishop Marvin, after which the roll was called, when most of the members answered to their names.

Rev. John S. Martin, D. D., was re-elected secretary, with Rev. J. J. Armstrong, Rev. Dr. Coe and Rev. G. T. Tyler as assistants.

Rev. C. H. Fowler, D. D., president of the Northwestern University, recently spent a week in New Orleans, and preached and lectured in Ames chapel to large and appreciative audiences. The doctor appears in excellent health, and expressed himself as delighted with our sunny climate.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE MINUTES.—Rev. R. B. Crawford, secretary, informs us that the minutes have been published and mailed. By this time they are probably in the hands of the preachers.

One hundred and seventy were added to the Central Presbyterian church, Brooklyn, N. Y. (Rev. Dr. Talmage's,) one Sunday recently. Over one thousand have been added to the church since the new tabernacle was opened.

Mr. Moody In New York.

The meetings have continued, says the Independent of March 2, with unabated interest during the past week. The inquiry meetings have been largely attended. The progress of the evangelists' labors, as shown in these meetings, is deemed encouraging in a very large degree, and Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey have frequently made references to it. Others who have been personally acquainted with all that has been done at the Hippodrome express the most hearty encouragement from what they have seen.

The Friday prayer meeting was, as usual, occupied with the subject of intemperance. Ten men were present who had been converted from habits of intemperance while the evangelists were in Philadelphia. The hour was given up to them, and four of the number stood in Mr. Moody's place, and told the story of their fall and subsequent conversion. They represented different grades of society, and there was considerable variety in their experiences. The effect of their simple and sometimes homely language was powerfully shown upon all present. Tears were in the eyes of men and women everywhere. Ministers, members of the choir, policemen and reporters all yielded to the influences.

The first prayer was offered by the Rev. A. D. Vail, and after a hymn had been sung Mr. Moody said: "We have with us to-day several friends from Philadelphia, who will tell us what their experience has been. They are not accustomed to speaking to an audience like this; but I hope you will pray for them as they speak, and make them feel that they are among friends." He then read from John i, 11 and 12: "He came unto his own, and his own received him not; but as many as received him, to them gave he power." "That," said Mr. Moody, "explains every darkened soul in New York. There is no one so vile that he cannot save him."

Mr. Jamieson, a night laborer in the gas works in Philadelphia, was introduced. He said he was not accustomed to speaking before such an audience, but added: "When you have the religion of Jesus Christ you are not afraid to do anything for his cause." He said he was formerly accustomed to make $3 a day, and go home and tell his wife he made only $1.25. The difference he spent for liquor. He had joined temperance societies, but they did not help him for any length of time. One evening he was out with his friends, and they were drinking, when one of them suggested that they go to the revival meetings, as he had heard that Mr. Sankey was a "red-hot singer." The sermon came home to him, Jamieson, and he prayed. "The prayer," he said, "was the hardest work I ever did in my life. It made me sweat more than working around the hot fires of the gas works. We now have prayer meetings at the works. There are one hundred Christians there, and a gospel mill near by is for sale."

Others were also introduced, and at the close Mr. Moody prayed that these men might be blessed, and have strength to keep always near to Christ.

Sunday morning Mr. Moody preached from the words: "Occupy till I come." He dwelt with great power on the need that every Christian should do what he can. Every one has his peculiar gifts, and what the church most needs is that no one should hide his talent in the earth. In the evening Mr. Moody preached from "What think ye of Christ?" The daily meeting was more largely attended than ever.

Rev. M. M. Parkhurst, in one of his addresses at the missionary anniversary in Indianapolis, held recently, dropped a very significant remark. Alluding to his late round-the-world trip: "In all my travels," he said, "I never saw a new heathen temple. All the pagan worship I witnessed was in an old, dilapidated temple." "Now that which decayeth and waxeth old," saith the inspired writer of Hebrew, "is ready to vanish away." How different is the aspect of Christianity to-day!

Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall, of Mississippi, says the Richmond Christian Advocate of March 2, is on a brief visit to our city. We were glad to grasp his friendly hand. He preached an eloquent and impressive sermon at Broad Street church last Sunday. The doctor is looking well, and is full of zeal and Christian love. May his days be long, happy and useful.

An old Scotch lady gave a pointed reply to a minister who knew he had offended her, and expressed surprise that she should come so regularly to hear him preach. Said she: "My quarrel's wi' you, man; it's no wi' the gospel."
